earth; and Phocas does not appear less hateful in the exercise than in the acquisition of power. The pencil of an impartial historian has delineated the portrait of a monster,<sup>c</sup> His character, his diminutive and deformed person, the closeness of his shaggy eye-brows, his red hair, his beardless chin, and his cheek disfigured and discoloured by a formidable scar. Ignorant of letters, of laws, and even of arms, he indulged in the supreme rank a more ample privilege of lust and drunkenness, and his brutal pleasures were either injurious to his subjects or disgraceful to himself. Without assuming the office of a prince, he renounced the profession of a soldier, and the reign of Phocas afflicted Europe with ignominious peace, and Asia with desolating war. His savage temper was inflamed by passion, hardened by fear, exasperated by resistance or reproach. The flight of Theodosius to the Persian court had been intercepted by a rapid pursuit, or a deceitful message: he was beheaded at Nice, and the last hours of the young prince were soothed by the comforts of religion and the consciousness of innocence. Yet his phantom disturbed the repose of the usurper: a whisper was circulated through the east, that the son of Maurice was still alive: the people expected their avenger, and the widow and daughters of the late emperor would have adopted as their son and brother the vilest of mankind. In the massacre of the imperial family,<sup>d</sup> the merey, or rather the discretion, of Phocas had spared these unhappy females, and they were decently confined to a private house. But the spirit of the empress Constantina, still mindful of her father, her husband, and her sons, aspired to freedom and revenge. At the dead of night, she escaped to the sanctuary of St Sophia, but her tears, and the gold of her associate Germanus, were insufficient to provoke an insurrection. Her life was forfeited to revenge, and even to justice, but the patriarch obtained and pledged an oath for her safety: a monastery was allotted for her prison, and the widow of Maurice accepted and abused the lenity of his assassin. The discovery or the suspicion of a second conspiracy, dissolved the engagements and rekindled the fury of Phocas. A matron who commanded the respect and pity of mankind, the daughter, wife, and mother of emperors, was tortured like the vilest malefactor, to force a confession of her designs and associates, and the empress Constantina, with her three innocent daughters, was beheaded at Chalcædon, on the same ground which had been stained with the blood of her husband and five

<sup>a</sup> From this generous attempt Corneille has deduced the intricate web of his tragedy of Heracles, which requires more than one representation to be clearly understood. (Corneille de Voltaire tom v p 300) and which after an interval of some years is said to have puzzled the author himself. (Anecdotes Dramatiques, tom i p 422)

<sup>b</sup> The revolt of Phocas and death of Maurice are told by Theophylact Simocatta (l viii c 7—12) the Pœchal Chronicle (p 379 380) Theophanes (Chronographi p 228—244) Zonaras, (tom ii l xiv p 7—80) and Cedrenus, (p 329—404)

<sup>c</sup> Gregor l vi epist. 38. indict. vi. Benignitatem vestram pietatis ad imperiale frivolum pervenisse gaudemus. I extenuat eam et exultat terra et de vestris benignis actibus universa reipublica populus aunc unque vehementer afflictus hilaratus &c. This base flattery, the style of protestant invective is justly censured by the philosopher Bayle (Dictionnaire Critique Gregoire l. xi. t. H. l. m. ii. p 597, 598.) Cardinal Baronius justifies the pope at the expense of the fallen emperor.

<sup>d</sup> The images of Phocas were destroyed: but even the malice of his enemies would suffer one copy of such a portrait or caricature (Cedrenus p 404) to escape the flames.

<sup>e</sup> The family of Maurice is represented by Ducange (Familie Byzantine p 106—108,) his eldest son Theodosius had been crowned emperor when he was no more than four years and a half old, and he is always joined with his father in the salutations of Gregory. With the christian daughters, Anastasia and Theoctiste, I am surprised to find the pagan name of Cleopatra.

sons After such an example, it would be superfluous to enumerate the names and sufferings of meaner victims Their condemnation was seldom preceded by the forms of trial, and their punishment was imbittered by the refinements of cruelty their eyes were pierced, their tongues were torn from the root, their hands and feet were amputated, some expired under the lash, others in the flames, others again were transfixed with arrows, and a simple speedy death was mercy which they could rarely obtain The hippodrome, the sacred asylum of the pleasures and the liberty of the Romans, was polluted with heads and limbs, and mangled bodies, and the companions of Phocas were the most sensible, that neither his favour, nor their services, could protect them from a tyrant, the worthy rival of the Caligulas and Domitians of the first age of the empire<sup>e</sup>

His fall and death, A D 610 October 4

A daughter of Phocas, his only child, was given in marriage to the patrician Crispus,<sup>f</sup> and the royal images of the bride and bridegroom were indiscreetly placed in the circus, by the side of the emperor The father must desire that his posterity should inherit the fruit of his crimes, but the monarch was offended by this premature and popular association the tribunes of the green faction, who accused the officious error of their sculptors, were condemned to instant death, their lives were granted to the prayers of the people, but Crispus might reasonably doubt, whether a jealous usurper could forget and pardon his involuntary competition The green faction was alienated by the ingratitude of Phocas and the loss of their privileges, every province of the empire was ripe for rebellion, and Heraclius, exarch of Africa, persisted above two years in refusing all tribute and obedience to the centurion who disgraced the throne of Constantinople By the secret emissaries of Crispus and the senate, the independent exarch was solicited to save and to govern his country but his ambition was chilled by age, and he resigned the dangerous enterprise to his son Heraclius, and to Nicetas, the son of Gregory, his friend and lieutenant The powers of Africa were armed by the two adventurous youths, they agreed that the one should navigate the fleet from Carthage to Constantinople, that the other should lead an army through Egypt and Asia, and that the imperial purple should be the reward of diligence and success A faint rumour of their undertaking was conveyed to the ears of Phocas, and the wife and mother of the younger Heraclius were secured as the hostages of his faith but the treacherous art of Crispus extenuated the distant peril, the means of defence were neglected or delayed, and the tyrant supinely slept till the African navy cast anchor in the Hellespont Their standard was joined at Abydus by the fugitives and exiles who thirsted for revenge, the ships of Heraclius, whose lofty masts were adorned with the holy symbols of religion,<sup>g</sup> steered their triumphant course through the Propontis, and Phocas beheld from the windows of the palace his approaching and inevitable fate The green faction was tempted, by gifts and promises, to oppose a feeble and fruitless resistance to the landing of the Africans, but the people, and even the guards, were determined by the well-timed defection of Crispus, and the tyrant was seized by a private enemy, who boldly invaded the solitude of the palace Stripped of the diadem and purple, clothed in a vile habit, and loaded with chains, he was transported in a small boat to the imperial galley of Heraclius, who reproached him with the crimes of his abominable reign "Wilt thou govern better?" were the last words of the despair of Phocas After suffering each variety of insult and torture, his head was severed from his body, the mangled trunk was cast into the flames, and the same treatment was inflicted on the statues of the vain usurper, and the seditious banner of the green faction The voice of the clergy, the senate, and the people, invited Heraclius to ascend the throne which he had purified from guilt and ignominy, after some graceful hesitation, he yielded to their entreaties His coronation was accompanied by that of his wife Eudoxia, and their posterity, till the fourth generation, continued to reign

Reign of Heraclius, A D 610 Oct 5— A D 642 Feb 11

over the empire of the east The voyage of Heraclius had been easy and prosperous, the tedious march of Nicetas was not accomplished before the decision of the contest but he submitted without a murmur to the fortune of his friend, and his laudable intentions were rewarded with an equestrian statue, and a daughter of the emperor It was more difficult to trust the fidelity of Crispus, whose recent services were recompensed by the command of the Cappadoecian army His arrogance soon provoked, and seemed to excuse, the ingratitude of his new sovereign In the presence of the senate, the son-in-law of Phocas was condemned to embrace the monastic life, and the sentence was justified by the weighty observation of Heraclius, that the man who had betrayed his father, could never be faithful to his friend<sup>h</sup>

Even after his death the republic was afflicted by the crimes of Phocas, which armed with a pious cause the most formidable of her enemies According to the friendly and equal forms of the Byzantine and Persian courts, he announced his exaltation to the

Chosroes invades the Roman empire A D 603 &c

<sup>e</sup> Some of the cruelties of Phocas are marked by Theophylact, l viii c 13 11 15 George of Pisidia the poet of Heraclius styles him (Bell Avaricum, p 46 Rome 1777) τὸν ὑπερβόητον καὶ ἀνὴρα βλάστητον ἀνθρώπου The latter epithet is ju 1—but the corrupter of life was easily vanquished

<sup>f</sup> In the writers and in the copies of those writers, there is such hesitation between the names of Priscus and Crispus (Ducauge Fam Byzant p 111) that I have been tempted to identify the son-in-law of Phocas with the hero five times victorious over the Avars

<sup>g</sup> According to Theophanes ἐκ τῶν αἰσθητῶν εἰκότων Heraclius adds an αὐτοκρατορικὸν ἔμβλημα which Heraclius bore as a banner in the first Persian expedition See George of Pisidia Avarum l 140 The manufacture seems to have flourished but for in the Roman editor, (p. 26) is at a loss to determine whether this picture was an original or a copy

<sup>h</sup> See the tyranny of Phocas and the elevation of Heraclius in Chron Paschal p 381—383 Theophylact p 242—243 Nicephorus l p 3—7 Cedrenus, p 404—407 Zaccaria l. iii u l xlv p. 82—83

throne, and his ambassador Litus, who had presented him with the heads of Maurice and his sons, was the best qualified to describe the circumstances of the tragic scene.<sup>1</sup> However it might be varnished by fiction or sophistry, Chosroes turned with horror from the assassin, imprisoned the pretended envoy, disclaimed the usurper, and declared himself the avenger of his father and benefactor. The sentiments of grief and resentment which humanity would feel, and honour would dictate, promoted, on this occasion, the interest of the Persian king, and his interest was powerfully magnified by the national and religious prejudices of the Magi and satraps. In a strain of artful adulation, which assumed the language of freedom, they presumed to censure the excess of his gratitude and friendship for the Greeks, a nation with whom it was dangerous to conclude either peace or alliance, whose superstition was devoid of truth and justice, and who must be incapable of any virtue, since they could perpetrate the most atrocious of crimes, the impious murder of their sovereign.<sup>2</sup> For the crime of an ambitious centurion, the nation which he oppressed was elated with the calamities of war and the same calamities, at the end of twenty years, were retaliated and redoubled on the heads of the Persians.<sup>3</sup> The general who had restored Chosroes to the throne still commanded in the east, and the name of Narses was the formidable sound with which the Assyrian mothers were accustomed to terrify their infants. It is not improbable, that a native subject of Persia should encourage his master and his friend to deliver and possess the provinces of Asia. It is still more probable, that Chosroes should animate his troops by the assurance that the sword which they dreaded the most would remain in its scabbard, or be drawn in their favour. The hero could not depend on the faith of a tyrant, and the tyrant was conscious how little he deserved the obedience of a hero. Narses was removed from his military command, he reared an independent standard at Hierapolis in Syria, he was betrayed by fallacious promises, and burnt alive in the marketplace of Constantinople. Deprived of the only chief whom they could fear or esteem, the bands which he had led to victory were twice broken by the cavalry, trampled by the elephants, and pierced by the arrows of the barbarians, and a great number of the captives were beheaded on the field of battle by the sentence of the victor, who might justly condemn these seditious mercenaries as the authors or accomplices of the death of Maurice. Under the reign of Phocas, the fortifications of Merdin, Dara, Amida, and Edessa, were successively besieged, reduced, and destroyed by the Persian monarch. He passed the <sup>His conquest of Syria, A D 611</sup> Euphrates, occupied the Syrian cities, Hierapolis, Chalebis, and Berrhæa or Aleppo, and soon encompassed the walls of Antioch with his irresistible arms. The rapid tide of success discloses the decay of the empire, the incapacity of Phocas, and the disaffection of his subjects, and Chosroes provided a decent apology for their submission or revolt, by an impostor who attended his camp as the son of Maurice<sup>4</sup> and the lawful heir of the monarchy.

The first intelligence from the east which Heraclius received,<sup>5</sup> was that of the loss of Antioch, but the aged metropolis, so often overturned by earthquakes, and pillaged by the enemy, could supply but a small and languid stream of treasure and blood. The Persians were equally successful, and more fortunate in the sack of Cæsarea, the capital of Cappadocia, and as they advanced beyond the ramparts of the frontiers, the boundary of ancient war, they found a less obstinate resistance and a more plentiful harvest. The pleasant vale of Damascus has been adorned in every age with a royal city. Her obscure felicity has hitherto escaped the historian of the Roman empire. But Chosroes reposed his troops in the paradise of Damascus before he ascended the hills of Libanus, or invaded the cities of the Phœnician coast. The <sup>of Palestine, A D 614</sup> conquest of Jerusalem,<sup>6</sup> which had been meditated by Nushirvan, was achieved by the zeal and avarice of his grandson, the ruin of the proudest monument of Christianity was vehemently urged by the intolerant spirit of the Magi, and he could enlist, for this holy warfare, an army of six and twenty thousand Jews, whose furious bigotry might compensate, in some degree, for the want of valour and discipline. After the reduction of Galilee, and the region beyond the Jordan, whose resistance appears to have delayed the fate of the capital, Jerusalem itself was taken by assault. The sepulchre of Christ, and the stately churches of Helena and Constantine, were consumed, or at least damaged, by the flames, the devout offerings of

<sup>1</sup> Theophylact, l. viii. c. 13. The life of Maurice was composed about the year 628, (l. viii. c. 13) by Theophylact Simocatta ex præfate, a native of Egypt. Photius, who gives an ample extract of the work (cod. lxx p. 81—100) gently reproves the affectation and allusory of the style. His preface is a dialogue between Philosophy and History, they seat themselves under a plane tree, and the latter touches her lyre.

<sup>2</sup> Christianus sine prelium esse, nec fidem nec sedem. quod si illa illis fides inisset, regem suum non occiderunt. Eutych. Annal. tom. ii. p. 211. vers. Pocock.

<sup>3</sup> We must now, for some ages, take our leave of contemporary historians and descend, if it be a descent from the affectation of rhetoric to the rude simplicity of chronicles and abridgements. Those of Theophanes (Chronograph. p. 241—279) and Nicephorus (p. 3—16) supply a regular but imperfect series of the Persian war, and for any additional facts I quote my special authorities. Theophanes a courtier who became a monk was born A D 748. Nicephorus patriarch of Constantinople who died A D 829 was somewhat younger. They both suffered in the cause of images. Hankins, de Scriptoribus Byzantinis p. 290—297.

<sup>4</sup> The Persian historians have been themselves deceived. But Theophanes (p. 244) accuses Chosroes of the fraud and falsehood, and Eutychius believes (Annal. tom. ii. p. 211) that the son of Maurice, who was saved from the assassins, lived and died a monk on mount Sinai.

<sup>5</sup> Eutychius dates all the losses of the empire under the reign of Phocas an error which saves the honour of Heraclius whom he brings not from Carthage, but Salonica with a fleet laden with vegetables for the relief of Constantinople (Annal. tom. ii. p. 223, 224). The other historians of the east, Barhebræus (apud Asseman Bibliothecæ Oriental. tom. iii. p. 412, 413) Limaen, (Hist. Saracen. p. 13—16) Abulpharagius, (Dynam. p. 28, 99) are more sincere and accurate. The years of the Persian war are disposed in the chronology of Pagi.

<sup>6</sup> On the conquest of Jerusalem, an event so interesting in the church see the Annals of Eutychius, (tom. ii. p. 212—223) and the lamentations of the monk Antiochus (apud Brounani, Annal. Eccles. A D 614. No 16—26) whose one hundred and twenty nine homilies are still extant, if what no one reads may be said to be extant.

three hundred years were rifled in one sacrilegious day, the patriarch Zachariah, and the true cross, were transported into Persia, and the massacre of ninety thousand christians is imputed to the Jews and Arabs, who swelled the disorder of the Persian march. The fugitives of Palestine were entertained at Alexandria by the charity of John the archbishop, who is distinguished among a crowd of saints by the epithet of almsgiver <sup>p</sup> and the revenues of the church, with a treasure of three hundred thousand pounds, were restored to the true proprietors, the poor of every country and every denomination. But Egypt itself, the only province which had been exempt, since the time of Diocletian, from

of Egypt,
A D 616

foreign and domestic war, was again subdued by the successors of Cyrus. Pelusium, the key of that impervious country, was surprised by the cavalry of the Persians they passed, with impunity, the innumerable channels of the Delta, and explored the long valley of the Nile, from the pyramids of Memphis to the confines of Æthiopia. Alexandria might have been relieved by a naval force, but the archbishop and the præfect embarked for Cyprus, and Chosroes entered the second city of the empire, which still preserved a wealthy remnant of industry and commerce. His western trophy was erected, not on the walls of Carthage,<sup>1</sup> but in the neighbourhood of Tripoli the Greek colonies of Cyrene were finally extirpated, and the conqueror, treading in the footsteps of Alexander, returned in triumph through the sands of the

of Asia Minor,
A D 616, &c

Labyan desert. In the first campaign, another army advanced from the Euphrates to the Thracian Bosphorus, Chalcedon surrendered after a long siege, and a Persian camp was maintained above ten years in the presence of Constantinople. The sea-coast of Pontus, the city of Ancyra, the isle of Rhodes, are enumerated among the last conquests of the great king, and if Chosroes had possessed any maritime power, his boundless ambition would have spread slavery and desolation over the provinces of Europe.

His reign and magnificence

From the long-disputed banks of the Tigris and Euphrates, the reign of the grandson of Nushirvan was suddenly extended to the Hellespont and the Nile, the ancient limits of the Persian monarchy. But the provinces, which had been fashioned by the habits of six hundred years to the virtues and vices of the Roman government, supported with reluctance the yoke of the barbarians. The idea of a republic was kept alive by the institutions, or at least by the writings, of the Greeks and Romans, and the subjects of Hera-

clius had been educated to pronounce the words of liberty and law. But it has always been the pride and policy of oriental princes, to display the titles and attributes of their omnipotence, to upbraid a nation of slaves with their true name and abject condition, and to enforce, by cruel and insolent threats, the rigour of their absolute commands. The christians of the east were scandalized by the worship of fire, and the impious doctrine of the two principles. The Magi were not less intolerant than the bishops, and the martyrdom of some native Persians, who had deserted the religion of Zoroaster,<sup>2</sup> was conceived to be the prelude of a fierce and general persecution. By the oppressive laws of Justinian, the adversaries of the church were made the enemies of the state, the alliance of the Jews, Nestorians, and Jacobites, had contributed to the success of Chosroes, and his partial favour to the sectaries provoked the hatred and fears of the catholic clergy. Conscious of their fear and hatred, the Persian conqueror governed his new subjects with an iron sceptre and as if he suspected the stability of his dominion, he exhausted their wealth by exorbitant tributes and licentious rapine, despoiled or demolished the temples of the east, and transported to his hereditary realms the gold, the silver, the precious marbles, the arts, and the artists, of the Asiatic cities. In the obscure picture of the calamities of the empire,<sup>3</sup> it is not easy to discern the figure of Chosroes himself, to separate his actions from those of his lieutenants, or to ascertain his personal merit in the general blaze of glory and magnificence. He enjoyed with ostentation the fruits of victory, and frequently retired from the hardships of war to the luxury of the palace. But in the space of twenty-four years, he was deterred by superstition or resentment from approaching the gates of Ctesiphon and his favourite residence of Artemita, or Dastagerd, was situate beyond the Tigris, about sixty miles to the north of the capital.<sup>4</sup> The adjacent pastures were covered with flocks and herds the paradise or park was replenished with pheasants, peacocks, ostriches, roebucks, and wild boars, and the noble game of lions and tigers was sometimes turned loose for the bolder pleasures of the chase. Nine hundred and sixty elephants were maintained for the use or splendour of the great king his tents and baggage were carried into the field by twelve thousand great camels and eight thousand of a smaller size,<sup>5</sup> and the royal stables were filled with six thousand mules and horses, among whom the names of Shebdiz and Barid are renowned for their speed or beauty. Six thousand

<sup>p</sup> The life of this worthy saint is composed by Leontius a contemporary bishop and I find in Baronius, (Annal Eccles. A D 610 No 10, &c.) and Fleury, (tom viii p 230-242) sufficient extracts of this edifying work.

<sup>q</sup> The error of Baronius and many others who have carried the arms of Chosroes to Carthage instead of Chalcedon, is founded on the near resemblance of the Greek words καρχεδον and καρχηδον; in the text of Theophrastus &c which have been sometimes confounded by translators, and sometimes by critics.

<sup>r</sup> The genuine acts of St Anastasius are published in those of the seventh general council from whence Baronius (Annal Eccles. A D 614 626 627) and Butler (Lives of the Saints, vol i p 242-249) have taken their accounts. The holy martyr deserted from the Persian in the Roman army, became a monk at Jerusalem and invited the worship of the Magi which was then established at Ctesiphon in Palestine.

<sup>2</sup> Abulpharagus, Dynast p. 99. Elmairi Hist Syracen p 14.

<sup>3</sup> D'Anville Mem de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom xxxii p 568-571.

<sup>4</sup> The difference between the two races consists in one or two humps the dromedary has only one the size of the proper camel is far &c the country he comes from Turkey or Persia the dromedary is confined to Arabia and Africa. Buffon Hist Naturelle tom xi p 211, Sc Aristot Hist Animal tom i l i c l tom ii p 19.

guards successively mounted before the palace gate, the service of the interior apartments was performed by twelve thousand slaves, and in the number of three thousand virgins, the fairest of Asia, some happy concubine might console her master for the age or the indifference of Sira. The various treasures of gold, silver, gems, silk, and aromatics, were deposited in a hundred subterraneous vaults, and the chamber Badaverd denoted the accidental gift of the winds which had wafted the spoils of Heraclius into one of the Syrian harbours of his rival. The voice of flattery, and perhaps of fiction, is not ashamed to compute the thirty thousand rich hangings that adorned the walls, the forty thousand columns of silver, or more probably of marble, and plated wood, that supported the roof, and the thousand globes of gold suspended in the dome, to imitate the motions of the planets and the constellations of the zodiac.* While the Persian monarch contemplated the wonders of his art and power, he received an epistle from an obscure citizen of Mecca, inviting him to acknowledge Mahomet as the apostle of God. He rejected the invitation, and tore the epistle. "It is thus," exclaimed the Arabian prophet, "that God will tear the kingdom, and reject the supplications, of Chosroes."† Placed on the verge of the two great empires of the east, Mahomet observed with secret joy the progress of their mutual destruction, and in the midst of the Persian triumphs, he ventured to foretell, that before many years should elapse, victory would again return to the banners of the Romans.‡

Distress of Heraclius,
A. D. 610—622

At the time when this prediction is said to have been delivered, no prophecy could be more distant from its accomplishment, since the first twelve years of Heraclius announced the approaching dissolution of the empire. If the motives of Chosroes had been pure and honourable, he must have ended the quarrel with the death of Phocas, and he would have embraced, as his best ally, the fortunate African who had so generously avenged the injuries of his benefactor Maurice. The prosecution of the war revealed the true character of the barbarian, and the suppliant embassies of Heraclius to beseech his clemency, that he would spare the innocent, accept a tribute, and give peace to the world, were rejected with contemptuous silence or insolent menace. Syria, Egypt, and the provinces of Asia, were subdued by the Persian arms, while Europe, from the confines of Istria to the long wall of Thrace, was oppressed by the Avars, unsatiated with the blood and rapine of the Italian war. They had coolly massacred their male captives in the sacred field of Pannonia, the women and children were reduced to servitude, and the noblest virgins were abandoned to the promiscuous lust of the barbarians. The amorous matron who opened the gates of Friuli, passed a short night in the arms of her royal lover, the next evening, Romilda was condemned to the embraces of twelve Avars, and the third day the Lombard princess was impaled in the sight of the camp, while the chagan observed with a cruel smile, that such a husband was the fit recompence of her lewdness and perfidy. By these implacable enemies, Heraclius, on either side, was insulted and besieged, and the Roman empire was reduced to the walls of Constantinople, with the remnant of Greece, Italy, and Africa, and some maritime cities, from Tyre to Trebizond, of the Asiatic coast. After the loss of Egypt, the capital was afflicted by famine and pestilence, and the emperor, incapable of resistance, and hopeless of relief, had resolved to transfer his person and government to the more secure residence of Carthage. His ships were already laden with the treasures of the palace, but his flight was arrested by the patriarch, who armed the powers of religion in the defence of his country, led Heraclius to the altar of St. Sophia, and extorted a solemn oath, that he would live and die with the people whom God had intrusted to his care. The chagan was encamped in the plains of Thrace, but he dissembled his perfidious designs, and solicited an interview with the emperor near the town of Heraclea. Their reconciliation was celebrated with equestrian games, the senate and people in their gayest apparel resorted to the festival of peace, and the Avars beheld, with envy and desire, the spectacle of Roman luxury. On a sudden, the hippodrome was encompassed by the Seythian cavalry, who had pressed their secret and nocturnal march. The tremendous sound of the chagan's whip gave the signal of the assault, and Heraclius, wrapping his diadem round his arm, was saved, with extreme hazard, by the fleetness of his horse. So rapid was the pursuit, that the Avars almost entered the golden gate of Constantinople with the flying crowds; but the plunder of the suburbs rewarded their treason, and they transported beyond the Danube two hundred and seventy thousand captives. On the shore of Chalcidion, the emperor held a safer conference with a more honourable foe, who, before Heraclius descended from his galley, saluted with reverence and pity the majesty of the purple. The friendly offer of Sarn, the Persian general, to conduct an embassy to the presence of the great king, was accepted with the warmest gratitude, and the prayer for par-

* Theophanes, Chronographi p. 269. D'Herbelot, Bibliothèque Orientale p. 897. The Greeks describe the decay, the Persians the splendour, of Dastagerd; but the former speak from the modest witness of the eye, the latter from the vague report of the ear.

† The historians of Mahomet, Alhufeda (in Vit. Mohammedi p. 92. 93) and Gagnier, (Vie de Mahomet tom. ii. p. 247) date this embassy in the seventh year of the Hegira, which commences A. D. 628. May 15. Their chronology is erroneous, since Chosroes died in the month of February of the same year (P. 1. Critica tom. ii. p. 779). The Count de Boulainvilliers (Vie de Mahomet p. 327. 328.) places this embassy about A. D. 615 soon after the conquest of Palestine. Yet Mahomet could scarcely have ventured so soon on so bold a step.

* See the thirteenth chapter of the Koran entitled the Greeks. Our honest and learned translator, Sale, (p. 330, 331) fairly states this conjecture guess, war, of Mahomet, but Boulainvilliers (p. 329—314) with wicked intentions labours to establish this evident prophecy of a future event, which must, in his opinion, embarrass the christian polemics.

† Paul Warnefrid, de Gestis Langobardorum, l. ii. c. 38. 42. Muratori, Annali d'Italia, tom. v. p. 305. &c.

‡ The Paschal Chronicle, which sometimes introduces fragments of history into a barren list of names and dates, gives the best account of the treason of the Avars p. 389. 390. The number of captives is added by Nicephorus.

don and peace was humbly presented by the prætorian præfect, the præfect of the city, and one of the first ecclesiastics of the patriarchal church. But the lieutenant of Chosroes had, fatally mistaken the intentions of his master. "It was not an embassy," said the tyrant of Asia, "it was the person of Heraclius, bound in chains, that he should have brought to the foot of my throne. I will never give peace to the emperor of Rome, till he has abjured his crucified God, and embraced the worship of the sun." Sain was slayed alive according to the inhuman practice of his country, and the separate and rigorous confinement of the ambassadors violated the laws of nations, and the faith of an express stipulation. Yet the experience of six years at length persuaded the Persian monarch to renounce the conquest of Constantinople, and to specify the annual tribute or ransom of the Roman empire, a thousand talents of gold, a thousand talents of silver, a thousand silk robes, a thousand horses, and a thousand virgins. Heraclius subscribed these ignominious terms, but the time and space which he obtained to collect such treasures from the poverty of the east was industriously employed in the preparations of a bold and desperate attack.

Of the characters conspicuous in history, that of Heraclius is one of the most extraordinary and inconsistent. In the first and last years of a long reign, the emperor appears to be the slave of sloth, of pleasure, or of superstition, the careless and impotent spectator of the public calamities. But the languid mists of the morning and evening are separated by the brightness of the meridian sun: the Arcadius of the palace arose the Cæsar of the camp, and the honour of Rome and Heraclius was gloriously retrieved by the exploits and trophies of six adventurous campaigns. It was the duty of the Byzantine historians to have revealed the causes of his slumber and vigilance. At this distance we can only conjecture, that he was endowed with more personal courage than political resolution, that he was detained by the charms and perhaps the arts of his niece Martina, with whom, after the death of Eudocia, he contracted an incestuous marriage,<sup>d</sup> and that he yielded to the base advice of the counsellors, who urged as a fundamental law, that the life of the emperor should never be exposed in the field.<sup>e</sup> Perhaps he was awakened by the last insolent demand of a Persian conqueror, but at the moment when Heraclius assumed the spirit of a hero.

the only hopes of the Romans were drawn from the vicissitudes of fortune, which might threaten the proud prosperity of Chosroes, and must be favourable to those who had attained the lowest period of depression. To provide for the expenses of war, was the first care of the emperor, and for the purpose of collecting the tribute, he was allowed to solicit the benevolence of the eastern provinces. But the revenue no longer flowed in the usual channels, the credit of an arbitrary prince is annihilated by his power, and the courage of Heraclius was first displayed in daring to borrow the consecrated wealth of churches under the solemn vow of restoring, with usury, whatever he had been compelled to employ in the service of religion and of the empire. The clergy themselves appear to have sympathized with the public distress, and the discreet patriarch of Alexandria, without admitting the precedent of sacrilege, assisted his sovereign by the miraculous or seasonable revelation of a secret treasure. Of the soldiers who had conspired with Phocas, only two were found to have survived the stroke of time and of the barbarians, the loss, even of these seditious veterans, was imperfectly supplied by the new levies of Heraclius, and the gold of the sanctuary united, in the same camp, the names, and arms, and languages, of the east and west. He would have been content with the neutrality of the Avars, and his friendly entreaty, that the chagan would act not as the enemy, but as the guardian, of the empire, was accompanied with a more persuasive donative of two hundred thousand pieces of gold. Two days after the festival of Easter, the emperor, exchanging his purple for the simple garb of a penitent and warrior, gave the signal of his departure. To the faith of the people Heraclius recommended his children, the civil and military powers were vested in the most deserving hands, and the discretion of the patriarch and senate was authorized to save or surrender the city, if they should be oppressed in his absence by the superior forces of the enemy.

The neighbouring heights of Chalcedon were covered with tents and arms but if the new levies of Heraclius had been rashly led to the attack, the victory of the Persians in the sight of Constantinople might have been the last day of the Roman empire As imprudent would it have been to advance into the provinces of Asia, leaving their innumerable cavalry to intercept his convoys, and

First expedition of Heraclius against the Persians
A D 622

First expedition of Heracles against the Persians
A D 622

<sup>c</sup> Some original pieces such as the speech or letter of the Roman ambassador (p. 386-388) likewise constitute the merit of the Paschal Chronicle, which was composed, perhaps at Alexandria, under the reign of Heraclius.

of Dichephorus, (p 10, 11) who brands this marriage with the names of assensu and ademptor is happy to observe that of two sons it is in the younger fruit, the elder was marked by Providence with a stiff neck, the younger with the loss of heart.

οι παλαιότεροι και οι νεώτεροι
 ο George de Rieda, (Actes: 112-12, p. 5) πολιτάρχες, οι οποίοι είναι οι συνιστάμενοι σύμβουλοι των πιο άσπαστων ιδεών. Είναι οι παλαιότεροι και οι νεώτεροι
 οι παλαιότεροι και οι νεώτεροι
 οι παλαιότεροι και οι νεώτεροι

1 ἐκ τῶν ἐν ἀκροπόλει ἐστῆς ἡσυχίας καὶ ἡγεμονίας αὐτῆς ἡσυχίας τοῦ ἀκροπόλεως ἀκροπόλεως δὲ καὶ George Pind Acroze 1 οἱ, καὶ π 4

The Orientals are not less fond of remarking this strange vicissitude, and I remember some story of Khosrow Parviz, not very unlike the ring of Polycrates of Samos.

of Marston's gravel, rather this discovery, or rather transmutation of barrels not of linney but of Loid (Amal Leetes. A D 629 No. 3 &c.) Yet the loan was arbitrary, since it was collected by soldiers, who were ordered to leave the parishioners of the town no more than one hundred pounds of gold. Nicophorus (p. 11) two hundred years afterwards speaks with all humour of this contribution, which the church of Con tantissime might still feel!

h. Thelyphyllos Smocaltia v. viii c. 12. This circumstance need not excite our surprise. The muster roll of a regiment even in time of peace is renewed in less than twenty or twenty five years.
 i. He changed his purple for black to skin and dyed them red in the blood of the Persians. (Georg. Pind. Actus in 118 121 122. See the Notes of Isgum p. 33.)

continually to hang on the lassitude and disorder of his rear. But the Greeks were still masters of the sea, a fleet of galleys, transports, and storeships, was assembled in the harbour, the barbarians consented to embark. a steady wind carried them through the Hellespont, the western and southern coast of Asia Minor lay on their left hand, the spirit of their chief was first displayed in a storm, and even the eunuchs of his train were excited to suffer and to work by the example of their master. He landed his troops on the confines of Syria and Cilicia, in the gulf of Scanderoon, where the coast suddenly turns to the south,<sup>k</sup> and his discernment was expressed in the choice of this important post.<sup>l</sup> From all sides, the scattered garrisons of the maritime cities and the mountains might repair with speed and safety to his imperial standard. The natural fortifications of Cilicia protected, and even concealed, the camp of Heraclius, which was pitched near Issus, on the same ground where Alexander had vanquished the host of Darius. The angle which the emperor occupied, was deeply indented into a vast semi-circle of the Asiatic, Armenian, and Syrian provinces, and to whatsoever point of the circumference he should direct his attack, it was easy for him to dissemble his own motions, and to prevent those of the enemy. In the camp of Issus, the Roman general reformed the sloth and disorder of the veterans, and educated the new recruits in the knowledge and practice of military virtue. Unfolding the miraculous image of Christ, he urged them to avenge the holy altars which had been profaned by the worshippers of fire, addressing them by the endearing appellations of sons and brethren, he deplored the public and private wrongs of the republic. The subjects of a monarch were persuaded that they fought in the cause of freedom, and a similar enthusiasm was communicated to the foreign mercenaries, who must have viewed with equal indifference the interest of Rome and of Persia. Heraclius himself, with the skill and patience of a centurion, inculcated the lessons of the school of tactics, and the soldiers were assiduously trained in the use of their weapons, and the exercises and evolutions of the field. The cavalry and infantry in light or heavy armour were divided into two parties, the trumpets were fixed in the centre, and their signals directed the march, the charge, the retreat, or pursuit, the direct or oblique order, the deep or extended phalanx, to represent in fictitious combat the operations of genuine war. Whatever hardship the emperor imposed on the troops, he inflicted with equal severity on himself, their labour, their diet, their sleep, were measured by the inflexible rules of discipline, and, without despising the enemy, they were taught to repose an implicit confidence in their own valour and the wisdom of their leader. Cilicia was soon encompassed with the Persian arms, but their cavalry hesitated to enter the defiles of mount Taurus, till they were circumvented by the evolutions of Heraclius, who insensibly gained their rear, whilst he appeared to present his front in order of battle. By a false motion, which seemed to threaten Armenia, he drew them, against their wishes, to a general action. They were tempted by the artful disorder of his camp, but when they advanced to combat, the ground, the sun, and the expectation of both armies, were unpropitious to the barbarians, the Romans successfully repeated their tactics in a field of battle,<sup>m</sup> and the event of the day declared to the world, that the Persians were not invincible, and that a hero was invested with the purple. Strong in victory and fame, Heraclius boldly ascended the heights of mount Taurus, directed his march through the plain of Cappadocia, and established his troops for the winter season, in safe and plentiful quarters on the banks of the river Halys.<sup>n</sup> His soul was superior to the vanity of entertaining Constantinople with an imperfect triumph, but the presence of the emperor was indispensably required to soothe the restless and rapacious spirit of the Avars.

Since the days of Scipio and Hannibal, no bolder enterprise has been attempted than that which Heraclius<sup>His second expedition, A D 623, 624, 625</sup> achieved for the deliverance of the empire.<sup>o</sup> He permitted the Persians to oppress for a while the provinces, and to insult with impunity the capital of the east, while the Roman emperor explored his perilous way through the Black sea,<sup>p</sup> and the mountains of Armenia, penetrated into the heart of Persia,<sup>q</sup> and recalled the armies of the great king to the defence of their bleeding country. With a select band of five thousand soldiers, Heraclius sailed

<sup>k</sup> George of Pisidia (Acron's ii 10 p 8.) has fixed this important point of the Syrian and Cilician gales. They are elegantly described by Xenophon who marched through them a thousand years before. A narrow pass of three stadia between steep high rocks (ακροποι νηβας) and the Mediterranean, was closed at each end by strong gates impenetrable to the land (ακροποι ουκ εν βίη) accessible by sea (Anabasis, i i p 33, 36 with Hutchinson's Geographical Dissertation p vi.) The gates were thirty five paces, or less, from Tarsus (Anabasis, i i p 33, 34) and eight or ten from Antioch (Compare Itinerar Vessel ing p 580 581. Schmitzen's Index Geographi ad calcem Vit. Salutin p 9. Voyage en Turquie et en Perse par M. Otter, tom i p 78 79.)

<sup>l</sup> Heraclius might write to a friend in the modest words of Cicero "Castra habuimus ea ipse quis contra Darium habuerat apud Issum." Alexander imperator laudat paulo melior quam tu aut ego. Ad Atticum, v 20. It is a rich and flourishing city in the time of Xenophon, was ruined by the prosperity of Alexandria or Scanderoon, on the other side of the bay.

<sup>m</sup> F. G. (Annals p 31) suspects that the Persians were deceived by the αδελφ παλαμην of Artaban, (Tactic c 48) an intricate spiral motion of the army. He observed (p 28) that the military descriptions of George of Pisidia are transcribed into the Tactics of the emperor Leo.

<sup>n</sup> George of Pisidia, an eye-witness, (Acron's ii 123, &c) described, in three ακροποι or canals the first expedition of Heraclius. The poem has been lately (1777) published at Rome but such vague and declamatory praise is far from corresponding with the sanguine hopes of Pagni, D'Anville, &c.

<sup>o</sup> Theophanes (p 236) carries Heraclius swiftly (κατα ταχος) into Armenia. Nicephorus, (p 11) though he confounds the two expeditions defines the province of Lazica. Eutychius (Annual tom ii p 231) has given the 5000 men, with the more probable situation of Trebizond.

<sup>p</sup> From Constantinople to Trebizond, with a fair wind four or five days from thence to Irczerom, five to Erivan twelve to Tauris, ten, in all thirty two. Such is the Itinerary of Tavernier (Voyages tom i p 12-56) who was perfectly conversant with the roads in Asia. Tavernier who travelled with a priory, spent ten or twelve days between Trebizond and Erzerom, (Voyage du Levant tom ii lettre xxiii) and Chardin (Voyages, tom i p 249-254) gives the more correct distance of fifty three parasangs, each of 5000 paces, (what paces?) between Erivan and Tauris.

<sup>q</sup> The expedition of Heraclius into Persia is finely illustrated by M. D'Anville (Memoires de l'Academie des Inscriptions tom xxviii p 569-573). He discovers the situation of Gandzaca, Thebarina, Dastard, &c. with admirable skill and learning, but the obscure campaign of 624 he passes over in silence.

from Constantinople to Trebizond, assembled his forces which had wintered in the Pontic regions, and from the mouth of the Phasis to the Caspian sea, encouraged his subjects and allies to march with the successors of Constantine under the faithful and victorious banner of the cross. When the legions of Lucullus and Pompey first passed the Euphrates, they blushed at their easy victory over the natives of Armenia. But the long experience of war had hardened the minds and bodies of that effeminate people, their zeal and bravery were approved in the service of a declining empire, they abhorred and feared the usurpation of the house of Sassan, and the memory of persecution envenomed their pious hatred of the enemies of Christ. The limits of Armenia, as it had been ceded to the emperor Maurice, extended as far as the Araxes: the river submitted to the indignity of a bridge,* and Heraclius, in the footsteps of Mark Antony, advanced towards the city of Tauris or Gandzaca,† the ancient and modern capital of one of the provinces of Media. At the head of forty thousand men, Chosroes himself had returned from some distant expedition to oppose the progress of the Roman arms, but he retreated on the approach of Heraclius, declining the generous alternative of peace or of battle. Instead of half a million of inhabitants, which have been ascribed to Tauris under the reign of the Sophys, the city contained no more than three thousand houses, but the value of the royal treasures was enhanced by a tradition, that they were the spoils of Croesus, which had been transported by Cyrus from the citadel of Sardes. The rapid conquests of Heraclius were suspended only by the winter season, a motive of prudence, or superstition,‡ determined his retreat into the province of Albania, along the shores of the Caspian, and his tents were most probably pitched in the plains of Mogan,§ the favourite encampment of oriental princes. In the course of this successful inroad, he signalized the zeal and revenge of a christian emperor: at his command, the soldiers extinguished the fire, and destroyed the temples, of the Magi, the statues of Chosroes, who aspired to divine honours, were abandoned to the flames, and the ruins of Thebarma or Ormia,¶ which had given birth to Zoroaster himself, made some atonement for the injuries of the holy sepulchre. A purer spirit of religion was shown in the relief and deliverance of fifty thousand captives. Heraclius was rewarded by their tears and grateful acclamations, but this wise measure, which spread the fame of his benevolence, diffused the murmurs of the Persians against the pride and obstinacy of their own sovereign.

Amidst the glories of the succeeding campaign, Heraclius is almost lost to our eyes, and to those of the Byzantine historians. From the spacious and fruitful plains of Albania, the emperor appears to follow the chain of Hyrcanian mountains, to descend into the province of Media or Irak, and to carry his victorious arms as far as the royal cities of Casbin and Ispahan, which had never been approached by a Roman conqueror. Alarmed by the danger of his kingdom, the powers of Chosroes were already called from the Nile and the Bosphorus, and three formidable armies surrounded, in a distant and hostile land, the camp of the emperor. The Cohian allies prepared to desert his standard, and the fears of the bravest veterans were expressed, rather than concealed, by their desponding silence. "Be not terrified," said the intrepid Heraclius, "by the multitude of your foes. With the aid of Heaven, one Roman may triumph over a thousand barbarians. But if we devote our lives for the salvation of our brethren, we shall obtain the crown of martyrdom, and our immortal reward will be liberally paid by God and posterity." These magnanimous sentiments were supported by the vigour of his actions. He repelled the threefold attack of the Persians, improved the divisions of their chiefs, and, by a well-concerted train of marches, retreats, and successful actions, finally chased them from the field into the fortified cities of Media and Assyria. In the severity of the winter season, Sabaraza deemed himself secure in the walls of Salban, he was surprised by the activity of Heraclius, who divided his troops, and performed a laborious march in the silence of the night. The flat roofs of the houses were defended with useless valour against the darts and torches of the Romans: the satraps and nobles of Persia, with their wives and children, and the flower of their martial youth, were either slain or made prisoners. The general escaped by a precipitate flight, but his golden armour was the prize of the conqueror, and the soldiers of Heraclius enjoyed the wealth and repose which they had so nobly deserved. On the return of spring, the emperor traversed in seven days the mountains of Curdistan, and passed without resistance the rapid stream of the Tigris. Oppressed by the weight of their spoils and captives, the Roman army halted

* Il pontem indignatus Araxes Virgil, Æneid, viii. 725. The river Araxes is noisy, rapid, vehement, and, with the melting of the snow, irresistible: the strongest and most many bridges are swept away by the current: and its indignation is attested by the ruins of many arches near the old town of Zulfa. Voyages de Chardin, tom. i. p. 252.

† Chardin tom. i. p. 255–256. With the Oriental (D. Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. p. 634) he ascribes the foundation of Tauris, or Tebris to Zobeide, the wife of the famous Khalif Haroun Alraschid: but it appears to have been more ancient: and the name of Gandzaca, Gazaca, is expressive of the royal treasure. The number of 550,000 inhabitants is reduced by Chardin from 1,100,000: the popular estimate. He opened the gospel, and applied or interpreted the six* casual passages to the name and situation of Albania. Theophrastus p. 258.

‡ The length of Mogan between the Cyrus and the Araxes, is sixty parangs in length and twenty in breadth (Olearius p. 1023, 1024) abounding in waters and fruitful pastures (Hist. de Nader Shih, translated by Mr. Jones from a Persian MS. part ii. p. 2, 3.) See the encampments of Timur (Hist. par Shereffeddin Ali, v. c. 37 l. vi. c. 13) and the coronation of Nader Shih (Hist. Persanne p. 3–13 and the English Life by Mr. Jones p. 61, 65).

x Thebarma and Ormia near the lake Spaulo, are proved to be the same city by D. Anville (Mémoires de l'Académie, tom. xxviii. p. 564, 565). It is honoured as the birth place of Zoroaster, according to the Persians, (Schultens, Index Geogr. p. 48.) and their tradition is fortified by M. Perron d'Anquetil (Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions tom. xxxi. p. 375) with some texts from his or their Zendavesta. y I cannot find, and (what is much more) M. D. Anville does not attempt to seek, the Sallian Tarantum territory of the Huns: &c. mentioned by Theophrastus, (p. 269–272.) Intyphus (Anat. tom. i. p. 231, 232.) an insufficient author names Asejolan and Casbin as most probably the city of Sapor. Ispah is a twenty farsang journey from Tauris and Casbin half way between them. Voyages de Tavernier, tom. i. p. 63–62.

under the walls of Amida, and Heraclius informed the senate of Constantinople of his safety and success, which they had already felt by the retreat of the besiegers. The bridges of the Euphrates were destroyed by the Persians, but as soon as the emperor had discovered a ford, they hastily retired to defend the banks of the Sarus,<sup>a</sup> in Cilicia. That river, an impetuous torrent, was about three hundred feet broad, the bridge was fortified with strong turrets, and the banks were lined with barbarian archers. After a bloody conflict, which continued till the evening, the Romans prevailed in the assault, and a Persian of gigantic size was slain and thrown into the Sarus by the hand of the emperor himself. The enemies were dispersed and dismayed, Heraclius pursued his march to Sebaste in Cappadocia, and at the expiration of three years, the same coast of the Euxine applauded his return from a long and victorious expedition.<sup>b</sup>

Deliverance of Constantinople
from the Persians and Avars,
A. D. 626

Instead of skirmishing on the frontier, the two monarchs who disputed the empire of the east, aimed their desperate strokes at the heart of their rival. The military force of Persia was wasted by the marches and combats of twenty years, and many of the veterans, who had survived the perils of the sword and the climate, were still detained in the fortresses of Egypt and Syria. But the revenge and ambition of Chosroes exhausted his kingdom, and the new levies of subjects, strangers, and slaves, were divided into three formidable bodies. The first army of fifty thousand men, illustrious by the ornament and title of the golden spears, was destined to march against Heraclius, the second was stationed to prevent his junction with the troops of his brother Theodorus, and the third was commanded to besiege Constantinople, and to second the operations of the chagan, with whom the Persian king had ratified a treaty of alliance and partition. Sarbar, the general of the third army, penetrated through the provinces of Asia to the well-known camp of Chalcedon, and amused himself with the destruction of the sacred and profane buildings of the Asiatic suburbs, while he impatiently waited the arrival of his Seythian friends on the opposite side of the Bosphorus. On the twenty-ninth of June, thirty thousand barbarians, the vanguard of the Avars, forced the long wall, and drove into the capital a promiscuous crowd of peasants, citizens, and soldiers. Four-score thousand of his native subjects, and of the vassal tribes of Gepidæ, Russians, Bulgarians, and Slavonians, advanced under the standard of the chagan, a month was spent in marches and negotiations, but the whole city was invested on the thirty-first of July, from the suburbs of Pera and Galata to the Blachernæ and seven towers, and the inhabitants desecrated with terror the flaming signals of the European and Asiatic shores. In the mean while the magistrates of Constantinople repeatedly strove to purchase the retreat of the chagan but their deputies were rejected and insulted, and he suffered the patricians to stand before his throne, while the Persian envoys, in silk robes, were seated by his side. "You see," said the haughty barbarian, "the proofs of my perfect union with the great king, and his lieutenant is ready to send into my camp a select band of three thousand warriors. Presume no longer to tempt your master with a partial and inadequate ransom: your wealth and your city are the only presents worthy of my acceptance. For yourselves, I shall permit you to depart, each with an under-garment, and a shirt, and, at my entreaty, my friend Sarbar will not refuse a passage through his lines. Your absent prince, even now a captive or a fugitive, has left Constantinople to its fate, nor can you escape the arms of the Avars and Persians, unless you could soar into the air like birds, unless like fishes you could dive into the waves."<sup>a</sup> During ten successive days, the capital was assaulted by the Avars, who had made some progress in the science of attack, they advanced to sap or batter the wall, under the cover of the impenetrable tortoise, their engines discharged a perpetual volley of stones and darts, and twelve lofty towers of wood exalted the combatants to the height of the neighbouring ramparts. But the senate and people were animated by the spirit of Heraclius, who had detached to their relief a body of twelve thousand cuirassiers, the powers of fire and mechanics were used with superior art and success in the defence of Constantinople, and the galleys, with two and three ranks of oars, commanded the Bosphorus, and rendered the Persians the idle spectators of the defeat of their allies. The Avars were repulsed, a fleet of Slavonian canoes was destroyed in the harbour, the vassals of the chagan threatened to desert, his provisions were exhausted, and after burning his engines, he gave the signal of a slow and formidable retreat. The devotion of the Romans ascribed this signal deliverance to the Virgin Mary, but the mother of Christ would surely have condemned their inhuman murder of the Persian envoys, who were entitled to the rights of humanity, if they were not protected by the laws of nations.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> At ten parasangs from Tarsus the army of the younger Cyrus passed the Sarus three plethra in breadth: the Pyramus a stadium in breadth, ran five parasangs further to the east. (Xenophon Anab. i. i. p. 33 34.)

<sup>b</sup> George of Pisidia (Bell. Abaricum 246-263 p. 49) celebrates with truth the persevering courage of the three campalgi (τρεις πεπιδου) against the Persians.

<sup>c</sup> Pelavius (Annolations ad Nicephorum, p. 62 63 64) discriminates the names and actions of five Persian generals who were successively sent against Heraclius.

<sup>d</sup> This number of eight myriads is specified by George of Pisidia (Bell. Abar. 219). The poet (50-88) clearly indicates that the old chagan lived till the reign of Heraclius, and that his son and successor was born of a foreign mother. Yet Foggini (Annolat. p. 57) has given another interpretation to this passage.

<sup>e</sup> A bird, a frog, a mouse and five arrows, had been the present of the Seythian king, to Darius (Herodot. i. ii. c. 131 132). Substituez une lettre à ces signes (says Rousseau, with much good taste) plus elle sera menaçante moins elle effrayera: ce ne sera qu'une symphonie dont Darius n'eût fait que rire (Emile tom. iii. p. 146). Yet I much question whether the senate and people of Constantinople laughed at this message of the chagan.

<sup>f</sup> The Paschal Chronicle (p. 392-397) gives a minute and authentic narrative of the siege and deliverance of Constantinople. Theophanes (p. 264) adds some circumstances, and a faint light may be obtained from the smoke of George of Pisidia, who has composed a poem (de Bello Abarico, p. 45-54) to commemorate this auspicious event.

Alliances and conquests of Heraclius.

After the division of his army, Heraclius prudently retired to the banks of the Phasis, from whence he maintained a defensive war against the fifty thousand gold spears of Persia. His anxiety was relieved by the deliverance of Constantinople, his hopes were confirmed by a victory of his brother Theodorus, and to the hostile league of Chosroes with the Avars, the Roman emperor opposed the useful and honourable alliance of the Turks. At his liberal invitation, the horde of Chozars<sup>f</sup> transported their tents from the plains of the Volga to the mountains of Georgia, Heraclius received them in the neighbourhood of Teflis, and the khan with his nobles dismounted from their horses, if we may credit the Greeks, and fell prostrate on the ground, to adore the purple of the Cæsar. Such voluntary homage and important aid were entitled to the warmest acknowledgments, and the emperor, taking off his own diadem, placed it on the head of the Turkish prince, whom he saluted with a tender embrace and the appellation of son. After a sumptuous banquet, he presented Ziebel with the plate and ornaments, the gold, the gems, and the silk, which had been used at the imperial table, and, with his own hand, distributed rich jewels and ear-rings to his new allies. In a secret interview, he produced the portrait of his daughter Eudocia,<sup>g</sup> condescended to flatter the barbarian with the promise of a fair and august bride, obtained an immediate succour of forty thousand horse, and negotiated a strong diversion of the Turkish arms on the side of the Oxus<sup>h</sup>. The Persians, in their turn, retreated with precipitation, in the camp of Edessa, Heraclius reviewed an army of seventy thousand Romans and strangers, and some months were successfully employed in the recovery of the cities of Syria, Mesopotamia, and Armenia, whose fortifications had been imperfectly restored. Sarbar still maintained the important station of Chalcedon; but the jealousy of Chosroes, or the artifice of Heraclius, soon alienated the mind of that powerful satrap from the service of his king and country. A messenger was intercepted with a real or fictitious mandate to the cadarigan, or second in command, directing him to send, without delay, to the throne, the head of a guilty or unfortunate general. The despatches were transmitted to Sarbar himself, and as soon as he read the sentence of his own death, he dexterously inserted the names of four hundred officers, assembled a military council, and asked the cadarigan, whether he was prepared to execute the commands of their tyrant? The Persians unanimously declared, that Chosroes had forfeited the sceptre, a separate treaty was concluded with the government of Constantinople, and if some considerations of honour or policy restrained Sarbar from joining the standard of Heraclius, the emperor was assured, that he might prosecute, without interruption, his designs of victory and peace.

Deprived of his firmest support, and doubtful of the fidelity of his subjects, the greatness of Chosroes was still conspicuous in its ruins. The number of five hundred thousand may be interpreted as an oriental metaphor, to describe the men and arms, the horses and elephants, that covered Media and Assyria against the invasion of Heraclius. Yet the Romans boldly advanced from the Araxes to the Tigris, and the timid prudence of Rhazates was content to follow them by forced marches through a desolate country, till he received a peremptory mandate to risk the fate of Persia in a decisive battle. Eastward of the Tigris, at the end of the bridge of Mosul, the great Nineveh had formerly been erected<sup>i</sup> the city, and even the ruins of the city, had long since disappeared<sup>k</sup> the vacant space afforded a spacious field for the operations of the two armies. But these operations are neglected by the Byzantine historians, and, like the authors of epic poetry and romance, they ascribe the victory, not to the military conduct, but to the personal valour, of their favourite hero. On this memorable day, Heraclius, on his horse Phallus, and victories, surpassed the bravest of his warriors. December 1, &c his hip was pierced with a spear, the steed was wounded in the thigh, but he carried his master safe and victorious through the triple phalanx of the barbarians. In the heat of the action, three valiant chiefs were successively slain by the sword and lance of the emperor, among these was Rhazates himself, he fell like a soldier, but the sight of his head scattered grief and despair through the fainting ranks of the Persians. His armour of pure and massy gold, the shield of one hundred and twenty plates, the sword and belt, the saddle and cuirass, adorned the triumph of Heraclius, and if he had not been faithful to Christ and his mother, the champion of Rome might have offered the fourth opime spoils to the Jupiter of the capitol<sup>l</sup>. In the

<sup>f</sup> The power of the Chozars prevailed in the seventh eighth, and ninth centuries. They were known to the Greeks the Arabs and, under the name of Kosa, to the Chinese themselves. De Guignes Hist. des Huns tom. ii. part. ii. p. 507-509.

<sup>g</sup> Eudocia or Eudocia the only daughter of Heraclius and his first wife Eudocia was born at Constantinople on the 11th of July, A. D. 611 baptized the 13th of August and crowned (in the oratory of St. Stephen in the palace) the 4th of October of the same year. At this time she was about fifteen. Eudocia was afterwards sent to her Turkish husband but the news of his death stopped her journey and prevented the consummation (Ducange Familie Byzantin. p. 118.)

<sup>h</sup> Eudocia (Hist. Barren. p. 13-16) gives some curious and probable facts but his numbers are rather too high—700,000 Romans assembled at Edessa—500,000 Persians killed at Nineveh. The abatement of a cipher is scarcely enough to restore his sanity.

<sup>i</sup> Chosroes (apud Bédar. Sicil. tom. i. p. 115 edit. Weverling) a 4,000 stadia (perhaps only 32 miles) for the circumference of Nineveh. Jones talks of three days' journey the 120,000 persons described by the prophet as incapable of discerning their right hand from their left, may afford about 700,000 persons of all ages for the inhabitants of that ancient capital (Goguet, Origines des Loix, &c. tom. iii. part. i. p. 92, 93) which ceased to exist 600 years before Christ. The western suburb still subsisted and is mentioned under the name of Mosul in the first age of the Arabian khalefs.

<sup>k</sup> Niebuhr (Voyage en Arabie, &c. tom. ii. p. 286) passed over Nineveh without perceiving it. He mistook for a ridge of hills the old rampart of brick or earth. It is said to have been 100 feet high flanked with 1,000 towers, each of the height of 200 feet.

<sup>l</sup> Rex regia arma fero (says Romulus, in the first consecration) hinc postea (continues Livy i. 10) inter tot bella optima parva sunt apud adeo rara quæ fo lina ferre. If Varro (apud Pomp. Festum, p. 306 edit. Dacier) could justify his liberality in granting the opime spoils even to a common soldier who had slain the king or general of the enemy, the honour would have been much more cheap and common.

battle of Nineveh, which was fiercely fought from day-break to the eleventh hour, twenty-eight standards, beside those which might be broken or torn, were taken from the Persians, the greatest part of their army was cut in pieces, and the victors, concealing their own loss, passed the night on the field. They acknowledged, that on this occasion it was less difficult to kill than to discomfit the soldiers of Chosroes, amidst the bodies of their friends, no more than two bow-shot from the enemy, the remnant of the Persian cavalry stood firm till the seventh hour of the night, about the eighth hour they retired to their unrifled camp, collected their baggage, and dispersed on all sides, from the want of orders rather than of resolution. The diligence of Heraclius was not less admirable in the use of victory, by a march of forty-eight miles in four and twenty hours, his vanguard occupied the bridges of the greater and the lesser Zab, and the cities and palaces of Assyria were open for the first time to the Romans. By a just gradation of magnificent scenes, they penetrated to the royal seat of Dastagerd, and, though much of the treasure had been removed, and much had been expended, the remaining wealth appears to have exceeded their hopes, and even to have satiated their avarice. Whatever could not be easily transported they consumed with fire, that Chosroes might feel the anguish of those wounds, which he had so often inflicted on the provinces of the empire and justice might allow the excuse, if the desolation had been confined to the works of regal luxury, if national hatred, military license, and religious zeal, had not wasted with equal rage the habitations and the temples of the guiltless subject. The recovery of three hundred Roman standards, and the deliverance of the numerous captives of Edessa and Alexandria, reflect a purer glory on the arms of Heraclius. From the palace of Dastagerd, he pursued his march within a few miles of Modam or Ctesiphon, till he was stopped, on the banks of the Arba, by the difficulty of the passage, the rigour of the season, and perhaps the fame of an impregnable capital. The return of the emperor is marked by the modern name of the city of Sherhizour, he fortunately passed mount Zara before the snow, which fell incessantly thirty-four days, and the citizens of Gandzaca, or Tauris, were compelled to entertain his soldiers and their horses with a hospitable reception.<sup>m</sup>

Flight of Chos-

<sup>1064</sup>
A D 627
Dec. 29

When the ambition of Chosroes was reduced to the defence of his hereditary kingdom, the love of glory, or even the sense of shame, should have urged him to meet his rival in the field. In the battle of Nineveh, his courage might have taught the Persians to vanquish, or he might have fallen with honour by the

lance of a Roman emperor. The successor of Cyrus chose rather, at a secure distance, to expect the event, to assemble the relics of the defeat, and to retire by measured steps before the march of Heraclius, till he beheld with a sigh the once loved mansions of Dastagerd. Both his friends and enemies were persuaded, that it was the intention of Chosroes to bury himself under the ruins of the city and palace and as both might have been equally adverse to his flight, the monarch of Asia, with Sira, and three concubines, escaped through a hole in the wall nine days before the arrival of the Romans. The slow and stately procession in which he showed himself to the prostrate crowd, was changed to a rapid and secret journey, and the first evening he lodged in the cottage of a peasant, whose humble door would scarcely give admittance to the great king.<sup>n</sup> His superstition was subdued by fear on the third day, he entered with joy the fortifications of Ctesiphon, yet he still doubted of his safety till he had opposed the river Tigris to the pursuit of the Romans. The discovery of his flight agitated with terror and tumult the palace, the city, and the camp of Dastagerd. The satraps hesitated whether they had most to fear from their sovereign or the enemy, and the females of the harem were astonished and pleased by the sight of mankind, till the jealous husband of three thousand wives again confined them to a more distant castle. At his command, the army of Dastagerd retreated to a new camp. The front was covered by the Arba, and a line of two hundred elephants, the troops of the more distant provinces successively arrived, and the vilest domestics of the king and satraps were enrolled for the last defence of the throne. It was still in the power of Chosroes to obtain a reasonable peace, and he was repeatedly pressed by the messengers of Heraclius, to spare the blood of his subjects, and to relieve a humane conqueror from the painful duty of carrying fire and sword through the fairest countries of Asia. But the pride of the Persian had not yet sunk to the level of his fortune, he derived a momentary confidence from the retreat of the emperor, he wept with impotent rage over the ruins of his Assyrian palaces, and disregarded too long the rising murmurs of the nation, who complained that their lives and fortunes were sacrificed to the obstinacy of an old man. That unhappy old man was himself tortured with the sharpest pains both of mind and body, and, in the consciousness of his approaching end, he resolved to fix the tiara on the head of Merdaza, the most favoured of his sons. But the will of Chosroes was no longer revered, and Siroes, who gloried in the rank and merit of his mother Sira, had conspired with the malcontents to assert and anticipate the rights of primogeniture.<sup>o</sup>

<sup>m</sup> In describing this last expedition of Heraclius, the facts, the places, and the date of Theophanes (p. 265—271) are so accurate and authentic, that he must have followed the original letters of the emperor, of which the Paschal Chronicle has preserved (p. 398—402) a very curious specimen.

<sup>n</sup> The words of Theophanes are remarkable: εἰσῆλθε ὁ αὐτοκράτωρ εἰς τὸν γέφυρον μηδαιῶν μετὰ αἰ, συχωρηθεὶς ἐν τῇ τῷ αὐτοῦ οὐρᾷ, ἥ ἐστιν

εὐκατὸν Ἡρακλίου εὐαίμασι, (p. 269) Young princes who discover a propensity to war should repeatedly transcribe and translate such salutary texts.

<sup>o</sup> The authentic narrative of the fall of Chosroes is contained in the letter of Heraclius (Chron. Paschal p. 398) and the history of Theophanes (p. 271).

Twenty-two satraps, they styled themselves patriots, were tempted by the wealth and honours of a new reign to the soldiers, the heir of Chosroes promised an increase of pay, to the christians, the free exercise of their religion, to the captives, liberty and rewards, and to the nation, instant peace and the reduction of taxes. It was determined by the conspirators, that Siroes, with the ensigns of royalty, should appear in the camp, and if the enterprise should fail, his escape was contrived to the imperial court. But the new monarch was saluted with unanimous acclamations, the flight of Chosroes

(yet where could he have fled?) was rudely arrested, eighteen sons were massacred before his face, and he was thrown into a dungeon, where he expired on the fifth day. The Greeks

He is deposed,
A D 628
Feb 25
and murdered by his son Siroes,
Feb 29

and modern Persians minutely describe how Chosroes was insulted, and famished, and tortured, by the command of an inhuman son, who so far surpassed the example of his father but at the time of his death, what tongue would relate the story of the parricide? what eye could penetrate into the tower of darkness? According to the faith and merey of his christian enemies, he sunk without hope into a still deeper abyss,<sup>a</sup> and it will not be denied, that tyrants of every age and sect are the best entitled to such infernal abodes. The glory of the house of Sassan ended with the life of Chosroes his unnatural son enjoyed only eight months the fruit of his crimes and in the space of four years, the regal title was assumed by nine candidates, who disputed, with the sword or dagger, the fragments of an exhausted monarchy. Every province, and each city of Persia, was the scene of independence, of discord, and of blood, and the state of anarchy prevailed about eight years longer, till the factions were silenced and united under the common yoke of the Arabian caliphs.<sup>a</sup>

Treaty of peace between the two empires
A D 628
March, &c

As soon as the mountains became passable, the emperor received the welcome news of the success of the conspiracy, the death of Chosroes, and the elevation of his eldest son to the throne of Persia. The authors of the revolution, eager to display their merits in the court or camp of Tauris, preceded the ambassadors of Siroes, who delivered the letters of their master to his brother the emperor of the Romans.<sup>c</sup> In the language of the usurpers of every age, he imputes his own crimes to the Deity, and, without degrading his equal majesty, he offers to reconcile the long discord of the two nations, by a treaty of peace and alliance more durable than brass or iron. The conditions of the treaty were easily defined and faithfully executed. In the recovery of the standards and prisoners which had fallen into the hands of the Persians, the emperor imitated the example of Augustus: their care of the national dignity was celebrated by the poets of the times, but the decay of genius may be measured by the distance between Horace and George of Pisidia: the subjects and brethren of Heraclius were redeemed from persecution, slavery, and exile, but, instead of the Roman eagles, the true wood of the holy cross was restored to the importunate demands of the successor of Constantine. The victor was not ambitious of enlarging the weakness of the empire, the son of Chosroes abandoned without regret the conquests of his father, the Persians who evacuated the cities of Syria and Egypt were honourably conducted to the frontier, and a war which had wounded the vitals of the two monarchies, produced no change in their external and relative situation. The return of Heraclius from Tauris to Constantinople, was a perpetual triumph, and after the exploits of six glorious campaigns, he peaceably enjoyed the sabbath of his toils. After a long impatience, the senate, the clergy, and the people, went forth to meet their hero, with tears and acclamations, with olive branches and innumerable lamps: he entered the capital in a chariot drawn by four elephants, and as soon as the emperor could disengage himself from the tumult of public joy, he tasted more genuine satisfaction in the embraces of his mother and his son.<sup>a</sup>

The succeeding year was illustrated by a triumph of a very different kind, the restitution of the true cross to the holy sepulchre. Heraclius performed in person the pilgrimage of Jerusalem, the identity of the relic was verified by the discreet patriarch,<sup>b</sup> and this august ceremony has been commemorated by the annual festival of the exaltation of the cross. Before the emperor presumed to tread the consecrated ground, he was instructed to strip himself of the diadem and purple, the pomp and vanity of the world: but in the judgment of his clergy, the persecution of the Jews was more easily reconciled with the precepts of the gospel. He again ascended his throne to receive the congratulations of the ambassadors of France and India: and the fame of Moses, Alexander, and Hercules,<sup>c</sup> was eclipsed, in the popular estimation, by the superior merit and

<sup>a</sup> On the first rumour of the death of Chosroes an Heraclian in two cantos was instantly published at Constantinople by George of Pisidia, (p. 97—105.) A priest and a poet might very properly exult in the damnation of the public enemy, (εὐχόμενοι εἰς τὸ πᾶν) but such mean revenge is unworthy of a king and a conqueror, and I am sorry to find so much black superstition (ὁ βασιλεὺς ὁσπότερ ἐρεος καὶ ἐρεως παύσθαι οὐκ ἐκ καταφύγιου) as to τὸ ἀκαταύρῃ, &c in the letter of Heraclius: he almost applauds the parricide of Siroes as an act of piety and justice.

<sup>b</sup> The best oriental accounts of this last period of the Sassanian king, are found in Lulychius (Annal tom ii p. 231—246) who describes the parricide of Siroes. D. Herbelot (Bibliothèque Orientale, p. 789) and Assemani (Bibliothèque Orientale tom iii p. 410—420).

<sup>c</sup> The letter of Siroes in the Paschal Chronicle (p. 402.) unfortunately ends before he proceeds to business. The treaty appears in its execution in the histories of Theophanes and Nicephorus.

<sup>a</sup> The burthen of Corneille's song,

"Montrez Heraclius au peuple qui l'attend, is much better suited to the present occasion. See his triumph in Theophanes (p. 272—273) and Nicephorus (p. 15—16.) The life of the mother and tenderness of the son are attested by George of Pisidia (Bell. Arab. 255 &c p. 49.) The metaphor of the Sabbath is used somewhat profanely by these Byzantine christians.

<sup>b</sup> See Baronius (Annal. Eccles. A D 628 An 1—4) Eutychius, (Annal tom ii p. 210—219) Nicephorus (Hist. p. 15.) The scale of the cross had never been taken, and this preservation of the cross is ascribed (under God) to the devotion of queen Sira.

<sup>c</sup> George of Pisidia Acrostich. in de Exped. contra Persas 415 &c. and Heraclius Acrostich. i. 65—138. I neglect the meaner parallels of Daniel, Timotheus &c.; Chosroes and the chagans were of course compared to Belshazzar, Pharaoh, the old serpent &c.

tion, and immortality of souls , and Providence was justified by a supposition, that they were confined in their earthly prisons to expiate the stains which they had contracted in a former state<sup>b</sup> But the degrees of purity and corruption are almost immeasurable It might be fairly presumed, that the most sublime and virtuous of human spirits was infused into the offspring of Mary and the Holy Ghost,<sup>i</sup> that his abasement was the result of his voluntary choice , and that the object of his mission was to purify, not his own, but the sins of the world On his return to his native skies, he received the immense reward of his obedience , the everlasting kingdom of the Messiah, which had been darkly foretold by the prophets, under the carnal images of peace, of conquest, and of dominion Omnipotence could enlarge the human faculties of Christ to the extent of his celestial office In the language of antiquity, the title of God has not been severely confined to the first parent, and his incomparable minister, his only-begotten Son, might claim, without presumption, the religious, though secondary, worship of a subject world

II The seeds of the faith, which had slowly arisen in the rocky and ungrateful soil of Judea, were transplanted, in full maturity, to the happier climes of the Gentiles, and the strangers of Rome or Asia, who never beheld the manhood, were the more readily disposed to embrace the divinity, of Christ. The polytheist and the philosopher, the Greek and the barbarian, were alike accustomed to conceive a long succession an infinite chain, of angels or demons, or deities, or æons, or emanations, issuing from the throne of light. Nor could it seem strange or incredible, that the first of these æons, the Logos, or word of God, of the same substance with the Father, should descend upon earth, to deliver the human race from vice and error, and to conduct them in the paths of life and immortality. But the prevailing doctrine of the eternity and inherent privacy of matter infected the primitive churches of the east. Many among the Gentile proselytes refused to believe that a celestial spirit, an undivided portion of the first essence, had been personally united with a mass of impure and contaminated flesh: and, in their zeal for the divinity, they piously abjured the humanity, of Christ. While his blood was still recent on mount Calvary,* the Docetes, a numerous and learned sect of Asia-

1. Gen. x. 1. 2. Sarrago verget per Abra ver was one of the fifteen heretics imputed to Origen and died by his apostasy. (Hicetoz, His- toiree des evan. p. 25.) Some of the Rabbis attribute one and the same soul to the persons of Adam David as ' the Wise as
 2. Apostasy adhesive in seculo hypocritis et in Indurati Christi re-
gulare recede PHANTASIA domini et in revelante Hieronymus

ties, invented the phantastic system, which was afterwards propagated by the Marcionites, the Manicheans, and the various names of the Gnostic heresy.<sup>1</sup> They denied the truth and authenticity of the gospels, as far as they relate the conception of Mary, the birth of Christ, and the thirty years that preceded the exercise of his ministry. He first appeared on the banks of the Jordan in the form of perfect manhood, but it was a form only, and not substance, a human figure created by the hand of Omnipotence to imitate the faculties and actions of a man, and to impose a perpetual illusion on the senses of his friends and enemies. Articulate sounds vibrated on the ears of the disciples, but the image which was impressed on their optic nerve, eluded the more stubborn evidence of the touch, and they enjoyed the spiritual, not the corporeal, presence of the Son of God. The rage of the Jews was idly wasted against an impassive phantom, and the mystic scenes of the passion and death, the resurrection and ascension, of Christ, were represented on the theatre of Jerusalem for the benefit of mankind. If it were urged, that such ideal mimicry, such incessant deception, was unworthy of the God of truth, the Docetes agreed with too many of their orthodox brethren in the justification of pious falsehood. In the system of the Gnostics, the Jehovah of Israel, the Creator of this lower world, was a rebellious, or at least an ignorant, spirit. The Son of God descended upon earth to abolish his temple and his law, and, for the accomplishment of this salutary end, he dexterously transferred to his own person the hope and prediction of a temporal Messiah.

His incorruptible body. One of the most subtle disputants of the Manichean school, has pressed the danger and indecency of supposing, that the God of the christians, in the state of a human foetus, emerged at the end of nine months from a female womb. The pious horror of his antagonists provoked them to disclaim all sensual circumstances of conception and delivery, to maintain, that the divinity passed through Mary like a sun-beam through a plate of glass, and to assert, that the seal of her virginity remained unbroken even at the moment when she became the mother of Christ. But the rashness of these concessions has encouraged a milder sentiment of those of the Docetes, who taught, not that Christ was a phantom, but that he was clothed with an impassible and incorrupt-

ble body. Such, indeed, in the more orthodox system, he has acquired since his resurrection, and such he must always have possessed, if it were capable of pervading, without resistance or injury, the density of intermediate matter. Devoid of its most essential properties, it might be exempt from the attributes and infirmities of the flesh. A foetus that could increase from an invisible point to its full maturity, a child that could attain the stature of perfect manhood, without deriving any nourishment from the ordinary sources, might continue to exist without repairing a daily waste by a daily supply of external matter. Jesus might share the repasts of his disciples without being subject to the calls of thirst or hunger, and his virgin purity was never sullied by the involuntary stains of sensual concupiscence. Of a body thus singularly constituted, a question would arise, by what means, and of what materials, it was originally framed, and our sounder theology is startled by an answer which was not peculiar to the Gnostics, that both the form and the substance proceeded from the divine essence. The idea of pure and absolute spirit is a refinement of modern philosophy. The incorporeal essence, ascribed by the ancients to human souls, celestial beings, and even the Deity himself, does not exclude the notion of extended space, and their imagination was satisfied with a subtle nature of air, or fire, or æther, incomparably more perfect than the grossness of the material world. If we define the place, we must describe the figure, of the Deity. Our experience, perhaps our vanity, represents the powers of reason and virtue under a human form. The anthropomorphites, who swarmed among the monks of Egypt and the catholics of Africa, could produce the express declaration of Scripture, that man was made after the image of his Creator.<sup>2</sup> The venerable Serapian, one of the saints of the Nitrian desert, relinquished, with many a tear, his darling prejudice, and bewailed like an infant, his unlucky conversion, which had stolen away his God, and left his mind without any visible object of faith or devotion.<sup>3</sup>

III Such were the fleeting shadows of the Docetes. A more substantial though less simple hypothesis, was contrived by Cerinthus of Asia,<sup>4</sup> who dared to oppose the last of the apostles. Placed on the confines of the Jewish and Gentile world, he laboured to reconcile the Gnostic with the Ebionite, by conadversus Lucifer c. 8. The epistle of Irenæus to the Smyrniens and even the gospel according to St John are levelled against the growing error of the Docetes, who had obtained too much credit in the world (1 John iv. 1-3).

<sup>1</sup> About the year 200 of the christian era, Irenæus and Hippolytus refuted the thirty-two sects the hæreses novæ tractatus, which had multiplied to fourscore in the time of Epiphanius (Phot. Biblioth. cod. exx. cxxii.). The five books of Irenæus exist only in barbarous Latin, but the original might perhaps be found in some monastery of Greece.

<sup>2</sup> The pilgrim Cassian, who visited Egypt in the beginning of the fifth century, observes and laments the ruin of anthropomorphism among the monks who were not conscious that they embraced the system of Irenæus (Cicero, de Nat. Deorum, l. 18-24). As universi propemodum genere monachorum qui per totam provinciam Egyptum morabantur pro simplicitalis errore susceptum est ut e contrario memoratum pontificem (Theophilus) velut hæresis gravissimæ depravatam pars maximæ sanctorum ab universo frateritatis corpore decerneret detestandum (Cassian, Collat. c. 2). As long as St Augustin remained a Manichean, he was scandalized by the anthropomorphism of the vulgar catholics.

<sup>3</sup> Ita est in oratione senex mente confusus, eo quod illam anthropomorphon imaginem Deltæ quam proponere sibi in oratione consueverat aboleret de suo corde sentiret ut in amiraculosis sibi crebroque singulis repente promptens, in terram prostratus cum ejulat validius uno proclamaret "Hec me miserum!" Interunt et Deum meum, et quem nunc teneam non habeo, vel quem adorem aut interpellam jam necesse Cassian Collat. c. 2.

<sup>4</sup> St John and Cerinthus (A. D. 80 Cleric Hist. Eccles. p. 493) accidentally met in the public bath of Ephesus, but the apostle fled from the heretic, lest the building should tumble on their heads. This foolish story, republished by Dr Middleton, (Miscellaneous Works vol. ii.) is related however by Irenæus, (iii. 3.) on the evidence of Polycarp, and was probably suited to the time and residence of Cerinthus. The obsolete yet probably the true reading of 1 John iv. 3—5—6 is et in nomine—alludes to the double nature of that primitive heretic.

fessing in the same Messiah the supernatural union of a man and a God and this mystic doctrine was adopted with many fanciful improvements by Carpocrates, Basilides, and Valentine,<sup>p</sup> the heretics of the Egyptian school. In their eyes, Jesus of Nazareth was a mere mortal, the legitimate son of Joseph and Mary but he was the best and wisest of the human race, selected as the worthy instrument to restore upon earth the worship of the true and supreme Deity. When he was baptized in the Jordan, the CHRIST, the first of the æons, the Son of God himself, descended on Jesus in the form of a dove, to inhabit his mind and direct his actions, during the allotted period of his ministry. When the Messiah was delivered into the hands of the Jews, the Christ, an immortal and impassible being, forsook his earthly tabernacle, flew back to the pleroma or world of spirits, and left the solitary Jesus to suffer, to complain, and to expire. But the justice and generosity of such a desertion are strongly questionable, and the fate of an innocent martyr, at first impelled, and at length abandoned, by his divine companion, might provoke the pity and indignation of the profane. Their murmurs were variously silenced by the sectaries who espoused and modified the double system of Cerinthus.* It was alleged, that when Jesus was nailed to the cross, he was endowed with a miraculous apathy of mind and body, which rendered him insensible of his apparent sufferings. It was affirmed, that these momentary though real pangs, would be abundantly repaid by the temporal reign of a thousand years reserved for the Messiah in his kingdom of the new Jerusalem. It was insinuated, that if he suffered, he deserved to suffer, that human nature is never absolutely perfect, and that the cross and passion might serve to expiate the venial transgressions of the son of Joseph, before his mysterious union with the Son of God.<sup>q</sup>

IV Divine incarnation of Apollinaris

IV All those who believe the immateriality of the soul, a specious and noble tenet, must confess, from their present experience, the incomprehensible union of mind and matter. A similar union is not inconsistent with a much higher, or even with the highest, degree of mental faculties, and the incarnation of an æon or archangel, the most perfect of created spirits, does not involve any positive contradiction or absurdity. In the age of religious freedom, which was determined by the council of Nice, the dignity of Christ was measured by private judgment according to the indefinite rule of Scripture, or reason, or tradition. But when his pure and proper divinity had been established on the ruins of Arianism, the faith of the catholics trembled on the edge of a precipice where it was impossible to recede, dangerous to stand, dreadful to fall, and the manifold inconveniences of their creed were aggravated by the sublime character of their theology. They hesitated to pronounce, that God himself, the second person of an equal and consubstantial trinity, was manifested in the flesh,<sup>r</sup> that a being who pervades the universe, had been confined in the womb of Mary, that his eternal duration had been marked by the days, and months, and years of human existence, that the Almighty had been scourged and crucified, that his impassible essence had felt pain and anguish, that his omniscience was not exempt from ignorance, and that the source of life and immortality expired on mount Calvary. These alarming consequences were affirmed with unblushing simplicity by Apollinaris,<sup>s</sup> bishop of Laodicea, and one of the luminaries of the church. The son of a learned grammarian, he was skilled in all the sciences of Greece, eloquence, erudition, and philosophy, conspicuous in the volumes of Apollinaris, were humbly devoted to the service of religion. The worthy friend of Athanasius, the worthy antagonist of Julian, he bravely wrestled with the Arians and polytheists, and, though he affected the rigour of geometrical demonstration, his commentaries revealed the literal and allegorical sense of the Scriptures. A mystery, which had long floated in the looseness of popular belief, was defined by his perverse diligence in a technical form, and he first proclaimed the memorable words, "One incarnate nature of Christ," which are still re-echoed with hostile clamours in the churches of Asia, Egypt, and Æthiopia. He taught that the Godhead was united or mingled with the body of a man, and that the Logos, the eternal wisdom, supplied in the flesh the place and office of a human soul. Yet as the profound doctor had been terrified at his own rashness, Apollinaris was heard to mutter some faint accents of excuse and explanation. He requiesced in the old distinction of the Greek philosophers between the rational and sensitive soul of man, that he might reserve the Logos for intellectual functions, and employ the subordinate human principle in the meaner actions of animal life. With the moderate Docetes, he revered Mary as the spiritual, rather than as the carnal mother of Christ, whose body

<sup>p</sup> The Valentines embraced a complex, and almost incoherent, system. 1. Both Christ and Jesus were sons, though of different degrees: the one acting as the rational soul, the other as the divine spirit of the Saviour. 2. At the time of the passion they both retired and left only a sensitive soul and a human body. 3. Even this body was ethereal, and perhaps apparitional. Such are the laborious conclusions of Mosisheim. But I much doubt whether the Latin translator understood Irenæus, and whether Irenæus and the Valentines understood themselves.

<sup>q</sup> The heretics abused the passionate exclamation of "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" Rousseau who has drawn an eloquent but indecent parallel between Christ and Socrates forgets that not a word of impatience or despair escaped from the mouth of the dying philosopher. In the Messiah such sentiments could be only apparent, and such all sounding words are properly explained as the application of a psalm or prophecy.

<sup>r</sup> This strong expression might be justified by the language of St.

Paul (1 Tim. iii. 16) but we are deceived by our modern Bibles. The word ἡ (which) was altered to θεοῦ (God) at Constantinople in the beginning of the sixth century, the true reading which is visible in the Latin and Syriac versions still exists in the recensions of the Greek as well as of the Latin fathers, and this fraud with that of the three last verses of St. John was admirably detected by Sir Isaac Newton (See his two letters translated by M. de Vossy in the Journal Britannique tom. xv. p. 149-150. 2. 1-300). I have weighed the arguments and may yield to the authority of the first of the philosophers, and I was deeply skill in critical and theological studies.

<sup>s</sup> For Apollinaris and his sect see Socrates, l. ii. c. 43. l. iii. c. 10. Sozomen l. i. c. 18. l. ii. c. 23. 2. Theodoret l. i. c. 3. l. ii. c. 11. The most Memoires Ecclesiastiques tom. vi. p. 602-603. Not p. 602-603 in 4to. Venice 1722. The contemporary saints always mention the bishop of Laodicea as a friend and fellow. The style of the manuscript is harsh and hostile yet Philon gives a good example (l. vii. c. 11-15.) to Basil and Gregory.

either came from heaven, impassible and incorruptible, or was absorbed, and as it were transformed, into the essence of the Deity. The system of Apollinaris was strenuously encountered by the Asiatic and Syrian divines, whose schools are honoured by the names of Basil, Gregory, and Chrysostom, and tainted by those of Diodorus, Theodore, and Nestorius. But the person of the aged bishop of Laodicea, his character and dignity, remained inviolate, and his rivals, since we may not suspect them of the weakness of toleration, were astonished, perhaps, by the novelty of the argument, and dissident of the final sentence of the catholic church. Her judgment at length inclined in their favour, the heresy of Apollinaris was condemned, and the separate congregations of his disciples were proscribed by the imperial laws. But his principles were secretly entertained in the monasteries of Egypt, and his enemies felt the hatred of Theophilus and Cyril, the successive patriarchs of Alexandria.

v Orthodox consent and verbal disputes

V The grovelling Ebionite, and the phantastic Docetes, were rejected and forgotten: the recent zeal against the errors of Apollinaris, reduced the catholics to a seeming agreement with the double nature of Cerinthus. But instead of a temporary and occasional alliance, they established, and we still embrace, the substantial, indissoluble, and everlasting union of a perfect God with a perfect man, of the second person of the Trinity with a reasonable soul and human flesh. In the beginning of the fifth century the unity of the two natures was the prevailing doctrine of the church. On all sides, it was confessed, that the mode of their co-existence could neither be represented by our ideas, nor expressed by our language. Yet a secret and incurable discord was cherished, between those who were most apprehensive of confounding, and those who were more fearful of separating, the divinity and the humanity of Christ. Impelled by religious frenzy, they fled with adverse haste from the error which they mutually deemed most destructive of truth and salvation. On either hand they were anxious to guard, they were jealous to defend, the union and the distinction of the two natures, and to invent such forms of speech, such symbols of doctrine, as were least susceptible of doubt or ambiguity. The poverty of ideas and language tempted them to ransack art and nature for every possible comparison, and each comparison mixed their fancy in the explanation of an incomparable mystery. In the polemic microscope, an atom is enlarged to a monster, and each party was skilful to exaggerate the absurd or impious conclusions that might be extorted from the principles of their adversaries. To escape from each other, they wandered through many a dark and devious thicket, till they were astonished by the horrid phantoms of Cerinthus and Apollinaris, who guarded the opposite issues of the theological labyrinth. As soon as they beheld the twilight of sense and heresy, they started, measured back their steps, and were again involved in the gloom of impenetrable orthodoxy. To purge themselves from the guilt or reproach of damnable error, they disavowed their consequences, explained their principles, excused their indiscretions, and unanimously pronounced the sounds of concord and faith. Yet a latent and almost invisible spark still lurked among the embers of controversy, by the breath of prejudice and passion, it was quickly kindled to a mighty flame, and the verbal disputes of the oriental sects have shaken the pillars of the church and state.

The name of CYRIL of Alexandria is famous in controversial story, and the title of saint is a mark that his opinions and his party have finally prevailed. In the house of his uncle, the archbishop Theophilus, he imbibed the orthodox lessons of zeal and dominion, and five years of his youth were profitably spent in the adjacent monasteries of Nitria. Under the tuition of the abbot Serapion, he applied himself to ecclesiastical studies with such indefatigable ardour, that in the course of one sleepless night he has perused the four gospels, the catholic epistles, and the epistle to the Romans. Origen he detested, but the writings of Clemens and Dionysius, of Athanasius and Basil, were continually in his hands. By the theory and practice of dispute, his faith was confirmed and his wit was sharpened; he extended round his cell the cobwebs of scholastic theology, and meditated the works of allegory and metaphysics, whose remains, in seven verbose folios, now peaceably slumber by the side of their rivals.<sup>a</sup> Cyril prayed and fasted in the desert, but his thoughts (it is the reproach of a friend*) were still fixed on the world, and the call of Theophilus, who summoned him to the tumult of cities and synods, was too readily obeyed by the aspiring hermit. With the approbation of his uncle he assumed the office, and acquired the fame, of a popular preacher. His comely person adorned the pulpit, the harmony of his voice resounded in the cathedral, his friends were stationed to lead or second the applause of the congregation,† and the hasty notes of the scribes preserved his discourses, which, in their effect, though not in their composition, might be compared with those of the Athenian orators. The death of Theophilus expanded and

A D 412.
Oct 18 —
A D 444
June 27

Cyril patriarch of Alexandria,

<sup>a</sup> I appeal to the confession of two oriental prelates, Gregory, Abulpharagius the Jacobite primate of the east and Elias the Nestorian metropolitan of Damascus, (see Asseman Bibliothecæ Orientalis tom ii p 241 tom iii p 514 &c) that the Melchites, Jacobites, Nestorians &c agree in the doctrine and differ only in the expression. Our most learned and rational divines—Bansier Le Clerc Huet—La Croze Mosheim Jahnkekl—are inclined to favour this charitable judgment; but the zeal of Petavius is loud and angry, and the moderation of Dupin is conveyed in a whisper.

† La Croze (Hist. du Christianisme des Indes tom i p 24) avows his contempt for the genius and writings of Cyril. De tous les ou-

vrages des anciens, il y en a peu qu'on lire avec moins d'utilité et de Dupin (Bibliothèque Ecclésiastique, tom iv p 42—52.) in words of respect, teaches us to despise them.

<sup>x</sup> Of Isidore of Pelusium (l i epist 25 p 8) As the letter is not of the most credible sort. Millemont, less sincere than the Hollandists affects to doubt whether this Cyril is the nephew of Theophilus. (Mém Eccl. tom xiv p 268)

<sup>y</sup> A grammarian is named by Socrates (l vii 13) διαφύρος δε ακροατης του ετακουον Κυριλλου καθεως, και περ το κροτου εν ταυς διδωσ καλιστα αυτον εχειν ην σπουδαιοτατος

realized the hopes of his nephew. The clergy of Alexandria was divided, the soldiers and their general supported the claims of the archdeacon, but a resistless multitude, with voices and with hands, asserted the cause of their favourite, and, after a period of thirty-nine years, Cyril was seated on the throne of Athanasius.*

The prize was not unworthy of his ambition. At a distance from the court, and at the head of an immense capital, the patriarch, as he was now styled, of Alexandria, had gradually usurped the state and authority of a civil magistrate. The public and private charities of the city were managed by his discretion, his voice inflamed or appeased the passions of the multitude, his commands were blindly obeyed by his numerous and fanatic parabolani,<sup>a</sup> familiarized in their daily office with scenes of death, and the prefects of Egypt were awed or provoked by the temporal power of these christian pontiffs. Ardent in the prosecution of heresy, Cyril auspiciously opened his reign by oppressing the Novatians, the most innocent and harmless of the sectaries. The interdiction of their religious worship appeared in his eyes a just and meritorious act, and he confiscated their holy vessels, without apprehending the guilt of sacrilege. The toleration, and even the privileges, of the Jews, who had multiplied to the number of forty thousand, were secured by the laws of the Cæsars and Ptolemies, and a long prescription of seven hundred years since the foundation of Alexandria. Without any legal sentence, without any royal mandate, the patriarch, at the dawn of day, led a seditious multitude to the attack of the synagogues. Unarmed and unprepared, the Jews were incapable of resistance, their houses of prayer were levelled with the ground, and the episcopal warrior, after rewarding his troops with the plunder of their goods, expelled from the city the remnant of the unbelieving nation. Perhaps he might plead the insolence of their prosperity, and their deadly hatred of the christians, whose blood they had recently shed in a malicious or accidental tumult. Such crimes would have deserved the animadversion of the magistrate, but in this promiscuous outrage, the innocent were confounded with the guilty, and Alexandria was impoverished by the loss of a wealthy and industrious colony. The zeal of Cyril exposed him to the penalties of the Julian law, but in a feeble government, and a superstitious age, he was secure of impunity, and even of praise. Orestes complained, but his just complaints were too quickly forgotten by the ministers of Theodosius, and too deeply remembered by a priest who affected to pardon, and continued to hate, the præfect of Egypt. As he passed through the streets, his chariot was assaulted by a band of five hundred of the Nitrian monks, his guards fled from the wild beasts of the desert, his protestations that he was a christian and a catholic, were answered by a volley of stones, and the face of Orestes was covered with blood. The loyal citizens of Alexandria hastened to his rescue, he instantly satisfied his justice and revenge against the monk by whose hand he had been wounded, and Ammonius expired under the rod of the lictor. At the command of Cyril his body was raised from the ground, and transported, in solemn procession, to the cathedral, the name of Ammonius was changed to that of Thaumastus the wonderful, his tomb was decorated with the trophies of martyrdom, and the patriarch ascended the pulpit to celebrate the magnanimity of an assassin and a rebel. Such honours might incite the faithful to combat and die under the banners of the saint, and he soon prompted, or accepted, the sacrifice of a virgin, who professed the religion of the Greeks, and cultivated the friendship of Orestes. Hypatia, the daughter of Theon the mathematician,<sup>b</sup> was initiated in her father's studies, her learned comments have elucidated the geometry of Apollonius and Diophantus, and she publicly taught, both at Athens and Alexandria, the philosophy of Plato and Aristotle. In the bloom of beauty, and in the maturity of wisdom, the modest maid refused her lovers and instructed her disciples, the persons most illustrious for their rank or merit were impatient to visit the female philosopher, and Cyril beheld, with a jealous eye, the gorgeous train of horses and slaves who crowded the door of her academy. A rumour was spread among the christians, that the daughter of Theon was the only obstacle to the reconciliation of the præfect and the archbishop, and that obstacle was speedily removed. On a fatal day, in the holy season of Lent Hypatia was torn from her chariot, stripped naked, dragged to the church and inhumanly lacerated by the hands of Peter the reader, and a troop of savage and merciless fanatics. Her flesh was scraped from her bones with sharp oyster-shells,<sup>c</sup> and her quivering limbs were delivered to the flames. The just progress of inquiry and punishment was stopped by seasonable gifts, but the murder of Hypatia has imprinted an indelible stain on the character and religion of Cyril of Alexandria.<sup>d</sup>

* See the youth and promotion of Cyril, in Socrates (l. vii. c. 7) and Renaudot (Hist. Patriarch. Alexandrin. p. 106, 108). The Abbe Renaudot drew his materials from the Arabic history of Severus bishop of Hermopolis Magna or Asymonein in the tenth century, who can never be trusted unless our assent is extorted by the internal evidence of fact.

<sup>a</sup> The Parabolani of Alexandria were a charitable corporation instituted during the plague of Caligula to visit the sick and to bury the dead. They gradually enlarged abused and sold the privileges of their order. Their outrageous conduct under the reign of Cyril provoked the emperor to deprive the patriarch of their nomination, and restrain their number to five or six hundred. But these restraints were transient and ineffectual. See the Theodosian Code, l. xvi. tit. ii. and Tillemont Mém. l'éccl. tom. xiv. p. 271-278.

<sup>b</sup> For Theon, and his daughter Hypatia see Fabricius, Bibliothec.

tom. viii. p. 210, 211. Her article in the Lexicon of Suidas is curious and original. Hesychius (Menor. Opera tom. vii. p. 220, 221) observes that she was persecuted διὰ τὴν ἀκαταλλογίαν σοφίας and an epigram in the Greek Anthology (l. i. c. 74. p. 159. edit. Broekii) celebrates her knowledge and eloquence. She is honourably mentioned (Epist. 10, 15, 16, 33—κν 121, 130, 133) by her friend and disciple the philosophic bishop Synesius.

<sup>c</sup> Οὐ πικρὸν αἰχμὴν καὶ πελιδνὸν ἀντισκοπὴν &c. Oyster shells were plentifully strewn on the way to the church of the Casereum. I may therefore prefer the literal sense without rejecting the metaphorical version of legule, tiles which is used by M. de Valois. I am ignorant and the accounts were probably repeated from whether the victim was a slave.

<sup>d</sup> These exploits of St. Cyril are recorded by Socrates (l. vii. c. 13, 14, 15) and the most reluctant hypatia is compelled to copy an h.

Nestorius patriarch of Constantinople,
A D 423.
April 10

Superstition, perhaps, would more gently expiate the blood of a virgin, than the banishment of a saint, and Cyril had accompanied his uncle to the iniquitous synod of the Oak. When the memory of Chrysostom was restored and consecrated, the nephew of Theophilus, at the head of a dying faction, still maintained the justice of his sentence, nor was it till after a tedious delay and an obstinate resistance, that he yielded to the consent of the catholic world. His enmity to the Byzantine pontiffs<sup>f</sup> was a sense of interest, not a sally of passion: he envied their fortunate station in the sunshine of the imperial court, and he dreaded their upstart ambition, which oppressed the metropolitans of Europe and Asia, invaded the provinces of Antioch and Alexandria, and measured their diocese by the limits of the empire. The long moderation of Atticus, the mild usurper of the throne of Chrysostom, suspended the animosities of the eastern patriarchs, but Cyril was at length awakened by the exaltation of a rival more worthy of his esteem and hatred. After the short and troubled reign of Sisinnius, bishop of Constantinople, the factions of the clergy and people were appeased by the choice of the emperor, who, on this occasion, consulted the voice of fame, and invited the merit of a stranger. Nestorius,<sup>g</sup> a native of Germanicia, and a monk of Antioch, was recommended by the austerity of his life, and the eloquence of his sermons, but the first homily which he preached before the devout Theodosius betrayed the acrimony and impatience of his zeal. "Give me, O Cæsar!" he exclaimed, "give me the earth purged of heretics, and I will give you in exchange the kingdom of heaven. Exterminate with me the heretics, and with you I will exterminate the Persians." On the fifth day, as if the treaty had been already signed, the patriarch of Constantinople discovered, surprised, and attacked, a secret conventicle of the Arians: they preferred death to submission, the flames that were kindled by their despair, soon spread to the neighbouring houses, and the triumph of Nestorius was clouded by the name of incendiary. On either side of the Hellespont his episcopal vigour imposed a rigid formulary of faith and discipline, a chronological error concerning the festival of Easter was punished as an offence against the church and state. Lydia and Caria, Sardes and Miletus, were purified with the blood of the obstinate Quartodecimans, and the edict of the emperor, or rather of the patriarch, enumerates three and twenty degrees and denominations in the guilt and punishment of heresy.<sup>h</sup> But the sword of persecution, which Nestorius so furiously wielded, was soon turned against his own breast. Religion was the pretence: but, in the judgment of a contemporary saint, ambition was the genuine motive of episcopal warfare.<sup>i</sup>

In the Syrian school, Nestorius had been taught to abhor the confusion of the two natures, and nicely to discriminate the humanity of his master Christ from the divinity of the Lord Jesus.<sup>k</sup> The Blessed Virgin he revered as the mother of Christ, but his ears were offended with the rash and recent title of mother of God,<sup>l</sup> which had been insensibly adopted since the origin of the Arian controversy. From the pulpit of Constantinople, a friend of the patriarch, and afterwards the patriarch himself, repeatedly preached against the use, or the abuse, of a word<sup>m</sup> unknown to the apostles, unauthorized by the church, and which could only tend to alarm the timorous, to mislead the simple, to amuse the profane, and to justify, by a seeming resemblance, the old genealogy of Olympus.<sup>n</sup> In his calmer moments Nestorius confessed, that it might be tolerated or excused by the union of the two natures, and the communication of their idioms;<sup>o</sup> but he was exasperated, by contradiction, to disclaim the worship of a new-born, an infant Deity, to draw his inadequate similes from the conjugal or civil partnerships of life, and to describe the manhood of Christ as the robe, the instrument, the tabernacle of his Godhead. At these blasphemous sounds, the pillars of the sanctuary were shaken. The unsuccessful competitors of Nestorius indulged their pious or personal resentment, the Byzantine clergy were secretly displeased with the intrusion of a stranger: whatever is supertorian who coolly styles the murderers of Hypatia αποκτενοῦντες τὴν σοφίαν. At the mention of that injured name I am pleased to observe a blush even on the cheek of Baronius (A D 413 No 48).

<sup>e</sup> He was deaf to the entreaties of Atticus of Constantinople and of Isidore of Pelusium, and yielded only (if we may believe Nicéphorus I xiv c 18) to the personal intercession of the Virgin. Yet in his last years he still murdered: thus John Chrysostom had been justly condemned (Tillemont Mémoires Ecclésiastiques tom xiv p 278-282. Baronius Annales Ecclesiæ A D 412 No 46-64).

<sup>f</sup> See their character in the history of Socrates (I vii c 2-28) their power and pretensions, in the huge compilation of Theodoret (Discipline de l'Eglise tom i p 80-91).

<sup>g</sup> His elevation and conduct are described by Socrates (I vii c 27) and Marcellinus seems to have applied the eloquentia talis, sapientia primum of Sallust.

<sup>h</sup> Cod Theodos (I xvi tit v leg 65 with the illustrations of Baronius, (A D 423 N 2v &c) Godefroy, (ad locum) and Pagi (Critica, tom ii p 204).

<sup>i</sup> Isidore of Pelusium, (I iv Epist 17) His words are strong and scandalous—ὁ θεὸς ἵσταται, ἐπεὶ οὐκ ἔστιν ἀρχὴ τοῦ θεοῦ οὐδὲν ἔστιν ἀρχὴ τοῦ θεοῦ οὐδὲν ἔστιν ἀρχὴ τοῦ θεοῦ. Isidore is a saint, but he never became a bishop, and I half suspect that the pride of Dioscorus trampled on the pride of Plato.

<sup>k</sup> La Croze (Christianisme des Indes tom i p 11-51. Theodoret Epistoles La Crozeanus tom iii p 270-280) has detected the words θεογονία and αρχὴ τοῦ θεοῦ which, in the fourth fifth and sixth centuries, indiscriminate the school of Diodorus of Tarsus and his sect as disciples.

<sup>l</sup> Θεοτοκος—Deipara as in zoology we familiarly speak of ovipara and vivipara animals. It is not easy to fix the mention of this word which La Croze (Christianisme des Indes tom i p 16) ascribes to Eusebius of Cæsarea and the Arians. The orthodox testimonies are produced by Cyril and Petavius, Dogmata Theologiae tom v l v c 15 p 254 &c; but the veracity of the saint is questionable and the epithet of Θεοτοκος so easily slides from the margin to the text of a catholic MS.

<sup>m</sup> Baurage in his Histoire de l'Eglise, a work of controversy (tom i p 515) justifies the mother by the blood, of God (Acts xx 28 with Mill's various readings). But the Greek MSS are far from unanimous, and the primitive style of the blood of Christ is preserved in the Syriac version, even in those copies which were used by the Christians of Malabar on the coast of Malabar (La Croze Christianisme des Indes tom i p 347). The jealousy of the Nestorians and Monophysites has guarded the purity of their text.

<sup>n</sup> The paradox of La Croze already noticed at the new Cybele of the Christians (Isidor I i Epist 54) a letter was forged in the name of Hypatia, to ridicule the theology of her assassin (Synodicon c 216 in a tom Council p 481). In the article of NESTORIUS Bayle has scattered some loose philosophy on the worship of the Virgin Mary.

<sup>o</sup> The αντιδοχή of the Greeks a mutual loan or transfer of the idioms or properties of each nature to the other—of infinity to multiplicity to God, &c. Twelve rules on this subject in the Theological Grammar of Petavius (Dogmata Theologiae tom i l v c 13 15 p 299 &c).

stitions or absurd, might claim the protection of the monks, and the people were interested in the glory of their virgin patroness<sup>p</sup> The sermons of the archbishop, and the service of the altar, were disturbed by seditious clamour, his authority and doctrine were renounced by separate congregations, every wind scattered round the empire the leaves of controversy, and the voice of the combatants on a sonorous theatre re-echoed in the cells of Palestine and Egypt It was the duty of Cyril to enlighten the zeal and ignorance of his innumerable monks in the school of Alexandria, he had imbibed and professed the incarnation of one nature, and the successor of Athanasius consulted his pride and ambition, when he rose in arms against another Arius, more formidable and more guilty, on the second throne of the hierarchy After a short correspondence, in which the rival prelates disguised their hatred in the hollow language of respect and charity, the patriarch of Alexandria denounced to the prince and people, to the east and to the west, the damnable errors of the Byzantine pontiff From the east, more especially from Antioch, he obtained the ambiguous counsels of toleration and silence, which were addressed to both parties while they favoured the cause of Nestorius But the Vatican received with open arms the messengers of Egypt The vanity of Celestine was flattered by the appeal, and the partial version of a monk decided the faith of the pope, who, with his Latin clergy, was ignorant of the language, the arts, and the theology of the Greeks At the head of an Italian synod, Celestine weighed the merits of the cause, approved the creed of Cyril, condemned the sentiments and person of Nestorius, degraded the heretic from his episcopal dignity, allowed a respite of ten days for recantation and penance, and delegated to his enemy the execution of this rash and illegal sentence But the patriarch of Alexandria, whilst he darted the thunders of a god, exposed the errors and passions of a mortal, and his twelve anathemas<sup>q</sup> still torture the orthodox slaves, who adore the memory of a saint, without forfeiting their allegiance to the synod of Chalcedon These bold assertions are indelibly tinged with the colours of the Apollinarian heresy, but the serious, and perhaps the sincere, professions of Nestorius have satisfied the wisecrands and less partial theologians of the present times<sup>r</sup>

First council of Ephesus,
A. D. 431
June—October

Yet neither the emperor nor the primate of the east were disposed to obey the mandate of an Italian priest, and a synod of the catholic or rather of the Greek church was unanimously demanded as the sole remedy that could appease or decide this ecclesiastical quarrel<sup>s</sup> Ephesus, on all sides accessible by sea and land, was chosen for the place, the festival of Pentecost for the day, of the meeting, a writ of summons was despatched to each metropolitan, and a guard was stationed to protect and confine the fathers till they should settle the mysteries of heaven, and the faith of the earth Nestorius appeared not as a criminal, but as a judge, he depended on the weight rather than the number of his prelates, and his sturdy slaves from the baths of Zeuxippus were armed for every service of injury or defence But his adversary Cyril was more powerful in the weapons both of the flesh and of the spirit Disobedient to the letter, or at least to the meaning, of the royal summons, he was attended by fifty Egyptian bishops, who expected from their patriarch's nod the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. He had contracted an intimate alliance with Memnon bishop of Ephesus The despotic primate of Asia disposed of the ready succours of thirty or forty episcopal votes, a crowd of peasants, the slaves of the church, was poured into the city to support with blows and clamours a metaphysical argument, and the people zealously asserted the honour of the Virgin, whose body reposed within the walls of Ephesus<sup>t</sup> The fleet which had transported Cyril from Alexandria was laden with the riches of Egypt, and he disembarked a numerous body of mariners, slaves, and fanatics, enlisted with blind obedience under the banner of St Mark and the mother of God The fathers, and even the guards, of the council were awed by this martial array, the adversaries of Cyril and Mary were insulted in the streets, or threatened in their houses, his eloquence and liberality made a daily increase in the number of his adherents, and the Egyptian soon computed that he might command the attendance and the voices of two hundred bishops<sup>u</sup> But the author of the twelve anathemas foresaw and dreaded the opposition of John of Antioch, who, with a small, though respectable, train of metropolitans and divines, was advancing by slow journeys from the distant capital of the east Impatient of a delay which he stigmatized as voluntary and culpable,<sup>x</sup> Cyril announced the opening of the synod sixteen days after the festival of Pentecost Nestorius, who depended on the near approach of his eastern friends, persisted, like his predecessor tom iii p 551—591 edit Venice, 1729) the Annals of Baronius and Pagi, and the faithful collections of Tillemont (Mem Eccles. tom xiv p 283—377)

<sup>s</sup> The christians of the four first centuries were ignorant of the death and burial of Mary The tradition of Ephesus is affirmed by the synod (scilicet oecumenice synodus ephesina) as the venerable tradition of the synod (scilicet oecumenice synodus ephesina) yet it has been superseded by the claim of Jerusalem and her empty sepulchre as it was shown to the pilgrim produced the fable of her resurrection and as impious in which the Greek and Latin churches have piously acquiesced See Baronius (Annal Eccles. A. D. 431. No 6 &c) and Tillemont (Mem Eccles. tom i p 467—477)

<sup>t</sup> The Acts of Chalcedon (Concil. tom iv p 140. 148) exhibit a lively picture of the illiberal, obstinate servitude of the bishops of Egypt to their patriarch

<sup>x</sup> Cyril or ecclesiastical business detained the bishops at Antioch till the 18th of May Ephesus was at the distance of thirty days journey

<sup>p</sup> See Ducange C. P. Christiani, l. i. p. 30, &c

<sup>q</sup> Concil. tom iii p 913 They have never been directly approved by the church (Tillemont, Mem Eccles. tom xiv p 363—372) I almost pity the agony of rage and sophistry with which Pelagius seems to be agitated in the sixth book of his De vita Theologica

<sup>r</sup> Such as the rational Bavinage (ad tom I Varior. Lectum. Causam in Prefat. c. ii p 11—23) and La Croze the universal scholar (Christianisme des Indes tom i p 16—20 De l'Inde, p 26 27 Thesaur. Epist. p 176 &c 283 285) His free sentence is confirmed by that of his friends Jahnke (Thesaur. Epist. tom i p 193—201) and Mosheim (Instit. p 304 Nestorius crimine carni et carnalibus sententiis) and three more respectable judges will not easily be found Assemian a learned and modest slave can hardly discern (Bibliothec. Orient. tom i p 100—221) the guilt and error of the Nestorians

<sup>s</sup> The origin and progress of the Nestorian controversy till the synod of Ephesus may be found in Socrates (l. vii c. 32) Sozomenus (l. i c. 1 2) Theodoret (l. i c. 1—4) the original Acts (Concil.

Chrysostom, to disclaim the jurisdiction, and to disobey the summons, of his enemies they hastened his trial, and his accuser presided in the seat of judgment. Sixty-eight bishops, twenty-two of metropolitan rank, defended his cause by a modest and temperate protest they were excluded from the councils of their brethren. Candidian, in the emperor's name, requested a delay of four days the profane magistrate was driven with outrage and insult from the assembly of the saints.

Condemnation of Nestorius, June 22. The whole of this momentous transaction was crowded into the compass of a summer's day the bishops delivered their separate opinions, but the uniformity of style reveals the influence or the hand of a master, who has been accused of corrupting the public evidence of their acts and subscriptions. Without a dissenting voice, they recognized, in the epistles of Cyril, the Nicene creed and the doctrine of the fathers but the partial extracts from the letters and homilies of Nestorius were interrupted by curses and anathemas, and the heretic was degraded from his episcopal and ecclesiastical dignity. The sentence, maliciously inscribed to the new Judas, was affixed and proclaimed in the streets of Ephesus the weary prelates, as they issued from the church of the mother of God, were saluted as her champions, and her victory was celebrated by the illuminations, the songs, and the tumult of the night.

Opposition of the orientals, June 27, &c. On the fifth day, the triumph was clouded by the arrival and indignation of the eastern bishops. In a chamber of the inn before he had wiped the dust from his shoes, John of Antioch gave audience to Candidian the imperial minister, who related his ineffectual efforts to prevent or to annul the hasty violence of the Egyptian. With equal haste and violence, the oriental synod of fifty bishops degraded Cyril and Memnon from their episcopal honours, condemned, in the twelve anathemas, the purest venom of the Apollinarian heresy, and described the Alexandrian primate as a monster, born and educated for the destruction of the church. His throne was distant and inaccessible, but they instantly resolved to bestow on the flock of Ephesus the blessing of a faithful shepherd. By the vigilance of Memnon, the churches were shut against them, and a strong garrison was thrown into the cathedral. The troops, under the command of Candidian, advanced to the assault, the outguards were routed and put to the sword, but the place was impregnable the besiegers and ten days more may be fairly allowed for accidents and repose. The march of Memnon over the same ground enumerates above 260 parings or leagues and this measure might be illustrated from ancient and modern hierarchies, if I knew how to compare the speed of an army, a synod, and a caravan. John of Antioch is reluctantly acquitted by Tillemont himself (Mém. Eccles. tom. xiv. p. 396—399).

<sup>7</sup> Μεμνονιαν μὴ κατὰ το δόντα ἐν Ἐφέσῳ συντεθῆναι ἐπισημασθαι πανοικίῳ δὲ καὶ τῇ αἰσχυρῇ καὶ οὐκ ἐκκλησιαστικῇ ἐνταύθι, l. i. c. 7. The same imputation was urged by count Irenæus (tom. iii. p. 1249) and the orthodox critics do not find it any easy task to defend the purity of the Greek or Latin copies of the Acts.

<sup>8</sup> ὁ δὲ ἐν ὁλέθῳ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν τεχνεῖται καὶ τραφεῖ. After the evaluation of John and Cyril these invectives were mutually forgotten. The style of declamation must never be confounded with the genuine sense which respectable enemies entertain of each other's merit. (Concil. tom. i. p. 124.)

retired, their retreat was pursued by a vigorous sally, they lost their horses, and many of the soldiers were dangerously wounded with clubs and stones. Ephesus, the city of the Virgin, was defiled with rage and clamour, with sedition and blood, the rival synods darted anathemas and excommunications from their spiritual engines, and the court of Theodosius was perplexed by the adverse and contradictory narratives of the Syrian and Egyptian factions. During a busy period of three months, the emperor tried every method, except the most effectual means of indifference and contempt, to reconcile this theological quarrel. He attempted to remove or intimidate the leaders by a common sentence of acquittal or condemnation, he invested his representatives at Ephesus with ample power and military force he summoned from either party eight chosen deputies to a free and candid conference in the neighbourhood of the capital, far from the contagion of popular frenzy. But the orientals refused to yield, and the catholics, proud of their numbers and of their Latin allies, rejected all terms of union or toleration. The patience of the meek Theodosius was provoked, and he dissolved in anger this episcopal tumult, which at the distance of thirteen centuries assumes the venerable aspect of the third oecumenical council. "God is my witness," said the pious prince, "that I am not the author of this confusion. His providence will discern and punish the guilty. Return to your provinces, and may your private virtues repair the mischief and scandal of your meeting." They returned to their provinces, but the same passions which had distracted the synod of Ephesus were diffused over the eastern world. After three obstinate and equal campaigns, John of Antioch and Cyril of Alexandria concended to explain and embrace but their seeming re-union must be imputed rather to prudence than to reason, to the mutual lassitude rather than to the christian charity of the patriarchs.

The Byzantine pontiff had instilled <sup>Victory of Cyril, A. D. 431—435</sup> into the royal ear a baleful prejudice against the character and conduct of his Egyptian rival. An epistle of menace and invective, which accompanied the summons, accused him as a busy, insolent, and envious priest, who perplexed the simplicity of the faith, violated the peace of the church and state, and, by his artful and separate addresses to the wife and sister of Theodosius, presumed to suppose, or to scatter, the seeds of discord in the imperial family. At the stern command of his sovereign, Cyril had repaired to Ephesus, where he was resisted, threatened, and confined, by the magistrates in the interest of Nestorius and the orientals, who assembled the troops of Lydia and Ionia to suppress the fanatic and disorderly train of the patriarch. Without expecting the royal licence, he escaped from his guards, precipitately embarked, deserted the imperfect synod, and retired to his episcopal fortress of safety and independence. But his artful emissaries, both in the court and city, successfully laboured to appease the resentment, and to conciliate the favour, of the emperor. The feeble son of Arcadius was alternately swayed by his wife and sister, by the eunuchs and women of the palace. Superstition and avarice were their ruling passions, and the orthodox chiefs were assiduous in their endeavours to alarm the former, and to gratify the latter. Constantinople and the suburbs were sanctified with frequent monasteries, and the holy abbots, Dalmatius and Eutyches,<sup>c</sup> had devoted their zeal and fidelity to the cause of Cyril, the worship of Mary, and the unity of Christ. From the first moment of their monastic life, they had never mingled with the world, or trod the profane ground of the city. But in this awful moment of the danger of the church, their vow was superseded by a more sublime and indispensable duty. At the head of a long order of monks and hermits, who carried burning tapers in their hands, and chanted hymns to the mother of God, they proceeded from their monasteries to the palace. The people were edified and inflamed by this extraordinary spectacle, and the trembling monarch listened to the prayers and adjurations of the saints, who boldly pronounced, that none could hope for salvation, unless they embraced the person and the creed of the orthodox successor of Athanasius. At the same time every avenue of the throne was assaulted with gold. Under the decent names of eulogies and benedictions, the courtiers of both sexes were bribed according to the measure of their power and rapaciousness. But their incessant demands despoiled the sanctuaries of Constantinople and Alexandria, and the authority of the patriarch was unable to silence the just murmur of his clergy, that a debt of sixty thousand pounds had already been contracted to support the expense of this scandalous corruption.<sup>d</sup> Pulcheria, who relieved her brother from the weight of an empire, was the firmest pillar of orthodoxy, and so intimate was the alliance between the thunders of the synod and the whispers of the court, that Cyril was assured of success if he could displace one eunuch, and substitute another in the favour of Theodosius. Yet the Egyptian could not boast of a glorious or decisive victory. The emperor, with unaccustomed firmness, adhered to his promise of protecting the innocence of the oriental bishops, and Cyril softened his anathemas, and confessed, with ambiguity and reluctance, a twofold nature of Christ, before he was permitted to satiate his revenge against the unfortunate Nestorius.<sup>e</sup>

<sup>a</sup> See the Acts of the Synod of Ephesus in the original Greek, and a Latin version almost contemporary (Concil. tom. iii. p. 921—133) with the Synodicon adversus Tragediam Irenæi, tom. iv. p. 235—497) the Ecclesiastical Histories of Socrates (l. iii. c. 34) and Sozomenus (l. v. c. 3, 4, 5) and the Breviary of Liberius (in Concil. tom. vi. p. 419—450 c. 5, 6.) and the Mémoires Eccles. of Tillemont, (tom. xiv. p. 377—487).

<sup>b</sup> Ταραχὴν (says the emperor in pointed language) τὸ γὰρ ἐπὶ σαυτῷ καὶ χωρισμὸν τοῖς ἐκκλησίαις ἐμβέβηκε καὶ θρασυτέρως ὁμιεῖς τρεπομένη μάλλον ἢ ἀκριβεῖς καὶ ποικιλίας μάλλον τούτων οὐκ ὀφείλουσιν ὑπερ ἀπλοῦς πάντες μάλλον ἢ ἱερῆς τὰ γὰρ τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν τὰ γὰρ τῶν βασιλέων μελλόντων χωρὶς βουλεύεσθαι οὐκ ὀκνῶ ἀφορμὴν ἕτερας εὐδοκίμους. I should be curious to know how much Nestorius paid for these expressions so mortifying to his rival.

The rash and obstinate Nestorius, before the end of the synod, was oppressed by Cyril, betrayed by the court, and faintly supported by his eastern friends. A sentiment of fear or indignation prompted him, while it was yet time, to affect the glory of a voluntary abdication.<sup>f</sup> His wish, or at least his request, was readily granted, he was conducted with honour from Ephesus to his old monastery of Antioch, and, after a short pause, his successors, Maximian and Proclus, were acknowledged as the lawful bishops of Constantinople. But in the silence of his cell, the degraded patriarch could no longer resume the innocence and security of a private monk. The past he regretted, he was discontented with the present, and the future he had reason to dread. The oriental bishops successively disengaged their cause from his unpopular name, and each day decreased the number of the schismatics who revered Nestorius as the confessor of the faith. After a residence at Antioch of four years, the hand of Theodosius subscribed an edict,<sup>g</sup> which ranked him with Simon the magician, proscribed his opinions and followers, condemned his writings to the flames, and banished his person first to Petra in Arabia, and at length to Oasis, one of the islands of the Libyan desert.<sup>h</sup> Secluded from the church and from the world, the exile was still pursued by the rage of bigotry and war. A wandering tribe of the Blemmyes or Nubians invaded his solitary prison. In their retreat they dismissed a crowd of useless captives, but no sooner had Nestorius reached the banks of the Nile, than he would gladly have escaped from a Roman and orthodox city to the milder servitude of the savages. His flight was

Exile of Nestorius
A D 435

<sup>c</sup> Eutyches, the heresiarch Eutyches, is honourably named by Cyril as a friend, a saint, and the strenuous defender of the faith. His brother, the abbot Dalmatius, is likewise employed to bind the emperor and all his chamberlains terribili conjuratione. Synodicon, c. 203 in Concil. tom. iv. p. 467.

<sup>d</sup> Clerici quilibet sunt contritionis quod ecclesiam Alexandrinam nudata sit hujus causis turbata et debet propter illa quae hunc transmissa sunt auri libras mille quingentas. Et nunc est scriptum est ut praestet, sed de tua ecclesia praesta avaritiam quorum nudi &c. This curious and original letter, from Cyril's archdeacon to his creature the new bishop of Constantinople, has been unaccountably preserved in an old Latin version (Synodicon, c. 203 Concil. tom. iv. p. 465-468). The work is almost dropped, and the saints speak the honest language of interest and confederacy.

<sup>e</sup> The tedious negotiations that succeeded the synod of Ephesus are diffusely related in the original Acts (Concil. tom. iii. p. 1339-1771 ad fin. vol. and the Synodicon, in tom. iv.) Socrates (l. vi. c. 28. 35 40 41) Evagrius (l. i. c. 6, 7 & 12) Liberatus, (c. 7-10) Tillemont (Mém. Eccles. tom. xiv. p. 487-676). The most patient reader will think me for compressing so much nonsense and falsehood in a few lines.

<sup>f</sup> Αυτον τε αυθενθεντορ, εκετρατη κατα το οικειον επαναξεισαι μοναστηριον. Evagrius, l. i. c. 7. The original letters in the Synodicon (c. 15 24, 25 26) justify the appearance of a voluntary resignation, which is asserted by Ebed-Jesu a Nestorian writer, apud Asseman Biblioth. Oriental. tom. iii. p. 299 302.

<sup>g</sup> See the imperial letters in the Acts of the Synod of Ephesus (Concil. tom. iii. p. 1730-1735). The odious name of Simonians, which was affixed to the disciples of this τεραινωδον διδασκαλια, was designed ut αν οι ειδουσι προβληθεντες αιωνιον υπομεινουν τιμωριαν, των αμαρτηνιστων και μητε ζωντα τιμωριας, μητε θανοντα στυγιας εκτορ υπαρχειν. Yet these were christians who differed only in names and in shadows.

<sup>h</sup> The metaphor of islands is applied by the grave civilians (Pan-dec. l. xlviii. tit. 22. leg. 7) to those happy spots which are diseminated by water and verdure from the Libyan sands. Three of these under the common name of Osis or Alkaliat. 1. The temple of Jupiter Ammon. 2. The middle Oasis three days journey to the west of Lycopolis. 3. The southern, where Nestorius was banished in the first climate, and only three days' journey from the confines of Nubia. See a learned Note of Michaelis, (ad Descript. Ægypti Abu-feder, p. 21-34).

punished as a new crime the soul of the patriarch inspired the civil and ecclesiastical powers of Egypt, the magistrates, the soldiers, the monks devoutly tortured the enemy of Christ and St Cyril and, as far as the confines of Æthiopia, the heretic was alternately dragged and recalled, till his aged body was broken by the hardships and accidents of these reiterated journeys. Yet his mind was still independent and erect, the president of Thebais was awed by his pastoral letters, he survived the catholic tyrant of Alexandria, and, after sixteen years' banishment, the synod of Chalcedon would perhaps have restored him to the honours, or at least to the communion, of the church. The death of Nestorius prevented his obedience to their welcome summons,<sup>1</sup> and his disease might afford some colour to the scandalous report, that his tongue, the organ of blasphemy, had been eaten by the worms. He was buried in a city of Upper Egypt, known by the names of Chemnis, or Panopolis, or Akmim,<sup>2</sup> but the immortal malice of the Jacobites has persevered for ages to cast stones against his sepulchre, and to propagate the foolish tradition, that it was never watered by the rain of heaven, which equally descends on the righteous and the ungodly.<sup>3</sup> Humanity may drop a tear on the fate of Nestorius, yet justice must observe, that he suffered the persecution which he had approved and inflicted.<sup>4</sup>

The death of the Alexandrian patriarch, after a reign of thirty-two years, abandoned the catholics to the intemperance of zeal and the abuse of victory.<sup>5</sup> The Monophysite doctrine (one incarnate nature) was rigorously preached in the churches of Egypt and the monasteries of the east, the primitive creed of Apollinarius was protected by the sanctity of Cyril, and the name of EUTYCHES, his venerable friend, has been applied to the sect most adverse to the Syrian heresy of Nestorius. His rival Eutyches was the abbot, or archimandrite, or superior, of three hundred monks, but the opinions of a simple and illiterate recluse might have expired in the cell, where he had slept above seventy years, if the resentment or indiscretion of Flavian, the Byzantine pontiff, had not exposed the scandal to the eyes of the christian world. His domestic synod was instantly convened, their proceedings were sullied with clamour and artifice, and the aged heretic was surprised into a seeming confession, that Christ had not derived his body from the substance of the Virgin Mary. From their partial decree, Eutyches appealed to a general council, and his cause was vigorously asserted by his godson Chrysaphius, the reigning eunuch of the palace, and his accomplice Dioscorus, who had succeeded to the throne, the creed, the talents, and the vices of the nephew of Theophilus. By the special summons of Theodosius, the second synod of Ephesus was judiciously composed of ten metropolitans and ten bishops from each of the six dioceses of the eastern empire. Some exceptions of favour or merit enlarged the number to one hundred and thirty-five, and the Syrian Barsumas, as the chief and representative of the monks, was invited to sit and vote with the successors of the apostles. But the despotism of the Alexandrian patriarch again oppressed the freedom of debate: the same spiritual and carnal weapons were again drawn from the arsenals of Egypt, the Asiatic veterans, a band of archers, served under the orders of Dioscorus, and the more formidable monks, whose minds were inaccessible to reason or mercy, besieged the doors of the cathedral. The general, and, as it should seem, the unconstrained, voice of the fathers, accepted the faith and even the anathemas of Cyril, and the heresy of the two natures was formally condemned in the persons and writings of the most learned orientals. "May those who divide Christ be divided with the sword, may they be hewn in pieces, may they be burnt alive," were the charitable wishes of a christian synod.<sup>6</sup> The innocence and sanctity of Eutyches were acknowledged without hesitation, but the prelates, more especially those of Thrace and Asia, were unwilling to depose their patriarch for the use or even abuse of his lawful jurisdiction. They embraced the knees of Dioscorus, as he stood with a threatening aspect on the footstool of his throne, and conjured him to forgive the offences, and to respect the dignity, of his brother. "Do you mean to raise a sedition?" exclaimed the relentless tyrant. "Where are the officers?" At these words a furious multitude of monks and soldiers, with staves, and swords, and chains, burst into the church: the trembling bishops hid themselves behind the altar, or under the benches, and as they were not inspired with the zeal of martyrdom, they successively subscribed a blank paper, which was afterwards filled with the

Second council of Ephesus,
A. D. 449
Aug. 8-11

Heresy of Eutyches
A. D. 448.

<sup>1</sup> The invitation of Nestorius to the synod of Chalcedon, is related by Zacharias, bishop of Miletus (Epistola l. ii. c. 2. Assenian Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 55) and the famous Xenias or Philoxenus, bishop of Hierapolis, (Assenian Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 40 &c.) denied by L. A. Ritschl and Avenarius and strongly maintained by L. Croze (Thesaur. Epistol. tom. iii. p. 181, &c.) The fact is not improbable, yet it was the interest of the Monophysites to spread the malicious report and Eutyches (tom. ii. p. 12) affirms, that Nestorius died after an exile of seven years and consequently ten years before the synod of Chalcedon.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Hist. D. Anville (Mémoire sur l'Égypte p. 101) Pocock (Description of the East, vol. i. p. 76.) Abulfeda (Description d'Égypte p. 14) and his commentator Michaux (Not. p. 78-83) and the Arabian Geographer, (p. 42) who mention in the twelfth century the ruins and the quarries of Akmim.

<sup>3</sup> Eutyches (Annales tom. ii. p. 12) and Gregory Bar Hebraeus, or Abulpharajus (Assenian tom. ii. p. 312) represent the credulity of the tenth and eleventh centuries.

<sup>4</sup> We are obliged to Eusebius (l. i. c. 7) for some extracts from the letters of Nestorius, but the lively picture of his sufferings is treated with insill by the hard and stupid fanatic.

<sup>5</sup> Dixi Cyrillum dum viveret auctoritate et effecisse, ne Eutychianismus et Monophysitarum error in nervum erumperet idque verum pulso aliquo limbo modo paulatim eecinerat. The learned but cautious Jahnke did not always speak the whole truth. Cum Cyrillo lenissimissime eum, quum et tecum aut eum alius rei hujus probe pariter et regis rerum cardinalibus sermones privatos conferrem, Thesaur. Epistol. La Crozian. tom. i. p. 197, 198) an excellent key to his dissertations on the Nestorian controversy.

<sup>6</sup> ἡ ἀγία συνόδος ἐπέειπε, ὅπως, καὶ ὡς οὖν εὐσεβίαι, οἱ τοὶ ζωὴν καὶ αὐτοὺς ἐκ τοῦ γενναίου, ἡ ἐκ τῆς ἐκείνης ἐκείνης, εἰ τις λέγει διὰ ἀναθεμα. At the request of Dioscorus, those who were not able to roar (βόωναι) stretched out their hands. At Chalcedon the orientals declared these exclamations, but the Egyptians more consistently declared ταῦτα καὶ τότε εἰπομεν καὶ νῦν λεγομεν (Concil. tom. iv. p. 1012).

eye of Marcian and the senate of Constantinople. A quarter of a mile from the Thracian Bosphorus, the church of St Euphemia was built on the summit of a gentle though lofty ascent the triple structure was celebrated as a prodigy of art, and the boundless prospect of the land and sea might have raised the mind of a sectary to the contemplation of the God of the universe Six hundred and thirty bishops were ranged in order in the nave of the church, but the patriarchs of the east were preceded by the legates, of whom the third was a simple priest, and the place of honour was reserved for twenty laymen of consular or senatorian rank The gospel was ostentatiously displayed in the centre, but the rule of faith was defined by the papal and imperial ministers, who moderated the thirteen sessions of the council of Chalcedon Their partial interposition silenced the intemperate shouts and execrations, which degraded the episcopal gravity, but, on the formal accusation of the legates, Dioscorus was compelled to descend from his throne to the rank of a criminal, already condemned in the opinion of his judges The orientals, less adverse to Nestorius than to Cyril, accepted the Romans as their deliverers Thrace, and Pontus, and Asia, were exasperated against the murderer of Flavian, and the new patriarchs of Constantinople and Antioch secured their places by the sacrifice of their benefactor The bishops of Palestine, Macedonia, and Greece, were attached to the faith of Cyril, but in the face of the synod, in the heat of the battle, the leaders, with their obsequious train, passed from the right to the left wing, and decided the victory by this seasonable desertion Of the seventeen suffragans who sailed from Alexandria, four were tempted from their allegiance, and the thirteen, falling prostrate on the ground, implored the mercy of the council, with sighs and tears, and a pathetic declaration, that, if they yielded, they should be massacred, on their return to Egypt, by the indignant people A tardy repentance was allowed to expiate the guilt or error of the accomplices of Dioscorus but their sins were accumulated on his head, he neither asked nor hoped for pardon, and the moderation of those who pleaded for a general amnesty was drowned in the prevailing cry of victory and revenge To save the reputation of his late adherents, some personal offences were skilfully detected, his rash and illegal excommunication of the pope, and his contumacious refusal (while he was detained a prisoner) to attend the summons of the synod Witnesses were introduced to prove the special facts of his pride, avarice, and cruelty, and the fathers heard with abhorrence, that the alms of the church were lavished on the a The acts of the Council of Chalcedon, (Concil tom iv p 761—2071) comprehend those of Ephesus (p 890—1169) which again comprise the synod of Constantinople under Flavian (p 1330—1072) and it requires some attention to disentangle this double inclusion. The whole business of Eulyches Flavian, and Dioscorus is related by Erasmus (l i c 9—12, and l ii c 1—4) and Liberatus (Brev c 11—14). Once more, and almost for the last time, I appeal to the diligence of Tillamont (Mem Eccles tom xv p 129—719) The annals of Baronius and Pagi will accompany me much further on my long, and laborious journey female dancers, that his palace, and even his bath, was open to the prostitutes of Alexandria, and that the infamous Pansophia, or Irene, was publicly entertained as the concubine of the patriarch<sup>c</sup>

Faith of Chalcedon For these scandalous offences Dioscorus was deposed by the synod, and banished by the emperor, but the purity of his faith was declared in the presence, and with the tacit approbation, of the fathers. Their prudence supposed rather than pronounced the heresy of Eutyches, who was never summoned before their tribunal, and they sat silent and abashed, when a bold Monophysite, casting at their feet a volume of Cyril, challenged them to anathematize in his person the doctrine of the saint. If we fairly peruse the acts of Chalcedon as they are recorded by the orthodox party,<sup>d</sup> we shall find that a great majority of the bishops embraced the simple unity of Christ, and the ambiguous concession, that he was formed of or from two natures, might imply either their previous existence, or their subsequent confusion, or some dangerous interval between the conception of the man and the assumption of the God. The Roman theology, more positive and precise, adopted the term most offensive to the ears of the Egyptians, that Christ existed in two natures, and this momentous particle<sup>e</sup> (which the memory, rather than the understanding, must retain) had almost produced a schism among the catholic bishops. The tome of Leo had been respectfully, perhaps sincerely, subscribed, but they protested, in two successive debates, that it was neither expedient nor lawful to transgress the sacred landmarks which had been fixed at Nice, Constantinople, and Ephesus, according to the rule of Scripture and tradition. At length they yielded to the importunities of their masters, but their infallible decree, after it had been ratified with deliberate votes and vehement exclamations, was overturned in the next session by the opposition of the legates and their oriental friends. It was in vain that a multitude of episcopal voices repeated in chorus, "The definition of the fathers is orthodox and immutable! The heretics are now discovered! Anathema to the Nestorians! Let them depart from the synod! Let them repair to Rome!"<sup>f</sup> The legates threatened, the emperor was absolute, and a committee of eighteen bishops prepared a new decree, which was imposed on the reluctant assembly. In the name of the fourth general council, the Christ in one person, but in two natures, was announced to the catholic world. An invisible line was drawn between the heresy of Apollinarius and the faith of St. Cyril, and the road to paradise, a bridge as sharp as a razor, was suspended over the abyss by the master-hand of the theological artist. During ten centuries of blindness and servitude, Europe received her religious opinions from the oracle of the Vatican, and the same doctrine, already varnished with the rust of antiquity, was admitted without dispute into the creed of the reformers, who disclaimed the supremacy of the Roman pontiff. The synod of Chalcedon still triumphs in the protestant churches, but the ferment of controversy has subsided, and the most pious christians of the present day are ignorant, or careless, of their own belief concerning the mystery of the incarnation.

Far different was the temper of the Discord of the Greeks and Egyptians under the orthodox reigns of Leo and Marcian Those <sup>east. A.D. 451-482.</sup> pious emperors enforced with arms and edicts the symbol of their faith,<sup>g</sup> and it was declared by the conscience or honour of five hundred bishops, that the decrees of the synod of Chalcedon might be lawfully supported, even with blood. The catholics observed with satisfaction, that the same synod was odious both to the Nestorians and the Monophysites,<sup>h</sup> but the Nestorians were less angry, or less powerful, and the east was distracted by the obstinate and sanguinary zeal of the Monophysites. Jerusalem was occupied by an army of monks, in the name of the one incarnate nature they pillaged, they burnt, they murdered, the sepulchre of Christ was defiled with blood, and the gates of the city were guarded in tumultuous rebellion against the troops of the emperor. After the disgrace and exile of Dioscorus, the Egyptians still regretted their spiritual father, and detested the usurpation of his successor, who was introduced by the fathers of Chalcedon. The throne of Proterius was supported

<sup>c</sup> Χαλιστα η περιβοντος Πανσοφια η καλημενη Ορεινη (perhaps Ερινη) περι ης και η πολυαιθρωπος της Αλεξανδρειας δημοσ αφηκε φωνην οντως τε και τη εραστω μεμνημενος (Council tom iv p 1276). A specimen of the wit and malice of the people is preserved in the Greek Anthology, (l ii c v p 188 edit Wechel) although the application was unknown to the editor Braden. The nameless epigrammatist raises a tolerable pun by confounding the episcopal salutation of 'Peace be to all' with the genuine or corrupted name of the bishop's concubine.

<sup>d</sup> Ελλην ποταμοι, επισκοποις ειπεν επελθων, Πας δεικναισι πινον ην μουσ ενδον εχει, I am ignorant whether the patriarch who seems to have been a jealous lover is the Cimon of a preceding epigram, whose πειρ εσθλος was viewed with envy and wonder by Proterius himself.

<sup>e</sup> Those who reverence the infallibility of synods may try to ascertain their sense. The leading bishops were attended by partial or careless scribes who dispersed their copies round the world. Our Greek MSS are sullied with the false and proscribed reading of εκ των φρονων (Council tom iii p 1470) the authentic translation of pope Leo I does not seem to have been executed, and the old Latin versions materially differ from the present Vulgate which was revised (A.D. 529) by Himerius, a Roman priest from the best MSS of the Acemianists at Constantinople. DuRoi, C P Christians i c p 151 a famous monaster of Latin Greeks, and Syrians. See Council tom ii p 1189-2049 and Pael Critics tom li p 325 &c.

<sup>f</sup> It is darkly represented in the microscope of Pelagius, (tom v

l iii c 5) yet the subtle theologian is himself afraid—ne quis firmiter impervacandam et nimis anxiam putet huiusmodi oculorum inquisitionem, et ab instituti theologicæ gravitate alienam (p 124).

<sup>g</sup> Ισχυρον η ο ορος αρρεστω η απερχομενο οι οντιλογοντες παντα γενονται, οι οντιλογοντες δεσποσανοι εισι, οι οντιλογοντες εις Ρωμην απελθωνοι (Council tom ii p 1449). Eutychius and Liberatus present only the placid face of the synod, and discreetly slide over these embers supposititious emere dolos.

<sup>h</sup> See, in the Appendix to the Acts of Chalcedon the confirmation of the synod by Mircian (Council tom iv p 1781 1783) his letters to the monks of Alexandria (p 1791) of Mount Sinai, (p 1793) of Jerusalem and Palestine (p 1798) his laws against the Eutychians, (p 1800 1811 1831) the correspondence of Leo with the provincial synods on the resolution of Alexandria (p 1835, 1830).

<sup>y</sup> Photius (or rather Eulogius of Alexandria, confessor, in a fine passage the specious colour of this double charge against pope Leo and his synod of Chalcedon (Biblioth eccl cccxxv p 768). He waged a double war against the enemies of the church and wounded either foe with the darts of his adversary—κατ αλληλους βλεπον τους οντιλογους επιρωσκει. Against Nestorians he seemed to introduce the ουνοιοι of the Monophysites against Eutyches he appeared to countenance the ερωστωσαν διοσκου of the Nestorians. The apostle claims a charitable interpretation for the saints if the same had been extended to the heretics, the sound of the controversy would have been lost in the air.

by a guard of two thousand soldiers, he waged a five years' war against the people of Alexandria, and on the first intelligence of the death of Marcian, he became the victim of their zeal. On the third day before the festival of Easter, the patriarch was besieged in the cathedral, and murdered in the baptistery. The remains of his mangled corpse were delivered to the flames, and his ashes to the wind. and the deed was inspired by the vision of a pretended angel, an ambitious monk, who, under the name of Timothy the Cat,<sup>a</sup> succeeded to the place and opinions of Dioscorus. This deadly superstition was inflamed, on either side, by the principle and the practice of retaliation in the pursuit of a metaphysical quarrel, many thousands<sup>a</sup> were slain, and the christians of every degree were deprived of the substantial enjoyments of social life, and of the invisible gifts of baptism and the holy communion. Perhaps an extravagant fable of the times may conceal an allegorical picture of these fanatics, who tortured each other, and themselves. "Under the consulship of Venantius and Celer," says a grave bishop, "the people of Alexandria, and all Egypt, were seized with a strange and diabolical frenzy: great and small, slaves and freedmen, monks and clergy, the natives of the land, who opposed the synod of Chalcedon, lost their speech and reason, barked like dogs, and tore, with their own teeth, the flesh from their hands and arms."<sup>b</sup>

The disorders of thirty years at length produced the famous HENOTICON<sup>c</sup> of the emperor Zeno, which in his reign, and in that of Anastasius, was signed by all the bishops of the east, under the penalty of degradation and exile, if they rejected or infringed this salutary and fundamental law. The clergy may smile or groan at the presumption of a layman who defines the articles of faith, yet if he stoops to the humiliating task, his mind is less infected by prejudice or interest, and the authority of the magistrate can only be maintained by the concord of the people. It is in ecclesiastical story, that Zeno appears least contemptible, and I am not able to discern any Manichean or Eutychian guilt in the generous saying of Anastasius, That it was unworthy of an emperor to persecute the worshippers of Christ and the citizens of Rome. The Henoticon was most pleasing to the Egyptians, yet the smallest blemish has not been described by the jealous, and even jaundiced, eyes of our orthodox school-

<sup>a</sup> Αἰλουρος from his nocturnal expeditions. In darkness and disguise he crept round the cells of the monastery and whispered the revelation to his slumbering brethren (Theodor Leclerc l. 1.)

<sup>b</sup> Φανούριε τοι μνησθῆναι μνησθῆναι, αἰματωὶ πληθεὶ μολεῖσθαι μὴ μόνον τὴν γῆν ἀλλὰ καὶ αὐτὸν τὸν αἶρα. Such is the hyperbolic language of the Henoticon.

<sup>c</sup> See the Chronicle of Victor Tunnonensis, in the Lectiones Antiquae of Canisius republished by Hasnage, tom. i. p. 326.

<sup>d</sup> The Henoticon is transcribed by Eusebius (l. iii. c. 13) and translated by Liberius (Brev. c. 18) Pagi (Critica, l. iii. p. 414) and Assemani (Biblioth. Orient. tom. i. p. 343) are satisfied that it is free from heresy, but Pelagius (Dogmat. Theolog. tom. i. l. c. 13 p. 40) most unaccountably affirms Chalcedonism acerrime. An adversary would prove that he had never read the Henoticon.

<sup>e</sup> See Renaudot (Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 123 131 145 195 247) They were reconciled by the care of Mark I (A. D. 789-819) he promoted their chiefs to the bishoprics of Athribis and Talba, (perhaps

men, and it accurately represents the catholic faith of the incarnation, without adopting or disclaiming the peculiar terms or tenets of the hostile sects. A solemn anathema is pronounced against Nestorius and Eutyches, against all heretics by whom Christ is divided, or confounded, or reduced to a phantom. Without defining the number or the article of the word nature, the pure system of St. Cyril, the faith of Nice, Constantinople, and Ephesus, is respectfully confirmed, but, instead of bowing at the name of the fourth council, the subject is dismissed by the censure of all contrary doctrines, if any such have been taught either elsewhere or at Chalcedon. Under this ambiguous expression, the friends and the enemies of the last synod might unite in a silent embrace. The most reasonable christians acquiesced in this mode of toleration, but their reason was feeble and inconstant, and their obedience was despised as timid and servile by the vehement spirit of their brethren. On a subject which engrossed the thoughts and discourses of men, it was difficult to preserve an exact neutrality, a book, a sermon, a prayer, rekindled the flame of controversy, and the bonds of communion were alternately broken and renewed by the private animosity of the bishops. The space between Nestorius and Eutyches was filled by a thousand shades of language and opinion, the acephali<sup>d</sup> of Egypt, and the Roman pontiffs, of equal valour, though of unequal strength, may be found at the two extremities of the theological scale. The acephali, without a king or a bishop, were separated above three hundred years from the patriarchs of Alexandria, who had accepted the communion of Constantinople, without exacting a formal condemnation of the synod of Chalcedon. For accepting the communion of Alexandria, without a formal approbation of the same synod, the patriarchs of Constantinople were anathematized by the popes. Their inflexible despotism involved the most orthodox of the Greek churches in this spiritual contagion, denied or doubted the validity of their sacraments,<sup>e</sup> and fomented, thirty-five years, the schism of the east and west, till they finally abolished the memory of four Byzantine pontiffs, who had dared to oppose the supremacy of St. Peter.<sup>f</sup> Before that period, the precarious truce of Constantinople and Egypt had been violated by the zeal of the rival prelates. Macedonius, who was suspected of the Nestorian heresy, asserted, in disgrace and exile, the synod of Chalcedon, while the successor ΤΙΝΑ. See D'Anville, p. 82) and supplied the sacraments, which had failed for want of an episcopal ordination.

<sup>e</sup> De his quos baptizavit, quos ordinavit Acacius, myrorum traditione confectam et veram, præcipue religionis sollicitudinem congruam præbentem sine difficultate medicinam (Galactus, in epist. ad Euphemium Concil. tom. i. 286) The offer of a medicine proves the disease, and numbers must have perished before the arrival of the Roman physician. Tillemont himself (Mem. Eccles. tom. xvi. p. 772 642, &c.) is shocked at the proud uncharitable temper of the popes: they are now glad, says he, to invoke St. Flavian of Antioch St. Elirs of Jerusalem, &c. to whom they refused communion whilst upon earth. But Cardinal Baronius is firm and hard as the rock of St. Peter.

<sup>f</sup> Their names were erased from the diptych of the church: ex venerabilis diptychi, in quo prae memorie transiunt ad calicem habentium episcoporum vocabula continentur (Concil. tom. ii. p. 1846) This ecclesiastical record was therefore equivalent to the book of life.

of Cyril would have purchased its overthrow with a bribe of two thousand pounds of gold

The Trisagion, and religious war till the death of Anastasius, A D 503-518.

In the fever of the times, the sense, or rather the sound, of a syllable, was sufficient to disturb the peace of an empire. The TRISAGION,<sup>a</sup> (three holy,) "Holy, holy, holy Lord God of hosts!" is supposed, by the Greeks, to be the identical hymn which the angels and cherubim eternally repeat before the throne of God, and which, about the middle of the fifth century, was miraculously revealed to the church of Constantinople. The devotion of Antioch soon added, "who was crucified for us!" and this grateful address, either to Christ alone, or to the whole Trinity, may be justified by the rules of theology, and has been gradually adopted by the catholics of the east and west. But it had been imagined by a monophysite bishop,<sup>b</sup> the gift of an enemy was at first rejected as a dire and dangerous blasphemy, and the rash innovation had nearly cost the emperor Anastasius his throne and his life. The people of Constantinople were devoid of any rational principles of freedom, but they held, as a lawful cause of rebellion, the colour of a livery in the races, or the colour of a mystery in the schools. The Trisagion, with and without this obnoxious addition, was chanted in the cathedral by two adverse choirs, and when their lungs were exhausted, they had recourse to the more solid arguments of sticks and stones. The aggressors were punished by the emperor, and defended by the patriarch, and the crown and mitre were staked on the event of this momentous quarrel. The streets were instantly crowded with innumerable swarms of men, women, and children, the legions of monks, in regular array, marched, and shouted, and fought at their head, "Christians! this is the day of martyrdom! let us not desert our spiritual father, anathema to the Manichean tyrant! he is unworthy to reign!" Such was the catholic cry, and the galleys of Anastasius lay upon their oars before the palace, till the patriarch had pardoned his penitent, and hushed the waves of the troubled multitude. The triumph of Macedonius was checked by a speedy evil, but the zeal of his flock was again exasperated by the same question, "Whether one of the Trinity had been crucified?" On this momentous occasion, the blue and green factions of Constantinople suspended their discord, and the civil and military powers were annihilated in their presence. The keys of the city, and the standards of the guards, were deposited in the forum of Constantine, the principal station and camp of the faithful. Day and night they were incessantly busied either in singing hymns to the honour of their God, or in pillaging and murdering the servants of their prince. The head of his favourite monk, the friend, as they styled him, of the enemy of the Holy Trinity, was borne aloft on a spear, and the fire-brands, which had been darted against heretical structures, diffused the undistinguishing flames over the most orthodox buildings. The statues of the emperor were broken, and his person was concealed in a suburb, till, at the end of three days, he dared to implore the mercy of his subjects. Without his diadem, and in the posture of a suppliant, Anastasius appeared on the throne of the circus. The catholics, before his face, rehearsed their genuine Trisagion, they exulted in the offer which he proclaimed by the voice of a herald, of abdicating the purple, they listened to the admonition, that, since all could not reign, they should previously agree in the choice of a sovereign, and they accepted the blood of two unpopular ministers, whom their master, without hesitation, condemned to the lions. These furious but transient seditions were encouraged by the success of Vitalian, who, with an army of Huns and Bulgarians, for the most part idolaters, declared himself the champion of the catholic faith. In this pious rebellion he depopulated Thrace, besieged Constantinople, exterminated sixty-five thousand of his fellow-Christians, till he obtained the recall of the bishops, the satisfaction of the pope, and the establishment of the council of Chalcedon, an orthodox treaty, reluctantly signed by the dying Anastasius, and more faithfully performed by the uncle of Justinian. And such was the event of the first of the religious wars, which have been waged in the name, and by the disciples, of the God of peace.<sup>c</sup>

First religious war, A D 514

Justinian has been already seen in the various lights of a prince, a conqueror, and a lawgiver. The theologian<sup>d</sup> still remains, and it affords an unfavourable prejudice, that his theology should form a very prominent feature of his portrait. The sovereign sympathized with his subjects in their superstitious reverence for living and departed saints, his Code, and more especially his Novels, confirm and enlarge the privileges of the clergy, and in every dispute between a monk and a layman, the partial judge was inclined to pronounce that truth,

Theological character and government of Justinian, A D 510-565

<sup>a</sup> Petavins (Dogmat. Theolog. tom. v. l. r. c. 2-4 p. 217-225) and Tillemont (Mem. Eccles. tom. xiv. p. 713 &c. 799) represent the history and doctrine of the Trisagion. In the twelve centuries between Isaiah and St. Proclus a boy, who was taken up into heaven before the bishop and people of Constantinople the son, was considerably improved. The boy heard the angels sing "Holy God! Holy strong! Holy immortal!"

<sup>b</sup> Peter Gnapheus, the fuller (a trade which he had exercised in his monastery) patriarch of Antioch. His tedious story is discussed in the Annals of Pagi (A D 477-490) and a dissertation of M. de Valois at the end of his Evagrius.

<sup>c</sup> The troubles under the reign of Anastasius must be gathered from the Chronicle of Victor Marcellinus, and Theophanes. As the last was not published till the time of Baronius, his editio Pa. is more copious as well as more correct.

<sup>d</sup> The general history, from the council of Chalcedon to the death of Anastasius, may be found in the Breviary of Liberatus (c. 14-19) the second and third books of Evagrius, the Abstract of the two books of Theodoret the Reader, the Acts of the Synods and the epistles of the Popes (Concil. tom. v.) The series is continued with some disorder in the fifteenth and sixteenth tomes of the Memoires Ecclesiastiques of Tillemont. And here I must take leave for ever of that incomparable guide—whose bigotry is overbalanced by the merits of erudition, diligence, veracity, and scrupulous minuteness. He was prevented by death from completing, as he designed, the sixth century of the church and empire.

<sup>e</sup> The strain of the Anecdotes of Procopius (c. 11. 13. 18. 27. 28) with the learned remarks of Aemilianus is confirmed rather than contradicted by the Acts of the Councils the fourth book of Evagrius and the complaints of the African Frigidus in his twelfth book—de tribus capitulis "cum videri doctus appetit importune spontaneis questionibus ecclesiam turbat." See Procop. de Bell. Goth. l. iii. c. 3.

and innocence, and justice, were always on the side of the church. In his public and private devotions, the emperor was assiduous and exemplary, his prayers, vigils, and fasts, displayed the austere penance of a monk, his fancy was amused by the hope or belief, of personal inspiration, he had secured the patronage of the Virgin and St Michael the archangel, and his recovery from a dangerous disease was ascribed to the miraculous succour of the holy martyrs Cosmas and Damian. The capital and the provinces of the east were decorated with the monuments of his religion,<sup>m</sup> and though the far greater part of these costly structures may be attributed to his taste or ostentation, the zeal of the royal architect was probably quickened by a genuine sense of love and gratitude towards his invisible benefactors. Among the titles of imperial greatness, the name of Pious was most pleasing to his ear, to promote the temporal and spiritual interest of the church, was the serious business of his life, and the duty of father of his country was often sacrificed to that of defender of the faith. The controversies of the times were congenial to his temper and understanding, and the theological professors must inwardly deride the diligence of a stranger, who cultivated their art and neglected his own. "What can ye fear," said a bold conspirator to his associates, "from your bigoted tyrant? Sleepless and unarmed he sits whole nights in his closet, debating with reverend grey-beards, and turning over the pages of ecclesiastical volumes."<sup>n</sup> The fruits of these lucubrations were displayed in many a conference, where Justinian might shine as the loudest and most subtle of the disputants, in many a sermon, which, under the name of edicts and epistles, proclaimed to the empire the theology of their master. While the barbarians invaded the provinces, while the victorious legions marched under the banners of Belisarius and Narses, the successor of Trajan, unknown to the camp, was content to vanquish at the head of a synod. Had he invited to these synods a disinterested and rational spectator, Justinian might have learned, "that religious controversy is the offspring of arrogance and folly, that true piety is most laudably expressed by silence and submission, that man, ignorant of his own nature, should not presume to scrutinize the nature of his God, and that it is sufficient for us to know, that power and benevolence are the perfect attributes of the Deity."<sup>o</sup>

His persecution
Toleration was not the virtue of the times, and indulgence to rebels has seldom been the virtue of princes. But when the prince descends to the narrow and peevish character of a disputant, he is easily provoked to supply the defect of argument by the plenitude of power, and to eliasise without mercy the perverse blindness of those who wilfully shut their eyes against the light of demonstration. The reign of Justinian was a uniform yet various scene of persecution, and he appears to have surpassed his indolent predecessors, both in the contrivance of his laws and the rigour of their execution. The insufficient term of three months was assigned for the conversion or exile of all heretics,<sup>p</sup> and if he still connived at their precarious stay, they were deprived, under his iron yoke, not only of the benefits of society, but of the common birth-right of men and christians. At the end of four hundred years, the Montanists of Phrygia<sup>q</sup> still breathed the wild enthusiasm of perfection and prophecy, which they had imbibed from their male and female apostles, the special organs of the Paraclete. On the approach of the catholic priests and soldiers, they grasped with alacrity the crown of martyrdom, the conventicle and the congregation perished in the flames, but these primitive fanatics were not extinguished three hundred years after the death of their tyrant. Under the protection of the Gothic confederates, the church of the Arians of Constantinople had braved the severity of the laws: their clergy equalled the wealth and magnificence of the senate, and the gold and silver which was seized by the rapacious hand of Justinian might perhaps be claimed as the spoils of the provinces and the trophies of the barbarians. A secret remnant of pagans, who still lurked in the most refined and the most rustic conditions of mankind, excited the indignation of the christians, who were perhaps unwilling that any strangers should be the witnesses of their intestine quarrels. A bishop was named as the inquisitor of the faith, and his diligence soon discovered in the court and city, the magistrates, lawyers, physicians, and sophists, who still cherished the superstition of the Greeks. They were sternly informed that they must choose without delay between the displeasure of Jupiter or Justinian, and that their aversion to the gospel could no longer be disguised under the scandalous mask of indifference or impiety. The patrician Photius perhaps alone was resolved to live and to die like his ancestors: he enfranchised himself with the stroke of a dagger, and left his tyrant the poor consolation of exposing with ignominy the lifeless corpse of the fugitive. His weaker brethren submitted to their earthly monarch, underwent the ceremony of baptism, and laboured, by their extraordinary zeal to erase the suspicion, or

<sup>m</sup> Procop de Edificiis, l. i. c. 6, 7 &c passim

<sup>n</sup> Ος δε καθ'ηται αρι λακτος ες αει ετι λεσχης τινας αωρι νεκτων ομν τοις των ιερων γεγραμεισιν ασεχας αιετις ελκειν τα Χριστιανων λογισματα ομν εχων. Procop de Bell Goth l. iii. c. 32. In the life of St Eutychius (apud Aleman ad Procop Arcan. c. 18) the same character is given with a design to praise Justinian.

<sup>o</sup> For these wise and moderate sentiments Procopius (de Bell Goth l. i. c. 3.) is secur'd in the preface of Alemannus, who ranks him among the political christians—sed longe verius heresum omnium sententias, prorsusque Atheos—abominabile aliteris who preached the imitation of God's mercy in man, (ad Hist Arcan. c. 13.)

<sup>p</sup> This alternative a precious circumstance, is preserved by John Malala, (tom ii. p. 63 edit Venet 1733) who deserves more credit as he draws towards his end. After numbering the heretics Nestorians, Eutychians &c. he expectsent says Justinian nil diu veni judicem iur jubemus enim ut convicti et aperti heretici iustas et idoneas animadversioni subiaciantur. Baronius copies and applauds this edict of the Code (A. D. 527 No 37 46)

<sup>q</sup> See the character and principles of the Montanists, in Mosheim de Rebus Christianis Constantinum, p. 410—424

to expiate the guilt, of idolatry The native country of Homer, and the theatre of the Trojan war, still retained the last sparks of his mythology by the care of the same bishop, seventy thousand pagans were detected and converted in Asia, Phrygia, Lydia, and Caria, ninety-six churches were built for the new proselytes, and linen vestments, Bibles, and liturgies, and vases of gold and silver, were supplied by the pious munificence of

Justinian<sup>r</sup> The Jews, who had been of Jews,

gradually stripped of their immunities, were oppressed by a vexatious law, which compelled them to observe the festival of Easter the same day on which it was celebrated by the christians<sup>s</sup> And they might complain with the more reason, since the catholics themselves did not agree with the astronomical calculations of their sovereign the people of Constantinople delayed the beginning of their Lent a whole week after it had been ordained by authority, and they had the pleasure of fasting seven days, while meat was exposed for sale by the command of the emperor The Samaritans of Palestine<sup>t</sup> were a motley race,

an ambiguous sect, rejected as Jews by the pagans, by the Jews as schismatics, and by the christians as idolaters The abomination of the cross had already been planted on their holy mount of Garizim,<sup>u</sup> but the persecution of Justinian offered only the alternative of baptism or rebellion They chose the latter under the standard of a desperate leader, they rose in arms, and retaliated their wrongs on the lives, the property, and the temples, of a defenceless people The Samaritans were finally subdued by the regular forces of the east twenty thousand were slain, twenty thousand were sold by the Arabs to the infidels of Persia and India, and the remains of that unhappy nation atoned for the crime of treason by the sin of hypocrisy It has been computed that one hundred thousand Roman subjects were extirpated in the Samaritan war,<sup>v</sup> which converted the once fruitful province into a desolate and smoking wilderness But in the creed of Justinian, the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers, and he piously

<sup>r</sup> Theophan Chron p 153 John, the monophysite bishop of Asia is a more authentic witness of this transaction in which he was himself employed by the emperor (Asseman Bib Orient tom ii p 85)

<sup>s</sup> Compare Procopius (Hist. Arcan c 28 and Aleman's Notes) with Theophanes (Chron p 180) The council of Nice has intrusted the patriarch or rather the astronomers of Alexandria with the annual proclamation of Easter and we still read, or rather we do not read, many of the Paschal epistles of St Cyril Since the reign of monophysitism in Egypt, the catholics were perplexed by such a fondly prejudiced as that which so long, opposed, among the protestants, the reception of the Gregorian style

<sup>t</sup> For the religion and history of the Samaritans, consult Basmage, Histoire des Juifs a learned and impartial work

<sup>u</sup> Sitium Neapolis Naples the ancient and modern seat of the Samaritans is situate in a valley between the barren Ebal, the mountain of cursing in the north and the fruitful Garizim or mountain of cursing in the south, ten or eleven hours travel from Jerusalem See Maundrell Journey from Aleppo &c p 59-63

<sup>v</sup> Procop. Anecd. c 11 Theophan Chron p 122 John Malala Chron tom ii p 62 I remember an observation half philosophical, half misanthropic that the province which had been ruined by the bigotry of Justinian was the same through which the Mahometans penetrated into the empire

<sup>y</sup> The expression of Procopius is remarkable αὐτὸν γὰρ οὐδοκεῖ φοβεῖσθαι αὐτῶν ἐναντίον, ὅτι γε μὴ τῆς αὐτοῦ δοξῆς οἱ τελευτῶντες τεύχοντες οὐκ ἔσονται

<sup>z</sup> See the Chronicle of Victor, p 328 and the original evidence of the laws of Justinian During the first years of his reign, Baranus him-

laboured to establish with fire and sword the unity of the christian faith<sup>z</sup>

With these sentiments, it was incumbent on him, at least, to be always in the right In the first years of his administration, he signalized his zeal as the disciple and patron of orthodoxy the reconciliation of the Greeks and Latins established the tome of St Leo as the creed of the emperor and the empire, the Nestorians and Eutychians were exposed, on either side, to the double edge of persecution, and the four synods, of Nice, Constantinople, Ephesus, and Chalcedon, were ratified by the code of a catholic lawgiver<sup>a</sup> But while Justinian strove to maintain the uniformity of faith and worship, his wife Theodora, whose vices were not incompatible with devotion, had listened to the monophysite teachers, and the open or clandestine enemies of the church revived and multiplied at the smile of their gracious patroness The capital, the palace, the nuptial bed, were torn by spiritual discord, yet so doubtful was the sincerity of the royal consorts, that their seeming disagreement was imputed by many to a secret and mischievous confederacy against the religion and happiness of their people<sup>b</sup> The famous dispute of the THREE CHAPTERS,<sup>b</sup> which has filled more volumes than it deserves lines, is deeply marked with this subtle and disingenuous spirit It was now three hundred years since the body of Origen<sup>c</sup> had been eaten by the worms his soul, of which he held the pre-existence, was in the hands of its Creator, but his writings were eagerly perused by the monks of Palestine In these writings, the piercing eye of Justinian descried more than ten metaphysical errors, and the primitive doctor, in the company of Pythagoras and Plato, was devoted by the clergy to the eternity of hell-fire, which he had presumed to deny Under the cover of this precedent, a treacherous blow was aimed at the council of Chalcedon The fathers had listened without impatience to the praise of Theodore of Mopsuestia,<sup>d</sup> and their justice or indulgence had restored both Theodoret of Cyrrhus, and Ibas of Edessa, to the communion

His orthodoxy

The three chapters, A D 532-536.

self is in extreme good humour with the emperor, who courted the popes, till he got them into his power

<sup>a</sup> Procopius, Anecd. c 13 Evagrius, l iv c 10 If the ecclesiastical never read the sacred historian, their common suspicion proves at least the general hatred

<sup>b</sup> On the subject of the three chapters the original acts of the fifth general council of Constantinople supply much useless, though authentic knowledge (Concil. tom vi p 1-419) The Creek Evagrius is less copious and correct (l iv c 39) than the three zealous Africans, Faustinus, (in his twelve books, de tribus capitulis, which are most correctly published by Simond,) Liberatus (in his Breviarium c 22-24) and Victor Thunnenensis in his Chronicle, (in tom i Antiq. Lect. Canon, p 330-334) (The Liber Pantheus, or Anastasius (in vi. lio, Pelagius, &c) is original, Italian evidence The underwriter will derive some information from Dupin (Bibliot. Eccles. tom i p 180-207) and Basmage (Hist. de l'Eglise, tom i p 519-541) yet the latter is too firmly resolved to depreciate the authority and character of the popes

<sup>c</sup> Origen had indeed too great a propensity to imitate the αὐαὶν and διὰ πείρα of the old philosophers (Justinian ad Mennum in Concil. tom vi p 356) His moderate opinions were too repugnant to the zeal of the church, and he was found guilty of the heresy of reason

<sup>d</sup> Basmage (Præfat p 11-14 ad tom i Antiq. Lect. Cant.) has fairly weighed the limit and innocence of Theodore of Mopsuestia. If he composed 10 000 volumes as many errors would be a charitable allowance In all the subsequent catalogues of heresies, he is without his two brethren, is included and it is the duty of Asserinus (Bibliot. Orient. tom iv p 203-207) to justify the sentence of the church. But the characters of these oriental bishops were tainted with the reproach of heresy, the first had been the master, the two others were the friends, of Nestorius. Their most suspicious passages were accused under the title of the three chapters, and the condemnation of their memory must involve the honour of a synod, whose name was pronounced with sincere or affected reverence by the catholic world. If these bishops, whether innocent or guilty, were annihilated in the sleep of death, they would not probably be awakened by the clamour, which after a hundred years was raised over their grave. If they were already in the fangs of the daemon, their torments could neither be aggravated nor assuaged by human industry. If in the company of saints and angels they enjoyed the rewards of piety, they must have smiled at the idle fury of the theological insects who still crawled on the surface of the earth. The foremost of these insects, the emperor of the Romans, darted his sting, and distilled his venom, perhaps without discerning the true motives of Theodora and her ecclesiastical faction. The victims were no longer subject to his power, and the vehement style of his edicts could only proclaim their damnation, and invite the clergy of the east to join in a full chorus of curses and council 11d of Constantinople,

With general
A D 553
May 4—June 2

anathemas. The east, with some hesitation, consented to the voice of her sovereign the fifth general council, of three patriarchs and one hundred and sixty-five bishops, was held at Constantinople, and the authors, as well as the defenders, of the three chapters, were separated from the communion of the saints, and solemnly delivered to the prince of darkness. But the Latin churches were more jealous of the honour of Leo and the synod of Chalcedon, and if they had fought as they usually did under the standard of Rome, they might have prevailed in the cause of reason and humanity. But their chief was a prisoner in the hands of the enemy, the throne of St Peter, which had been disgraced by the simony, was betrayed by the cowardice, of Vigilius, who yielded, after a long and inconsistent struggle, to the despotism of Justinian and the sophistry of the Greeks. His apostasy provoked the indignation of the Latins, and no more than two bishops could be found who would impose their hands on his deacon and successor Pelagius. Yet the perseverance of the popes insensibly transferred to their adversaries the appellation of schismatics, the Illyrian, African, and Italian churches were oppressed by the civil and ecclesiastical powers, not without some effort of military force,* the distant barbarians transcribed the creed of the Vatican, and in the period of a century, the schism of the three chapters expired in an obscure angle of the Venetian province.<sup>f</sup> But the religious discontent of the Italians had already promoted the conquests of the Lombards, and the Romans themselves were accustomed to suspect the faith, and to detest the government, of their Byzantine tyrant.

Justinian was neither steady nor consistent in the nice process of fixing his volatile opinions and those of his subjects. In his youth he was offended by the slightest deviation from the orthodox line, in his old age, he transgressed the measure of temperate heresy, and the Jacobites, not less than the catholics, were scandalized by his declaration, that the body of Christ was incorruptible, and that his manhood was never subject to any wants and infirmities, the inheritance of our mortal flesh. This phantastic opinion was announced in the last edicts of Justinian, and at the moment of his seasonable departure, the clergy had refused to transcribe, the prince was prepared to persecute, and the people were resolved to suffer or resist. A bishop of Treves, secure beyond the limits of his power, addressed the monarch of the east in the language of authority and affection. "Most gracious Justinian, remember your baptism and your creed. Let not your grey hairs be defiled with heresy. Recall your fathers from exile, and your followers from perdition. You cannot be ignorant, that Italy and Gaul, Spain and Africa, already deplore your fall, and anathematize your name. Unless, without delay, you destroy what you have taught, unless you exclaim with a loud voice, I have erred, I have sinned, anathema to Nestorius, anathema to Eutyches, you will deliver your soul to the same flames in which they will eternally burn." He died and made no sign.<sup>g</sup> His death restored in some degree the peace of the church, and the reigns of his four successors, Justin, Tiberius, Maurice, and Phocas, are distinguished by a rare, though fortunate, vacancy in the ecclesiastical history of the east.<sup>h</sup>

Heresy of Justinian
A D 564

The faculties of sense and reason are least capable of acting on themselves, the eye is most inaccessible to the sight, the soul to the thought, yet we think, and even feel, that one will, a sole principle of action, is essential to a rational and conscious being. When Heraclius returned from the Persian war, the orthodox hero consulted his bishops, whether the Christ whom he adored, of one person, but of two natures, was actuated by a single or a double will. They replied in the singular, and the emperor was encouraged to hope that the Jacobites of Egypt

The Monothelite controversy,
A D 649

* See the complaints of Liberatus and Victor, and the exhortations of pope Pelagius to the conqueror and exarch of Italy. Schisma per potestates publicas opprimatur, &c. (Council tom vi p 467, &c.) An army was detained to suppress the rebellion of an Illyrian city. See Procopius (de Bell Goth.) iv c 25. or περὶ τῆς ἐκείνης πόλεως ἀπορίας or ἀπορίας διαμαρτυρίας. He seems to promise an ecclesiastical history. It would have been curious and impartial.
† The bishops of the patriarchate of Aquileia were reconciled by pope Hormisdas A D 638, (Muralori Annali d'Italia tom v p 36) but they remained and the schism was not finally extinguished till 654. Fourteen years before the church of Spain had overlooked the fifth general council with contemptuous silence (xiii Council Toletan in Council tom vii p 497—498).

‡ Nicellus bishop of Treves (Council tom vi p 511—513) he himself like most of the Gallican prelates (Gregor Epist l vii ep 3 in Council tom vi p 1007) was separated from the communion of the four patriarchs by his refusal to condemn the three chapters. Baronius almost pronounces the damnation of Justinian (A D 564 No 6).
§ After relating the last heresy of Justinian, (l iv c 39—41) and the edict of his successor (l v c 3) the remainder of the history of Justinian is filled with civil instead of ecclesiastical events.

and Syria might be reconciled by the profession of a doctrine, most certainly harmless, and most probably true, since it was taught even by the Nestorians themselves.<sup>1</sup> The experiment was tried without effect, and the timid or vehement catholics condemned even the semblance of a retreat in the presence of a subtle and audacious enemy. The orthodox (the prevailing) party devised new modes of speech, and argument, and interpretation to either nature of Christ, they speciously applied a proper and distinct energy, but the difference was no longer visible when they allowed that the human and the divine will were invariably the same.<sup>2</sup> The disease was attended with the customary symptoms, but the Greek clergy, as if satiated with the endless controversy of the incarnation, instilled a healing counsel into the ear of the prince and people. They declared themselves MONOTHELITES, (asserters of the unity of will,) but they treated the words as new, the questions as superfluous, and recommended a religious silence as the most agreeable to the prudence and charity of the gospel. This law of silence was successively imposed by the ecthesis or exposition of Heraclius, the type or model of his grandson Constans,<sup>3</sup> and the imperial

The ecthesis of Heraclius
A D 639
the type of Constans
A D 648

edicts were subscribed with alacrity or reluctance by the four patriarchs of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch. But the bishop and monks of Jerusalem sounded the alarm, in the language, or even in the silence, of the Greeks, the Latin churches detected a latent heresy, and the obedience of pope Honorius to the commands of his sovereign was retracted and censured by the bolder ignorance of his successors. They condemned the execrable and abominable heresy of the Monothelites, who revived the errors of Manes, Apollinaris, Eutyches, &c., they signed the sentence of excommunication on the tomb of St. Peter, the ink was mingled with the sacramental wine, the blood of Christ, and no ceremony was omitted that could fill the superstitious mind with horror and alarm. As the representative of the western church, pope Martin and his Lateran synod anathematized the perfidious and guilty silence of the Greeks: one hundred and five bishops of Italy, for the most part the subjects of Constans, presumed to reprobate his wicked type and the impious ecthesis of his grandfather, and to confound the authors and their adherents with the twenty-one notorious heretics, the apostates from the church, and the organs of the devil. Such an insult under the tamest reign could not pass with impunity. Pope Martin ended his days on the inhospitable shore of the Tauric Chersonesus, and his oracle, the abbot Maximus, was inhumanly chastised by the amputation of his tongue and his right hand.<sup>4</sup> But the same invincible spirit survived in their successors, and the triumph of the Latins avenged their recent defeat, and obliterated the disgrace of the three chapters.

The synods of Rome were confirmed by the sixth general council of Constantinople, in the palace and presence of a new Constantine, a descendant of Heraclius. The royal convert converted the Byzantine pontiff and a majority of the bishops,<sup>5</sup> the dissenters, with their chief, Macarius of Antioch, were condemned to the spiritual and temporal pains of heresy, the east condescended to accept the lessons of the west, and the creed was finally settled, which teaches the catholics of every age, that two wills or energies are harmonized in the person of Christ. The majesty of the pope and the Roman synod was represented by two priests, one deacon, and three bishops; but these obscure Latins had neither arms to compel, nor treasures to bribe, nor language to persuade, and I am ignorant by what arts they could determine the lofty emperor of the Greeks to abjure the catechism of his infancy, and to persecute the religion of his fathers. Perhaps the monks and people of Constantinople<sup>6</sup> were favourable to the Lateran creed, which is indeed the least favourable of the two, and the suspicion is countenanced by the unnatural moderation of the Greek clergy, who appear in this quarrel to be conscious of their weakness. While the synod debated, a fanatic proposed a more summary decision, by raising a dead man to life: the prelates assisted at the trial, but the acknowledged failure may serve to indicate, that the passions and prejudices of the multitude were not enlisted on the side of the Monothelites. In the next generation, when the son of Constantine was deposed and slain by the disciples of Macarius, they tasted the feast of revenge and dominion: the image or monument of the sixth council was defaced, and the original acts were committed to the flames. But in the second year, their patron was cast headlong council II<sup>d</sup> of Constantinople,

With general
A D 680
Nov. 7—
A D 681
Sept. 16

<sup>1</sup> This extraordinary and perhaps inconsistent doctrine of the Nestorians had been observed by La Croze (Christianisme des Indes, tom. i. p. 10, 20) and is more fully exposed by Abulpharagius, (Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 292. Hist. Dynast. p. 91. vers Latin Pocock) and Acsinan himself, (tom. iv. p. 218.) They seem ignorant that they might allege the positive authority of the ecthesis ὁ μισθὸς ἡσυχίας καὶ τῆς διαρκείας τῆς θείας τοῦ κυρίου ἐν αὐτῇ φύσει, καὶ δύο εἰσαγωγὴν τοῦ θεοῦ (the common reproach of the Monophysites), δύο θελήματα τοῦτον εἰπεῖν οὐκ ἐτόλμησε, τοῖνατιον δὲ τούτο βούλιον τῶν δύο προσώπων ἐδόξε (Concil. tom. vii. p. 205.)

<sup>2</sup> See the orthodox faith in Petavius (Dogmata Theolog. tom. i. l. ix. c. 6—10 p. 433—447) all the depths of this controversy are sounded in the Greek dialogue between Maximus and Pyrrhus (ad calcem tom. vii. Annal. Baron. p. 755—764) which relates a real conference, and produced as short lived a conversion.

<sup>3</sup> Imprimis ecthesis scelerosum typum, (Concil. tom. vii. p. 363.) ambolice operationis germina (sors germina or else the Greek γενναία in the original. Concil. p. 363 364) are the expressions of the eighteenth anathema. The epistle of pope Martin to Aman-

dus, a Gallican bishop, stigmatizes the Monothelites and their heresy with equal virulence, (p. 392.)

<sup>4</sup> The sufferings of Martin and Maximus are described with pathetic simplicity in the original letters and acts (Concil. tom. vii. p. 63—78. Baron. Annal. Eccles. A D 656 No 2. et annos subsequent.) Yet the chastisement of their disobedience, ἐξορία and εὐμωρία οὐκ ἐτόλμησε, had been previously announced in the type of Constans (Concil. tom. vii. p. 240.)

<sup>5</sup> Eutychius (Annal. tom. ii. p. 368) most erroneously supposes that the 124 bishops of the Roman synod transported themselves to Constantinople and by adding them to the 168 Greeks, thus composed the fourth council of 292 fathers.

<sup>6</sup> The Monothelite Constans was hated by all διὰ τὰ τὰυτα (says Theophanes Chron. p. 292) ἐμεισθη σφοδρὰ ῥαπα πόντων. When the Monothelite monk fell ill in his misdeeds, the people shouted a ῥοσὸς ἀνέβη (Concil. tom. vii. p. 1032.) But this was a natural and transient emotion, and I much fear that the latter is an anticipation of orthodoxy in the good people of Constantinople.

from the throne, the bishops of the east were released from their occasional conformity, the Roman faith was more firmly re-planted by the orthodox successors of Bardanes, and the fine problems of the incarnation were forgotten in the more popular and visible quarrel of the worship of images<sup>p</sup>

Before the end of the seventh century, the creed of the incarnation, which had been defined at Rome and Constantinople, was uniformly preached in the remote islands of Britain and Ireland,<sup>q</sup> the same ideas were entertained, or rather the same words were repeated, by all the christians whose liturgy was performed in the Greek or Latin tongue. Their numbers, and visible splendour, bestowed an imperfect claim to the appellation of catholics but in the east they were marked with the less honourable name of Melchites, or royalists,<sup>r</sup> of men, whose faith instead of resting on the basis of Scripture, reason, or tradition, had been established, and was still maintained, by the arbitrary power of a temporal monarch. Their adversaries might allege the words of the fathers of Constantinople, who profess themselves the slaves of the king, and they might relate, with malicious joy, how the decrees of Chalcedon had been inspired and reformed by the emperor Marcian and his virgin bride. The prevailing faction will naturally inculcate the duty of submission, nor is it less natural that dissenters should feel and assert the principles of freedom. Under the rod of persecution, the Nestorians and monophysites degenerated into rebels and fugitives, and the most ancient and useful allies of Rome were taught to consider the emperor not as the chief, but as the enemy, of the christians. Language, the leading principle which unites or separates the tribes of mankind, soon discriminated the sectaries of the east, by a peculiar and perpetual badge, which abolished the means of intercourse and the hope of reconciliation. The long dominion of the Greeks, their colonies, and above all, their eloquence, had propagated a language doubtless the most perfect

<sup>p</sup> The history of Monothelism may be found in the Acts of the Synods of Rome (tom vii p 77—395 601—603) and Constantinople (p 679—1429). Baronius extracted some original documents from the Vatican library and his chronology is rectified by the diligence of Pagi. Fern Dupin (Bibliothèque Eccles tom ii p 37—71) and Basnage (Hist de l'Eglise, tom i p 511—535) afford a tolerable abridgement.

<sup>q</sup> In the Lateran synod of 679 Wilfrid, an Anglin Saxon bishop, subscribed per omni Anglorum partem Britannia et Hibernie quæ ab Anglorum et Britonum necnon Sclorum et Pietorum gentibus colebantur (Eddius in vii St Wilfrid e H apud Pagi Critica tom iii p 89). Theodore (magna insule Britannia archiepiscopus et philosophus) was long expected at Rome, (Council tom vii p 14) but he contented himself with holding (A D 680) his provincial synod of that field in which he received the decrees of pope Martin and the first Lateran council against the monothelites (Council tom vii p 97 &c). Theodore, a monk of Tarsus in Cilicia had been named to the primacy of Britain by pope Vitalian, (A D 669) see Baronius and Pagi, whose esteem for his learning and piety was tainted by some distrust of his national character—he quid contrarium veritatis fidei, Græcorum more in ecclesia cum præ se introduceret. The Cilician was sent from Rome to Canterbury under the tuition of an African guide (Hedæ in i Eccles Anglorum l iv c 1). Headstrong to the Roman doctrine and the same creed of the incarnation has been uniformly transmitted from Theodore to the modern primates whose understanding is perpetually seldom engaged with that abstruse mystery.

<sup>r</sup> This name unknown till the tenth century appears to be of Syriac origin. It was invented by the Jacobites and early adopted by the Nestorians and Monophysites but it was accepted without shame by

that has been contrived by the art of man. Yet the body of the people, both in Syria and Egypt, still persevered in the use of their national idioms, with this difference, however, that the Coptic was confined to the rude and illiterate peasants of the Nile, while the Syriac,<sup>s</sup> from the mountains of Assyria to the Red sea, was adapted to the higher topics of poetry and argument. Armenia and Abyssinia were infected by the speech or learning of the Greeks, and their barbaric tongues, which had been revived in the studies of modern Europe, were unintelligible to the inhabitants of the Roman empire. The Syriac and the Coptic, the Armenian and the Ethiopic, are consecrated in the service of their respective churches and their theology is enriched by domestic versions<sup>t</sup> both of the Scriptures and of the most popular fathers. After a period of thirteen hundred and sixty years, the spark of controversy, first kindled by a sermon of Nestorius, still burns in the bosom of the east, and the hostile communions still maintain the faith and discipline of their founders. In the most abject state of ignorance, poverty, and servitude, the Nestorians and Monophysites reject the spiritual supremacy of Rome, and cherish the toleration of their Turkish masters, which allows them to anathematize, on the one hand, St Cyril and the synod of Ephesus, on the other, pope Leo and the council of Chalcedon. The weight which they cast into the downfall of the eastern empire demands our notice, and the reader may be amused with the various prospects of, I The Nestorians II The Jacobites III The Maronites IV The Armenians V The Copts, and, VI The Abyssinians. To the three former, the Syriac is common, but of the latter, each is discriminated by the use of a national idiom. Yet the modern natives of Armenia and Abyssinia would be incapable of conversing with their ancestors, and the christians of Egypt and Syria, who reject the religion, have adopted the language, of the Arabians. The lapse of time has seconded the sacerdotal arts, and in the east, as well as in the west, the Deity is addressed in an obsolete tongue, unknown to the majority of the congregation.

the catholics and is frequently used in the Annals of Eusebius (Assenian Biblioth. Orient tom ii p 507, &c tom iii p 35). Renaudot, Hist Patriarch Alexandrin p 119) ἡμεῖς οὐκ ἔχοντες τὸν βασιλῆα was the acclamation of the fathers of Constantinople (Council tom vii p 76.)

<sup>s</sup> The Syriac, which the natives revere as the primitive language, was divided into three dialects. 1 The Aramaean, as it was refined at Edessa and the cities of Mesopotamia. 2 The Palestine which was used in Jerusalem, Damascus and the rest of Syria. 3 The Arabian the rustic idiom of the mountains of Assyria and the villages of Irak (Gregor Abulphara, Hist Dynast p 11). On the Syriac, see Ebed Jem (Assenian tom iii p 326, &c) whose prejudice alone could prefer it to the Arabic.

<sup>t</sup> I shall not enrich my ignorance with the spoils of Simon Walton, Mill, Welstein, Assemanus, Ludolphus, La Croze, whom I have consulted with some care. It appears 1 That, of all the versions which are celebrated by the fathers it is doubtful whether any are now extant in their primitive integrity. 2 That the Syriac has the best claim, and that the consent of the oriental sects is a proof that it is more ancient than their schism.

<sup>u</sup> On the account of the Monophysites and Nestorians I am deeply indebted to the Bibliotheca Orientalis Clementina Vaticana of Joseph Simon Assemanus. That learned Maronite was despatched in the year 1715 by pope Clement XI to visit the monasteries of Egypt and Syria in search of MSS. His four folio volumes published at Rome 1710—1724 contain a part only though perhaps the most valuable of his extensive project. As a native and a scholar, he possessed the Syriac literature and though a dependent of Rome, he writes to be moderate and candid.

I The Nestorians, I Both in his native and his episcopal province, the heresy of the unfortunate Nestorius was speedily obliterated. The oriental bishops, who at Ephesus had resisted to his face the arrogance of Cyril, were mollified by his tardy concessions. The same prelates, or their successors, subscribed, without a murmur, the decrees of Chalcedon, the power of the Monophysites reconciled them with the catholics in the conformity of passion, of interest, and insensibility of belief, and their last reluctant sigh was breathed in the defence of the three chapters. Their dissenting brethren, less moderate, or more sincere, were crushed by the penal laws. And as early as the reign of Justinian, it became difficult to find a church of Nestorians within the limits of the Roman empire. Beyond those limits they had discovered a new world, in which they might hope for liberty, and aspire to conquest. In Persia, notwithstanding the resistance of the Magi, christianity had struck a deep root, and the nations of the east reposed under its salutary shade. The catholic, or primate, resided in the capital in his synods, and in their dioceses, his metropolitans, bishops, and clergy, represented the pomp and honour of a regular hierarchy. They rejoiced in the increase of proselytes, who were converted from the Zendavesta to the Gospel, from the secular to the monastic life, and their zeal was stimulated by the presence of an artful and formidable enemy. The Persian church had been founded by the missionaries of Syria, and their language, discipline, and doctrine, were closely interwoven with its original frame. The catholics were elected and ordained by their own suffragans, but their filial dependence on the patriarchs of Antioch is attested by the canons of the oriental church. In the Persian school of Edessa, the rising generations of the faithful imbibed their theological idiom, they studied in the Syriac version the ten thousand volumes of Theodore of Mopsuestia, and they revered the apostolic faith and holy martyrdom of his disciple Nestorius, whose person and language were equally unknown to the nations beyond the Tigris. The first indelible lesson of Ibas, bishop of Edessa, taught them to execrate the Egyptians, who, in the synod of Ephesus had impiously confounded the two natures of Christ. The flight of the masters and scholars, who were twice expelled from the Athens of Syria, dispersed a crowd of missionaries inflamed by the double zeal of religion and revenge. And the rigid unity of the Monophysites, who, under the reigns of Zeno and Anastasius, had invaded the thrones of the east, provoked their antagonists in a land of freedom, to avow a moral, rather than a physical, union of the two persons of Christ. Since the first preaching of the gospel, the Sassanian kings beheld, with an eye of suspicion, a race of aliens and apostates, who had embraced the religion, and who might favour the cause, of the hereditary foes of their country. The royal edicts had often prohibited their dangerous correspondence with the Syrian clergy, the progress of the schism was grateful to the jealous pride of Perozes, and he listened to the eloquence of an artful prelate, who painted Nestorius as the friend of Persia, and urged him to secure the fidelity of his christian subjects, by granting a just preference to the victims and enemies of the Roman tyrant. The Nestorians composed a large majority of the clergy and people, they were encouraged by the smile, and armed with the sword, of despotism, yet many of their weaker brethren were startled at the thought of breaking loose from the communion of the christian world, and the blood of seven thousand seven hundred Monophysites or catholics, confirmed the uniformity of faith and discipline in the churches of Persia. Their ecclesiastical institutions are distinguished by a liberal principle of reason, or at least of policy, the austerity of the cloister was relaxed and gradually forgotten, houses of charity were endowed for the education of orphans and foundlings, the law of celibacy, so forcibly recommended to the Greeks and Latins, was disregarded by the Persian clergy, and the number of the elect was multiplied by the public and reiterated nuptials of the priests, the bishops, and even the patriarch himself. To this standard of natural and religious freedom, myriads of fugitives resorted from all the provinces of the eastern empire, the narrow bigotry of Justinian was punished by the emigration of his most industrious subjects, they transported into Persia the arts both of peace and war. And those who deserved the favour, were promoted in the service, of a discerning monarch. The arms of Nushirvan, and his fiercer grandson, were assisted with advice, and money, and troops, by the desperate sectaries who still lurked in their native cities of the east, their zeal was rewarded with the gift of the catholic churches, but when those cities and churches were recovered by Heraclius, their open profession of treason and heresy compelled them to seek a refuge in the realm of their foreign ally. But the seeming tranquillity of the Nestorians was often endangered, and sometimes overthrown. They were involved in the common evils of oriental despotism. Their enmity to Rome could not always atone for their attachment to the gospel. And a colony of three hundred thou-

* See the Arabic canons of Nice in the translation of Abraham Ecchelenus No 37 74 39 40. Council tom ii p 335 336 edit Venet. These vulgar titles Nicene and Arabic, are both apocryphal. The council of Nice enacted no more than twenty canons (Theodore Hist Eccles 1 i c 8) and the remainder seventy or eighty were collected from the synods of the Greek church. The Syriac edition of Marcellus is no longer extant (Assmann Biblioth Oriental tom i p 150 tom iii p 74) and the Arabic version is marked with many recent interpolations. Yet this code contains many curious relics of ecclesiastical discipline, and once it is equally revered by all the eastern communions it was probably finished before the schism of the Nestorians and Jacobites. (Fabric Biblioth Græc tom xi p 363-367)

sole masters of Persia
A D 500, &c

† Theodore the reader (1 i c 5 19 ad calcem Hist Eccles) has noticed this Persian school of Edessa. Its ancient splendour, and the two wars of its downfall (A D 431 and 489) are clearly discussed by Assmann (Biblioth Oriental tom ii p 402 iii p 370 378 iv p 70 924).

‡ A dissertation on the style of the Nestorians has swelled in the hands of Assmann to a folio volume of 950 pages, and his learned researches are displayed in the most lucid order. Besides this fourth volume of the Bibliotheca Orientalis the extracts in the three preceding tomes (tom i p 203 ii p 321-463 iii 64-70 378-395, &c 403-408, 580-589) may be usefully consulted.

sand Jacobites, the captives of Apamea and Antioch, were permitted to erect an hostile altar in the face of the catholic, and in the sunshine of the court. In his last treaty, Justinian introduced some conditions which tended to enlarge and fortify the toleration of christianity in Persia. The emperor, ignorant of the rights of conscience, was incapable of pity or esteem for the heretics who denied the authority of the holy synods but he flattered himself that they would gradually perceive the temporal benefits of union with the empire and the church of Rome, and if he failed in exciting their gratitude, he might hope to provoke the jealousy of their sovereign. In a later age, the Lutherans have been burnt at Paris and protected in Germany, by the superstition and policy of the most christian king.

Their missions in Persia, India, China, &c. A D 500—1200. The desire of gaining souls for God, and subjects for the church, has excited in every age the diligence of the christian priests. From the conquest of Persia they carried their spiritual arms to the north, the east, and the south, and the simplicity of the gospel was fashioned and painted with the colours of the Syriac theology. In the sixth century, according to the report of a Nestorian traveller,<sup>a</sup> christianity was successfully preached to the Bactrians, the Huns, the Persians, the Indians, the Persarmenians, the Medes, and the Elamites: the barbaric churches, from the gulf of Persia to the Caspian sea, were almost infinite, and their recent faith was conspicuous in the number and sanctity of their monks and martyrs. The pepper coast of Malabar, and the isles of the ocean, Socotora, and Ceylon, were peopled with an increasing multitude of christians, and the bishops and clergy of those sequestered regions derived their ordination from the catholic of Babylon. In a subsequent age, the zeal of the Nestorians overleaped the limits which had confined the ambition and curiosity both of the Greeks and Persians. The missionaries of Balch and Samarcand pursued without fear the footsteps of the roving Tartar, and insinuated themselves into the camps of the valleys of Imaus and the banks of the Selinga. They exposed a metaphysical creed to those illiterate shepherds to those sanguinary warriors they recommended humanity and repose. Yet a khan, whose power they vainly magnified, is said to have received at their hands the rites of baptism,

<sup>a</sup> See the Topographia Christiana of Cosmas, surmounted Indoplistes, or the Indian navigator, l. iii. p. 178. 179. l. xi. p. 337. The entire work, of which some curious extracts may be found in Photius, (Coul. xxvii. p. 9. 10. edit. Hoeschel) Thevenot (in the first part of his Relations des Voyages &c.) and Fabricius (Biblioth. Græc. l. iii. c. 2. tom. ii. p. 603—617) has been published by Father Montfaucon at Paris, 1767, in the Nova Collectio Patrum, (tom. ii. p. 113—316). It was the design of the author to confute the impious heresy of those who maintain that the earth is a globe, and not a flat oblong table as it is represented in the Scriptures, (l. ii. p. 138). But the nonsense of the monk is mingled with the practical knowledge of the traveller, who performed his voyage A D 522, and published his book at Alexandria A D 547 (l. ii. p. 140, 141. Montfaucon Præfat. c. 2.). The Nestorianism of Cosmas, unknown to his learned editor, was detected by La Croze (Christianisme des Indes tom. i. p. 40—55) and is confirmed by Assemani (Biblioth. Orient. tom. iv. p. 603, 606).

<sup>b</sup> In its long progress to Mosul, Jerusalem, Rome &c. the story of Priester John evaporated in a monstrous fable, of which some features have been borrowed from the Lama of Thibet (H. l. Generalogique des Peuples, p. ii. p. 42. Hist. de l'empereur p. 31 &c.) and were ignorantly transferred by the Portuguese to the emperor of Abyssinia (J. Adolph. Hist. d'Ethiop. Comment. l. ii. c. 11). Yet it is probable that and even of ordination, and the fame of Priester or Priester John<sup>b</sup> has long amused the credulity of Europe. The royal convert was indulged in the use of a portable altar, but he despatched an embassy to the patriarch, to inquire how, in the season of Lent, he should abstain from animal food, and how he might celebrate the eucharist in a desert that produced neither corn nor wine. In their progress by sea and land, the Nestorians entered China by the port of Canton and the northern residence of Sigan. Unlike the senators of Rome, who assumed with a smile the characters of priests and augurs, the mandarins, who affect in public the reason of philosophers, are devoted in private to every mode of popular superstition. They cherished and they confounded the gods of Palestine and of India, but the propagation of christianity awakened the jealousy of the state, and after a short vicissitude of favour and persecution, the foreign sect expired in ignorance and oblivion<sup>c</sup>. Under the reign of the caliphs, the Nestorian church was diffused from China to Jerusalem and Cyprus, and their numbers with those of the Jacobites, were computed to surpass the Greek and Latin communions<sup>d</sup>. Twenty-five metropolitans or archbishops composed their hierarchy, but several of these were dispensed, by the distance and danger of the way, from the duty of personal attendance, on the easy condition that every six years they should testify their faith and obedience to the catholic or patriarch of Babylon, a vague appellation, which has been successively applied to the royal seats of Seleucia, Ctesiphon, and Bagdad. These remote branches are long since withered, and the old patriarchal trunk<sup>e</sup> is now divided by the Elyahs of Mosul, the representatives, almost in lineal descent, of the genuine and primitive succession, the Josephs of Amida, who are reconciled to the church of Rome,<sup>f</sup> and the Simeons of Van or Ormia, whose revolt at the head of forty thousand families, was promoted in the sixteenth century by the Sophis of Persia. The number of three hundred thousand is allowed for the whole body of the Nestorians, who, under the name of Chaldeans or Assyrians, are confounded with the most learned or the most powerful nation of eastern antiquity.

According to the legend of anti-<sup>Si</sup> the christians of quity, the gospel was preached in <sup>St</sup> Thomas in India by St Thomas<sup>g</sup>. At the end of A D 883

in the eleventh and twelfth centuries Nestorian christianity was professed in the house of Kerates (D. Herbelot p. 266. 915. 957. Assemani tom. iv. p. 458—504).

<sup>c</sup> The christianity of China, between the seventh and thirteenth century, is vainly proved by the consent of Chinese Arabian Syriac and Latin evidence (Assemani, Biblioth. Orient. tom. iv. p. 502—552. Mémoires de l'Académie des Inscriptions tom. xxx. p. 802—816). The inscription of Si-an-pi which describes the fixtures of the Nestorian church from the first mission A D 636, to the current year 791 is accused of forgery by La Croze, Voltaire &c. who become the dupes of their own cunning; while they are afraid of a Jesuitical fraud.

<sup>d</sup> Jacobites et Nestorians plures eam Cræci et Latini Jacobita V. r. i. a. c. Hist. Hierosol. l. ii. c. 76. p. 1093. in the Gedæ Dei per Francos. The numbers are given by Thomas (Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. i. p. 172).

<sup>e</sup> The division of the patriarchate may be traced in the Bibliotheca Orient. of Assemani tom. i. p. 23—34. tom. ii. p. 437 &c. l. iii. p. 603. p. 621—623. tom. iv. p. 164—166. p. 423. p. 622—629 &c.

<sup>f</sup> The pompous language of Rome on the submission of a Nestorian patriarch is elegantly represented in the seventh book of Ex Patre Libanus Nurelli. At the end of the trophies of Alexander Tauri, and Libanus the Tigris and Indus.

<sup>g</sup> The Indian missionary St Thomas an apostle a Mauchuan,

the ninth century, his shrine, perhaps in the neighbourhood of Madras, was devoutly visited by the ambassadors of Alfred, and their return with a cargo of pearls and spices rewarded the zeal of the English monarch, who entertained the largest projects of trade and discovery.<sup>a</sup> When the Portuguese first opened the navigation of India, the christians of St Thomas had been seated for ages on the coast of Malabar, and the difference of their character and colour attested the mixture of a foreign race. In arms, in arts, and possibly in virtue, they excelled the natives of Hindostan: the husbandmen cultivated the palm-tree, the merchants were enriched by the pepper-trade, the soldiers preceded the nairs or nobles of Malabar, and their hereditary privileges were respected by the gratitude or the fear of the king of Cochin and the Zamorin himself. They acknowledged a Gentoo sovereign, but they were governed, even in temporal concerns, by the bishop of Angamala. He still asserted his ancient title of metropolitan of India, but his real jurisdiction was exercised in fourteen hundred churches, and he was intrusted with the care of two hundred thousand souls. Their religion would have rendered them the firmest and most cordial allies of the Portuguese, but the inquisitors soon discerned in the christians of St Thomas the unpardonable guilt of heresy and schism. Instead of owning themselves the subjects of the Roman pontiff, the spiritual and temporal monarch of the globe, they adhered, like their ancestors, to the communion of the Nestorian patriarch, and the bishops whom he ordained at Mosul traversed the dangers of the sea and land to reach their diocese on the coast of Malabar. In their Syrian liturgy, the names of Theodore and Nestorius were piously commemorated, they united their adoration of the two persons of Christ, the title of Mother of God was offensive to their ear, and they measured with scrupulous avarice the honours of the Virgin Mary, whom the superstition of the Latins had almost exalted to the rank of a goddess. When her image was first presented to the disciples of St Thomas, they indignantly exclaimed, "We are christians, not idolaters!" and their simple devotion was content with the veneration of the cross. Their separation from the western world had left them in ignorance of the improvements, or corruptions, of a thousand years, and their conformity with the faith and practice of the fifth century, would equally disappoint the preor an Armenian merchant, (La Croze Christianisme des Indes, tom. i. p. 57-70) was famous, however as early as the time of Jerom, (ad Alveclium epist. 149.) Maren Pulu was informed on the spot that he suffered martyrdom in the city of Malabar, or Meliapour, a league only from Madras (D'Anville, Le Tableau des Indes p. 125) where the Portuguese founded an episcopal church under the name of St Thomas and where the saint performed an annual miracle till he was silenced by the profane neighbourhood of the English (La Croze, tom. ii. p. 7-16.)

<sup>a</sup> Neither the author of the Saxon Chronicle (A. D. 897) nor William of Malmesbury (de Gestis Regum Anglorum l. ii. c. 4 p. 41) were capable in the twelfth century of inventing this extraordinary fact: they are incapable of explaining the motives and measures of Alfred, and their lively notice serves only to provoke our curiosity. William of Malmesbury feels the difficulty of the enterprise quod quæritur in hoc æreulo miratur, and I almost suspect that the English ambassadors collected their cargo and legend in Egypt. The royal

judices of a papist or a protestant. It was the first care of the ministers of Rome to intercept all correspondence with the Nestorian patriarch, and several of his bishops expired in the prisons of the holy office. The flock, without a shepherd, was assaulted by the power of the Portuguese, the arts of the Jesuits, and the zeal of Alexes de Menezes, archbishop of Goa, in his personal visitation of the coast of Malabar. The synod of Diamper, at which he presided, consummated the pious work of the reunion, and rigorously imposed the doctrine and discipline of the Roman church, without forgetting auricular confession, the strongest engine of ecclesiastical torture. The memory of Theodore and Nestorius was condemned, and Malabar was reduced under the dominion of the pope, of the primate, and of the Jesuits who invaded the see of Angamala or Cranganor. Sixty years A. D. 1599-1663 of servitude and hypocrisy were patiently endured, but as soon as the Portuguese empire was shaken by the courage and industry of the Dutch, the Nestorians asserted, with vigour and effect, the religion of their fathers. The Jesuits were incapable of defending the power which they had abused: the aims of forty thousand christians were pointed against their falling tyrants, and the Indian archdeacon assumed the character of bishop, till a fresh supply of episcopal gifts and Syrian missionaries could be obtained from the patriarch of Babylon. Since the expulsion of the Portuguese, the Nestorian creed is freely professed on the coast of Malabar. The trading companies of Holland and England are the friends of toleration, but if oppression be less mortifying than contempt, the christians of St Thomas have reason to complain of the cold and silent indifference of their brethren of Europe.

II The history of the Monophysites II THE JACOBITES is less copious and interesting than that of the Nestorians. Under the reigns of Zeno and Anastasius, their artful leaders surprised the ear of the prince, usurped the thrones of the east, and crushed on its native soil the school of the Syrians. The rule of the Monophysite faith was defined with exquisite discretion by Severus patriarch of Antioch, he condemned, in the style of the Henoticon, the adverse heresies of Nestorius and Eutyches, maintained against the latter the reality of the body of Christ, and constrained the Greeks to allow that he was a liar who spoke truth.<sup>a</sup> But the approximation of ideas could not abate the vehemence of author has not enriched his Orosius (see Barrington's Miscellanies) with an Indian, as well as a Scandianian in the Indes.

<sup>a</sup> Concerning the christians of St Thomas see Asseman Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 391-407, 435-451. Georges Church History of Malabar and, almost all, La Croze Histoire du Christianisme des Indes, in two vols. 12mo, La Haye, 1758, a learned and agreeable work. They have drawn from the same source the Portuguese and Italian narratives, and the prejudices of the Jesuits are sufficiently corrected by those of the protestants.

<sup>b</sup> Οὐκ ἐμὲν Θεοδόσιος is the expression of Theodore, in his Treatise of the Incarnation p. 245, 247 as he is quoted by La Croze, (Hist. du Christianisme d'Ethiopie et d'Arménie p. 35) who exclaims, perhaps too hastily, "Quel pitoyable raisonnement!" Renanod has touched (Hist. Patriarche Alex. p. 127-133) the oriental accounts of Severus and his authentic creed may be found in the epistle of John the Jacobite patriarch of Antioch in the tenth century, to his brother Menas of Alexandria. (Asseman Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 132-141.)

passion, each party was the more astonished that their blind antagonist could dispute on so trifling a difference, the tyrant of Syria enforced the belief of his creed, and his reign was polluted with the blood of three hundred and fifty monks, who were slain, not perhaps without provocation or resistance, under the walls of Apamea<sup>1</sup>. The successor of Anastasius replanted the orthodox standard in the east. Severus fled into Egypt, and his friend, the eloquent Xenaias,<sup>2</sup> who had escaped from the Nestorians of Persia, was suffocated in his exile by the Melchites of Paphlagonia. Fifty-four bishops were swept from their thrones, eight hundred ecclesiastics were cast into prison,<sup>3</sup> and notwithstanding the ambiguous favour of Theodora, the oriental flocks, deprived of their shepherds, must insensibly have been either famished or poisoned. In this spiritual distress, the expiring faction was revived, and united, and perpetuated, by the labours of a monk, and the name of James Baradaeus<sup>4</sup> has been preserved in the appellation of Jacobites, a familiar sound which may startle the ear of an English reader. From the holy confessors in their prison of Constantinople, he received the powers of bishop of Edessa and apostle of the east, and the ordination of fourscore thousand bishops, priests, and deacons, is derived from the same inexhaustible source. The speed of the zealous missionary was promoted by the fleetest dromedaries of a devout chief of the Arabs, the doctrine and discipline of the Jacobites were secretly established in the dominions of Justinian, and each Jacobite was compelled to violate the laws and to hate the Roman legislator. The successors of Severus, while they lurked in convents or villages, while they sheltered their proscribed heads in the caverns of hermits, or the tents of the Saracens, still asserted, as they now assert, their indefeasible right to the title, the rank, and the prerogatives, of the patriarch of Antioch. Under the milder yoke of the infidels, they reside about a league from Mardin, in the pleasant monastery of Zapharan, which they have embellished with cells, aqueducts, and plantations. The secondary, though honourable, place is filled by the maphrian, who, in his station at Mosul itself, defies the Nestorian catholic with whom he contests the supremacy of the east. Under the patriarch and the maphrian, one hundred and fifty archbishops and bishops have been counted in the different ages of the Jacobite church, but the order of the hierarchy is relaxed or dissolved, and the greater part of their dioceses is confined to the neighbourhood of the Euphrates and the Tigris. The cities of Aleppo and Amida, which are often visited by the patriarch, contain some wealthy merchants and industrious mechanics but the multitude derive their scanty sustenance from their daily labour and poverty, as well as superstition, may impose their excessive fasts five annual lents, during which, both the clergy and laity abstain not only from flesh or eggs, but even from the taste of wine, of oil, and of fish. Their present numbers are esteemed from fifty to fourscore thousand souls, the remnant of a populous church, which has gradually decreased under the oppression of twelve centuries. Yet in that long period, some strangers of merit have been converted to the Monophysite faith, and a Jew was the father of Abulpharagius<sup>5</sup> primate of the east, so truly eminent both in his life and death. In his life, he was an elegant writer of the Syriac and Arabic tongues, a poet, physician, and historian, a subtle philosopher, and a moderate divine. In his death, his funeral was attended by his rival the Nestorian patriarch, with a train of Greeks and Armenians, who forgot their disputes, and mingled their tears over the grave of an enemy. The sect which was honoured by the virtues of Abulpharagius appears, however, to sink below the level of their Nestorian brethren. The superstition of the Jacobites is more abject, their fasts more rigid,<sup>6</sup> their intestine divisions are more numerous, and their doctors (as far as I can measure the degrees of nonsense) are more remote from the precincts of reason. Something may possibly be allowed for the rigour of the Monophysite theology, much more for the superior influence of the monastic order. In Syria, in Egypt, in Æthiopia, the Jacobite monks have ever been distinguished by the austerity of their penance and the absurdity of their legends. Alive or dead they are worshipped as the favourites of the Deity, the crozier of bishop and patriarch is reserved for their venerable hands, and they assume the government of men, while they are yet reeking with the habits and prejudices of the cloister.<sup>7</sup>

III In the style of the oriental III THE NESTORIAN christians, the Monothelites of every ROMANS age are described under the appellation of Maronites,<sup>8</sup> a name which has been insensibly trans-

<sup>1</sup> Epist. Archimunditarum et Monachorum Syriæ Secundæ ad Papam Hormisdam, Council tom. i. p. 598-602. The courage of St. Saba, in ten annos, will justify the suspicion that the arms of these monks were not always spiritual or defensive (Baronius A. D. 513 No. 7 &c.)

<sup>2</sup> Assemanus (Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 10-36) and La Croze (Christiana d'Ethiopie p. 36-40) will supply the history of Xenaias or Philoxenus, bishop of Mabin, or Hierapolis in Syria. He was a perfect master of the Syriac language, and the author or editor of a version of the New Testament.

<sup>3</sup> The names and titles of fifty-four bishops who were exiled by Justin, are preserved in the Chronicle of Dionysius (supra Assemanus tom. ii. p. 34). Severus was personally summoned to Constantinople for his trial says Libanius (Brev. c. 19)—that his tongue might be cut out, says Evagrius (l. ii. c. 4). The prudent patriarch did not stay to examine the difference. This ecclesiastical revolution is fixed by Pagi at the month of September of the year 518. (Critica, tom. ii. p. 306.)

<sup>4</sup> The obscure history of James or Jacobus Baradaeus, or Zanzabur may be gathered from Lulycimus, (Vital tom. ii. p. 144-147) Kenau

dot (Hist. Patriarch Alex. p. 133) and Assemanus (Biblioth. Orient. tom. i. p. 421 tom. ii. p. 62-63 334-332 p. 414 tom. iii. p. 383-389). He seems to be unknown to the Greeks. The Jacobites themselves had rather deduce their name and pedigree from St. James the apostle.

<sup>5</sup> The account of his person and writings is perhaps the most curious article in the Bibliotheca of Assemanus (tom. ii. p. 214-321 under the name of Gregorius Bar Hebraeus). La Croze (Christiana d'Ethiopie, p. 53-63.) ridicules the prejudice of the Spaniards against the Jewish blood which secretly defiles their church and state.

<sup>6</sup> This excessive abstinence is censured by La Croze (p. 322) and even by the Syrian Assemanus (tom. i. p. 226 tom. ii. p. 304 305.)

<sup>7</sup> The state of the Monophysites is excellently illustrated in a dissertation at the beginning of the second volume of Assemanus which contains 142 pages. The Syrian Chronicle of Gregorius Bar Hebraeus or Abulpharagius (Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. p. 321-463.) pursues the double series of the Nestorian catholics and the maphrians of the Jacobites.

<sup>8</sup> The synonymous use of the two words may be proved from Fulvinius (Annal. tom. ii. p. 191 207 332) and many similar passages.

ferred from a hermit to a monastery, from a monastery to a nation. Maron, a saint or savage of the fifth century, displayed his religious madness in Syria, the rival cities of Apamea and Emesa disputed his relics, a stately church was erected on his tomb, and six hundred of his disciples united their solitary cells on the banks of the Orontes. In the controversies of the incarnation, they nicely threaded the orthodox line between the sects of Nestorius and Eutyches, but the unfortunate question of one will or operation in the two natures of Christ, was generated by their curious leisure. Their proselyte, the emperor Heraclius, was rejected as a Maronite from the walls of Emesa, he found a refuge in the monastery of his brethren, and their theological lessons were repaid with the gift of a spacious and wealthy domain. The name and doctrine of this venerable school were propagated among the Greeks and Syrians, and their zeal is expressed by Macarius, patriarch of Antioch, who declared before the synod of Constantinople, that sooner than subscribe the two wills of Christ, he would submit to be hewn piece-meal and cast into the sea.<sup>1</sup> A similar or a less cruel mode of persecution soon converted the unresisting subjects of the plain, while the glorious title of Mardaites,<sup>2</sup> or rebels, was bravely maintained by the hardy natives of mount Libanus. John Maron, one of the most learned and popular of the monks, assumed the character of patriarch of Antioch, his nephew Abraham, at the head of the Maronites, defended their civil and religious freedom against the tyrants of the east. The son of the orthodox Constantine pursued, with pious hatred, a people of soldiers, who might have stood the bulwark of his empire against the common foes of Christ and of Rome. An army of Greeks invaded Syria, the monastery of St. Maron was destroyed with fire, the bravest chieftains were betrayed and murdered, and twelve thousand of their followers were transplanted to the distant frontiers of Armenia and Thrace. Yet the humble nation of the Maronites has survived the empire of Constantinople, and they still enjoy, under their Turkish masters, a free religion and a mitigated servitude. Their domestic governors are chosen among the ancient nobility, the patriarch, in his monastery of Canobin, still fancies himself on the throne of Antioch, nine bishops compose his synod, and one hundred and fifty priests, who retain the liberty of marriage, are intrusted with the care of one hundred thousand souls. Their country extends from the ridge of Mount Libanus to the shores of Tripoli, and the gradual descent affords, in a narrow space, each variety of soil and climate, from the Holy Cedars, erect under the weight of snow,<sup>3</sup> to the vine, the mulberry, and the olive trees of the fruitful valley. In the twelfth century, the Maronites, abjuring the Monothelite error, were reconciled to the Latin churches of Antioch and Rome,<sup>4</sup> and the same alliance has been frequently renewed by the ambition of the popes and the distress of the Syrians. But it may reasonably be questioned, whether their union has ever been perfect or sincere, and the learned Maronites of the college of Rome have vainly laboured to absolve their ancestors from the guilt of heresy and schism.<sup>5</sup>

IV Since the age of Constantine, the IVTH AR ARMENIANS<sup>6</sup> had signalized their attachment to the religion and empire of the christians. The disorders of their country, and their ignorance of the Greek tongue, prevented their clergy from assisting at the synod of Chalcedon, and they floated eighty-four years<sup>7</sup> in a state of indifference or suspense, till their vacant faith was finally occupied by the missionaries of Julian of Halcarnassus,<sup>8</sup> who in Egypt, their common exile, had been vanquished by the arguments or the influence of his rival Severus, the Monophysite patriarch of Antioch. The Armenians alone are the pure disciples of Eutyches, an unfortunate parent, who has been renounced by the greater part of his spiritual progeny. They alone persevere in the opinion, that the manhood of Christ was created, or existed without creation, of a divine and incorruptible substance. Their adversaries reproach them with the adoration of a phantom, and they retort the accusation, by deriding or execrating the blasphemy of the Jacobites, who impute to the Godhead the vile infirmities of the flesh, even the natural effects of nutrition and di-which may be found in the methodical table of Pocock. He was not actuated by any prejudice against the Maronites of the tenth century, and we may believe a Melchite, whose testimony is confirmed by the Jacobites and Latins.

<sup>1</sup> Council tom. viii p. 780. The Monothelite cause was supported with firmness and subtilty by Constantine a Syrian priest of Apamea, (p. 1040 &c.)

<sup>2</sup> Tirophanes (Chron. p. 290, 296, 300, 302, 306) and Cedrenus (p. 477, 480) relate the exploits of the Mardaites the name (Mard, in Syrian rebellavit) is explained by La Roque (Voyage de la Syrie, tom. ii p. 53) the dates are fixed by Pa. l. (A. D. 676 No. 4—14 A. D. 685 No. 3, 4) and even the obscure story of the patriarch John Maron (A. Seman. Biblioth. Orient. tom. i p. 496—520) illustrates, from the year 685 to 707, the troubles of mount Libanus.

<sup>3</sup> In the last century twenty large cedars still remained (Voyage de la Roque tom. i p. 63—76) at present they are reduced to four or five (Vid. ibid., tom. i p. 264). These trees so famous in Scripture, were guarded by excommunication: the wood was sparingly borrowed for small crosses &c. an annual mass was chanted under their shade and they were endowed by the Syrians with a sensitive power of erecting their branches to repel the snow, to which mount Libanus is less faithful than it is painted by Tacitus: inter arbores opacum fidumque munitus—a daring metaphor (Hist. l. 6).

<sup>4</sup> The evidence of William of Tyre (Hist. in Gestis Dei per Francos l. xxi c. 8, p. 1022.) is copied or confirmed by Jacques de Vitra (Hist. Hierosolym. l. ii c. 77 p. 1013, 1094). But this unnatural league expired with the power of the Franks, and Anulphitragus (who died in 1286) considers the Maronites as a sect of Monothelites (Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii p. 292.)

<sup>5</sup> I find a description and history of the Maronites in the Voyage de la Syrie et du Mont Liban par la Roque (2 vols. in 12mo. Amsterdam 1723, particularly tom. i p. 42—47 p. 174—184 tom. ii p. 10—120.) In the ancient part, he copies the prejudices of Naron and the other Maronites of Rome, which Assemanus is afraid to renounce and ashamed to support. J. J. J. (Institut. Hist. Christ. tom. ii p. 186.) Niebuhr (Voyage de l'Ara. &c. tom. ii p. 340 370—381) and, above all, the judicious Volney (Voyage en L. &c. p. 31) et en Syrie, tom. ii p. 8—31 Paris 1787, may be consulted.

<sup>6</sup> The religion of the Armenians is briefly described by La Croze (Hist. du Christ de l'Ethiopie et de l'Arménie p. 269—402.) He refers to the great Armenian History of Galunus, (3 vols. in fol. Rome, 1660—1691) and commends the state of Armenia in the third volume of the Nouveau Memoire des Missions du Levant. The work of a Jesuit must have merit, when it is praised by La Croze.

<sup>7</sup> The schism of the Armenians is placed 84 years after the council of Chalcedon (Pa. l. Critica, ad A. D. 535.) It was consummated at the end of seventeen years, and it is from the year of Christ 532 that we date the era of the Armenians, (l'Art de verifier les Dates, p. xxx.)

<sup>8</sup> The sentiments and success of Julian of Halcarnassus may be seen in l'iberatus (Brev. c. 10) Renaudot, (Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 132—303) and Assemanus (Biblioth. Orient. tom. ii. Dissert. de Monophysitismo, c. viii p. 283.)

gestion The religion of Armenia could not derive much glory from the learning or the power of its inhabitants The royalty expired with the origin of their schism, and their christian kings, who arose and fell in the thirteenth century on the confines of Cilicia, were the clients of the Latins, and the vassals of the Turkish sultan of Iconium The helpless nation has seldom been permitted to enjoy the tranquillity of servitude From the earliest period to the present hour, Armenia has been the theatre of perpetual war, the lands between Tauris and Erivan were dispeopled by the cruel policy of the Sophis, and myriads of christian families were transplanted, to perish or to propagate in the distant provinces of Persia Under the rod of oppression, the zeal of the Armenians is fervent and intrepid they have often preferred the crown of martyrdom to the white turban of Mahomet, they devoutly hate the error and idolatry of the Greeks, and their transient union with the Latins is not less devoid of truth, than the thousand bishops whom their patriarch offered at the feet of the Roman pontiff<sup>d</sup> The catholic, or patriarch, of the Armenians, resides in the monastery of Ekmasin, three leagues from Erivan Forty-seven archbishops, each of whom may claim the obedience of four or five suffragans, are consecrated by his hand, but the far greater part are only titular prelates, who dignify with their presence and service the simplicity of his court As soon as they have performed the liturgy, they cultivate the garden, and our bishops will hear with surprise, that the austerity of their life increases in just proportion to the elevation of their rank In the fourscore thousand towns or villages of his spiritual empire, the patriarch receives a small and voluntary tax from each person above the age of fifteen, but the annual amount of six hundred thousand crowns is insufficient to supply the incessant demands of charity and tribute Since the beginning of the last century, the Armenians have obtained a large and lucrative share of the commerce of the east in their return from Europe, the caravan usually halts in the neighbourhood of Erivan, the altars are enriched with the fruits of their patient industry, and the faith of Eutyches is preached in their recent congregations of Barbary and Poland

V In the rest of the Roman empire, <sup>THE COPTS</sup> or EGYPTIANS the despotism of the prince might eradicate or silence the sectaries of an obnoxious creed But the stubborn temper of the Egyptians maintained their opposition to the synod of Chalcedon, and the policy of Justinian condescended to expect and to seize the opportunity of discord The Monophysite church of Alexandria<sup>e</sup> was torn by the disputes of the corruptibles and incorruptibles, and on the death of the patriarch, the two factions upheld their respective candidates Gaian was the disciple of Julian, Theodosius had been the pupil of Severus the claims of the <sup>The patriarch Theodosius,</sup> former were supported by the consent <sup>A D 537—568</sup> of the monks and senators, the city and the province, the latter depended on the priority of his ordination, the favour of the empress Theodora, and the arms of the eunuch Narses, which might have been used in more honourable warfare The exile of the popular candidate to Carthage and Sardinia, inflamed the ferment of Alexandria, and after a schism of one hundred and seventy years, the Gaianites still revered the memory and doctrine of their founder The strength of numbers and of discipline was tried in a desperate and bloody conflict, the streets were filled with the dead bodies of citizens and soldiers, the pious women, ascending the roofs of their houses, showered down every sharp or ponderous utensil on the heads of the enemy, and the final victory of Narses was owing to the flames, with which he wasted the third capital of the Roman world But the lieutenant of Justinian had not conquered in the cause of a heretic, Theodosius himself was speedily though gently removed, and Paul of Tanis, an orthodox monk, <sup>Paul, A D 538.</sup> was raised to the throne of Athanasius

The powers of government were strained in his support, he might appoint or displace the dukes and tribunes of Egypt, the allowance of bread, which Diocletian had granted, was suppressed, the churches were shut, and a nation of schismatics were deprived at once of their spiritual and carnal food In his turn, the tyrant was excommunicated by the zeal and revenge of the people, and none except his servile Melechites would salute him as a man, a christian, or a bishop Yet such is the blindness of ambition, that, when Paul was expelled on a charge of murder, he solicited, with a bribe of seven hundred pounds of gold, his restoration to the same station of hatred and ignominy His successor Apollinaris entered the hostile city <sup>Apollinaris, A D 551</sup> in military array, alike qualified for prayer or for battle His troops, under arms, were distributed through the streets, the gates of the cathedral were guarded, and a chosen band was stationed in the choir, to defend the person of their chief He stood erect on his throne, and throwing aside the upper garment of a warrior, suddenly appeared before the eyes of the multitude in the robes of patriarch of Alexandria Astonishment held them mute, but no sooner had Apollinaris begun to read the tome of St Leo, than a volley of curses, and invectives, and stones, assailed the odious minister of the emperor and the synod A charge was instantly sounded by the successor of the apos-

<sup>d</sup> See a remarkable fact of the twelfth century in the History of Nicephorus Chonates (p 258.) Yet three hundred years before Photinus (Epistol ii p 49 edit Montacut) had gloried in the conversion of the Armenians—καταργηται ομοιοτης ορθοδοξας

<sup>e</sup> The travelling Armenians are in the way of every traveller and their mother church is on the high road between Constantinople and Ischia for their present state see Fabricius (Lux Evangelii &c c xxxviii p 40—41) Olearius (l iv c 40) Chardin, (vol ii p 232)

Tournesfort (lettre xx) and, above all Tavernier (tom i p 28—37 510—518.) that rambling jeweller, who had read nothing, but had seen so much and so well

<sup>f</sup> The history of the Alexandrian patriarchs from Diocletian to Benjamin is taken from Renaudet (p 114—164, and the second tome of the Annals of Eutychius

<sup>g</sup> Libéral, Hist c 20 23. Victor Chiron p 329 330 Procop, Hist ec c 24, 27

ties, the soldiers waded to their knees in blood, and two hundred thousand christians are said to have fallen by the sword an incredible account, even if it be extended from the slaughter of a day to the eighteen years of the reign of Apollinarius. Two succeeding patriarchs, Eulogius<sup>b</sup> and John, laboured in the conversion of heretics, with aims and arguments more worthy of their evangelical profession. The theological knowledge of Eulogius was displayed in many a volume, which magnified the errors of Eutyches and Severus, and attempted to reconcile the ambiguous language of St Cyril with the orthodox creed of pope Leo and the fathers of Chalcedon.

The bounteous alms of John the eleemosynary were dictated by superstition, or benevolence, or policy. Seven thousand five hundred poor were maintained at his expense, on his accession, he found eight thousand pounds of gold in the treasury of the church, he collected ten thousand from the liberality of the faithful, yet the primate could boast in his testament, that he left behind him no more than the third part of the smallest of the silver coins. The churches of Alexandria were delivered to the catholics, the religion of the Monophysites was proscribed in Egypt, and a law was revived which excluded the natives from the honours and emoluments of the state.

A more important conquest still remained, of the patriarch, the oracle and leader of the Egyptian church. Theodosius had resisted the threats and promises of Justinian with the spirit of an apostle or an enthusiast. "Such," replied the patriarch, "were the offers of the tempter when he showed the kingdoms of the earth. But my soul is far dearer to me than life or dominion. The churches are in the hands of a prince who can kill the body, but my conscience is my own, and in exile, poverty, or chains, I will steadfastly adhere to the faith of my holy predecessors, Athanasius, Cyril, and Dioscorus. Anathema to the tome of Leo and the synod of Chalcedon! Anathema to all who embrace their creed! Anathema to them now and for evermore! Naked came I out of my mother's womb, naked shall I descend into the grave. Let those who love God, follow me and seek their salvation." After comforting his brethren, he embarked for Constantinople, and sustained, in six successive interviews, the almost irresistible weight of the royal presence. His opinions were favourably entertained in the palace and the city, the influence of Theodora assured him a safe conduct and honourable dismissal, and he ended his days, though not on the throne, yet in the bosom, of his native country. On the news of his death, Apollinarius indecently teased the nobles and the clergy, but his joy was checked by the intelligence of a new election, and while he enjoyed the wealth of Alexandria, his rivals reigned in the monasteries of Thebais, and were maintained by the voluntary oblations of the people. A perpetual succession of patriarchs arose from the ashes of Theodosius, and the Monophysite churches of Syria and Egypt were united by the name of Jacobites and the communion of the faith. But the same faith, which has been confined to a narrow sect of the Syrians, was diffused over the mass of the Egyptian or Coptic nation, who, almost unanimously, rejected the decrees of the synod of Chalcedon. A thousand years were now elapsed since Egypt had ceased to be a kingdom, since the conquerors of Asia and Europe had trampled on the ready necks of a people, whose ancient wisdom and power ascend beyond the records of history. The conflict of zeal and persecution rekindled some sparks of their national spirit. They abjured, with a foreign heresy, the manners and language of the Greeks: every Melchite, in their eyes, was a stranger, every Jacobite a citizen, the alliance of marriage, the offices of humanity, were condemned as a deadly sin, the natives renounced all allegiance to the emperor, and his orders, at a distance from Alexandria, were obeyed only under the pressure of military force. A generous effort might have redeemed the religion and liberty of Egypt, and her six hundred monasteries might have poured forth their myriads of holy warriors, for whom death should have no terrors, since life had no comfort or delight. But experience has proved the distinction of active and passive courage, the fanatic who endures without a groan the torture of the rack or the stake, would tremble and fly before the face of an armed enemy. The pusillanimous temper of the Egyptians could only hope for a change of masters, the arms of Chosroes depopulated the land, yet under his reign the Jacobites enjoyed a short and precarious respite. The victory of Heraclius renewed and aggravated the persecution, and the patriarch again escaped from Alexandria to the desert. In his flight, Benjamin was encouraged by a voice, which bade him expect, at the end of ten years, the aid of a foreign nation, marked like the Egyptians themselves with the ancient right of circumcision. The character of these deliverers, and the nature of the deliverance, will be hereafter explained, and I shall step over the interval of eleven centuries to observe the present misery of the Jacobites of Egypt. The populous city of Cairo affords a residence or rather a shelter for their indigent patriarch, and a remnant of ten bishops, forty monasteries have survived the inroads of the Arabs, and the progress of servitude and apostasy has reduced the Coptic nation to the despicable number of twenty-five or thirty thousand families,<sup>1</sup> a race of illiterate beggars, whose only consolation is derived from the superior wretchedness of the Greek patriarch and his diminutive congregation.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>b</sup> Eulogius, who had been a monk of Antioch was more conspicuous for subtilty than eloquence. He proves that the enemies of the faith (the Marcionites and the Theodasians ought not to be reconciled that the same proposition may be orthodox in the mouth of St Cyril heretical in that of Severus that the opposite assertions of St Leo are equally true &c. His writings are no longer extant except in the Extraits de Plinius who had pe used them with care and satisfaction, C d cccvi cccvii cccviii cccvix cccvi.

<sup>1</sup> See the life of John the eleemosynary by his contemporary Leontius bishop of Neapolis in Cyprus who a Greek text, either lost or hidden, is reflected in the Latin version of Baronius (A D 610 No 9 A D 620 No 8) Pagi (Critica, tom ii p 763) and Fabricius (l c ii tom iii p 451) have made some critical observations.

VI THE ABYSSINIANS and NUBIANS

VI The Coptic patriarch, a rebel to the Cæsars, or a slave to the khalifs, still gloried in the filial obedience of the kings of Nubia and Æthiopia. He repaid their homage by magnifying their greatness, and it was boldly asserted that they could bring into the field a hundred thousand horse, with an equal number of camels,<sup>m</sup> that their hand could pour out or restrain the waters of the Nile,<sup>n</sup> and the peace and plenty of Egypt was obtained, even in this world, by the intercession of the patriarch. In exile at Constantinople, Theodosius recommended to his patroness the conversion of the black nations of Nubia from the tropic of Cancer to the confines of Abyssinia.<sup>o</sup> Her design was suspected and emulated by the more orthodox emperor. The rival missionaries, a Melchite and a Jacobite, embarked at the same time, but the empress from a motive of love or fear, was more effectually obeyed, and the catholic priest was detained by the president of Thebais, while the king of Nubia and his court were hastily baptized in the faith of Dioscorus. The tardy envoy of Justinian was received and dismissed with honour, but when he accused the heresy and treason of the Egyptians, the negro convert was instructed to reply that he would never abandon his brethren, the true believers, to the persecuting ministers of the synod of Chalcedon.<sup>p</sup> During several ages, the bishops of Nubia were named and consecrated by the Jacobite patriarch of Alexandria as late as the twelfth century, christianity prevailed, and some rites, some ruins, are still visible in the savage towns of Sennaar and Dongola.<sup>q</sup> But the Nubians at length executed their threats of returning to the worship of idols, the climate required the indulgence of polygamy, and they have finally preferred the triumph of the Koran to the abase-ment of the cross. A metaphysical religion may appear too refined for the capacity of the negro race yet a black or a parrot might be taught to repeat the words of the Chalcedonian or Monophysite creed.

Christianity was more deeply rooted in the Abyssinian empire, and, although the correspondence has been

Church of Abyssinia, A D 530, &c

sometimes interrupted above seventy or a hundred years, the mother-church of Alexandria retains her colony in a state of perpetual pupillage. Seven bishops once composed the Æthiopic synod had their number amounted to ten, they might have elected an independent primate, and one of their kings was ambitious of promoting his brother to the ecclesiastical throne. But the event was foreseen, the increase was denied, the episcopal office has been gradually confined to the abuna,<sup>r</sup> the head and author of the Abyssinian priesthood, the patriarch supplies each vacancy with an Egyptian monk, and the character of a stranger appears more venerable in the eyes of the people, less dangerous in those of the monarch. In the sixth century, when the schism of Egypt was confirmed, the rival chiefs, with their patrons, Justinian and Theodora, strove to outstrip each other in the conquest of a remote and independent province. The industry of the empress was again victorious, and the pious Theodora has established in that sequestered church the faith and discipline of the Jacobites.<sup>s</sup> Uncompassed on all sides by the enemies of their religion, the Æthiopians slept near a thousand years, forgetful of the world, by whom they were forgotten. They were awakened by the Portuguese, who, turning the southern promontory of Africa, appeared in India and the Red sea, as if they had descended through the air from a distant planet. In the first moments of their interview, the subjects of Rome and Alexandria observed the resemblance, rather than the difference, of their faith, and each nation expected the most important benefits from an alliance with their christian brethren. In their lonely situation, the Æthiopians had almost relapsed into the savage life

The Portuguese in Abyssinia, A D 1520—1553, &c

<sup>1</sup> This number is taken from the curious Recherches sur les Égyptiens et les Chinois (tom ii p 192, 193) and appears more probable than the 600 000 ancient, or 15 000 modern Copts of Gemelli Carreri. Cyril I near, the protestant patriarch of Constantinople laments that those heretics were ten times more numerous than his orthodox Greeks in 1600, and applying the τοῦτοι αὐτοὶ δεκάκις περισσότεροι οὐνόματι of Homer, (Iliad ii 129) the most perfect expression of contempt (Fabricæ Lex Trivialis 740).

<sup>2</sup> The history of the Copts, their religion, manners &c may be found in the Abissinien a motley work neither a translation nor an original, the Chronicle of Orientale of Peter a Jacobite in the two versions of Abraham I schellensis, Paris 1651 and John Simon Assemanus Venet 1729. These annals descend no lower than the thirteenth century. The more recent accounts must be searched for in the travellers into Egypt, and the Nouveaux Mémoires des Missions du Levant. In the last century, Joseph Aludanus, a native of Cairo, published at Oxford in thirty pages, a slight Historia Jacobitarum, 147 post 150.

<sup>3</sup> About the year 737 See Renanodot, Hist Patriarch Alex p 221, 222. Historia, Hist Syracen p 80.

<sup>4</sup> Ludolph Hist. Ethiopie et Comment l i c 8. Renanodot, Hist Patriarch Alex p 482 &c. This opinion introduced into Egypt and Europe by the virtues of the Copts the pride of the Abyssinians the fear and ignorance of the Turks and Arabs has not even the semblance of truth. The rules of Ethiopia do not in the increase of the Nile, consult the will of the monarch. If the river approaches at Napata within three days journey of the Red sea (see D'Auvill's Voyage) a canal that should divert its course would demand and most probably surpass the power of the Cæsars.

<sup>5</sup> The Abyssinians who still preserve the features and olive complexion of the Arabs, afford a proof that two thousand years are not sufficient to change the colour of the human race. The Nubians, an African race, are pure negroes, as black as those of Senegal or Congo, with flat noses thick lips, and woolly hair (Huffen Hist Naturelle, tom v p 117 143 144 166 219 edit in 12mo, Paris, 1769). The ancients beheld, without much attention, the extraordinary phenomenon which has exercised the philosophers and theologians of modern times.

<sup>6</sup> Assemanus Bibl. Orient tom i p 329. The christianity of the Nubians, A D 1153 is attested by the sheriff of Aden, falsely described under the name of the Nubian geographer, (p 18) who represents them as a nation of Jacobites. The rays of historical light that twinkle in the history of Renanodot (p 178, 229 231 281 286 405 434 461) are all previous to this era. See the modern state in the Lettres Edifiantes (Recueil iv) and Illustration (tom ix p 152—153 par Breyer).

<sup>7</sup> The abuna is improperly dignified by the Latins with the title of patriarch. The Abyssinians acknowledge only the four patriarchs and their chief is no more than a metropolitan or national primate (Ludolph Hist. Ethiopie et Comment l iii c 7). The seven bishops of Renanodot (p 311) who existed A D 1131, are unknown to the historians.

<sup>8</sup> I know not why Assemanus (Bibl. Orient tom ii p 264) should call in question the probability of Theodora in the year 1360, and Ethiopia. The schism in Egypt of Abyssinia till the year 1360, is applied by Petavius (p 338 311 381 382 405 417 &c 152 405 434 450 451 452 453 454) from the Coptic writers. The name of Ludolph was a perfect blank.

Their vessels, which had traded to Ceylon, scarcely presumed to navigate the rivers of Africa, the ruins of Axum were deserted, the nation was scattered in villages, and the emperor, a pompous name, was content, both in peace and war, with the immovable residence of a camp. Conscious of their own indigence, the Abyssinians had formed the rational project of importing the arts and ingenuity of Europe, and their ambassadors at Rome and Lashon were instructed to solicit a colony of smiths, carpenters, tilers, masons, printers, surgeons, and physicians, for the use of their country. But the public danger soon called for the instant and effectual aid of arms and soldiers, to defend an unwarlike people from the barbarians who ravaged the inland country, and the Turks and Arabs who advanced from the sea-coast in more formidable array. Æthiopia was saved by four hundred and fifty Portuguese, who displayed in the field the native valour of Europeans, and the artificial powers of the musket and cannon. In a moment of terror, the emperor had promised to reconcile himself and his subjects to the catholic faith, a Latin patriarch represented the supremacy of the pope, "the empire, enlarged in a tenfold proportion, was supposed to contain more gold than the mines of America, and the wildest hopes of avarice and zeal were built on the willing submission of the christians of Africa."

Mission of the Jesuits
A D 1547

But the vows which pain had extorted, were forsworn on the return of health. The Abyssinians still adhered with unshaken constancy to the Monophysite faith, their languid belief was inflamed by the exercise of dispute, they branded the Latins with the names of Arians and Nestorians, and imputed the adoration of four gods, to those who separated the two natures of Christ. Fremona, a place of worship, or rather of exile, was assigned to the Jesuit missionaries. Their skill in the liberal and mechanic arts, their theological learning, and the decency of their manners, inspired a barren esteem, but they were not endowed with the gifts of miracles,* and they vainly solicited a reinforcement of European troops. The patience and dexterity of forty years at length obtained a more favourable audience, and two emperors of Abyssinia were persuaded that Rome could ensure the temporal and everlasting happiness of her votaries. The first of these royal converts lost his crown and his life, and the rebel army was sanctified by the abuna, who hurled an anathema at the apostate, and absolved his subjects from their oath of fidelity. The fate of Zadenghel was reversed by the courage and fortune of Susneus, who ascended the throne under the name of Segued, and more vigorously prosecuted the pious enterprise of his kinsman. After the amusement of some unequal combats between the Jesuits and his illiterate priests, the emperor declared himself a proselyte to the synod of Chalcedon, presuming that his clergy and people would embrace without delay the religion of their prince. The liberty of choice was succeeded by a law, which imposed, under pain of death, the belief of the two natures of Christ. The Abyssinians were enjoined to work and to play on the sabbath, and Segued, in the face of Europe and Africa, renounced his connexion with the Alexandrian church. A Jesuit, Alphonso Mendez, the catholic patriarch of Æthiopia, accepted in the name of Urban VIII. the homage and abjuration of his penitent. "I confess," said the emperor on his knee, "I confess that the pope is the vicar of Christ, the successor of St Peter, and the sovereign of the world. To him I swear true obedience, and at his feet I offer my person and kingdom." A similar oath was repeated by his son, his brother, the clergy, the nobles, and even the ladies of the court. The Latin patriarch was invested with honours and wealth, and his missionaries erected their churches or citadels in the most convenient stations of the empire. The Jesuits themselves deplore the fatal indiscretion of their chief, who forgot the mildness of the gospel and the policy of his order, to introduce with hasty violence the liturgy of Rome and the inquisition of Portugal. He condemned the ancient practice of circumcision, which health rather than superstition had first invented in the climate of Æthiopia. A new baptism, a new ordination, was inflicted on the natives, and they trembled with horror when the most holy of the dead were torn from their graves, when the most illustrious of the living were excommunicated by a foreign priest. In the defence of their religion and liberty, the Abyssinians rose in arms, with desperate but unsuccessful zeal. Five rebellions were extinguished in the blood of the insurgents: two abunas were slain in battle, whole legions were slaughtered in the field, or suffocated in their caverns, and neither merit, nor rank, nor sex, could save from an ignominious death the enemies of Rome. But the victorious monarch was finally subdued by the constancy of the nation, of his mother, of his son, and of his most faithful friends. Segued listened to the voice of pity, of reason, perhaps of fear, and his edict of liberty of conscience instantly revealed the tyranny and weakness of the Jesuits. On the death of his father,

Conversion of the emperor,
A D 1626

* Ludolph Hist. Æthiop. l. iv. c. 3. The most necessary arts are now exercised by the Jews, and the foreign trade is in the hands of the Armenians. What Gregory principally admired and envied was the industry of Europe—artes et officia.

* John Bermudez whose relation printed at Lashon 1567 was translated into English by Purchas (Purchas l. iii. c. 7. p. 1119 &c.) and from thence into French by La Croze, (Christianisme d'Æthiopie p. 92—200.) The piece is curious, but the author may be suspected of deceiving Abyssinia, Rome, and Portugal. His title to the rank of patriarch is dark and doubtful, (Ludolph Comment. No. 101. p. 473.)

* Religio Romana nec precibus patrum nec meritis ab ipso edictis subvertitur is the uncontradicted assurance of the devout emperor Susneus to his patriarch Mendez, (Ludolph Comment. No. 126.

p. 529) and such assurances should be precious kept, as an antidote against any marvellous claims.

† I am aware how tender is the question of circumcision. Yet I will affirm, 1. That the Æthiopians have a physical reason for the circumcision of males, and even of females (Recherches Philosophiques sur les Americains tom. ii.) 2. That it was practised in Æthiopia long before the introduction of Judaism or christianity (Herodotus l. ii. c. 104. Mariam Canon Chron. p. 72. 73.) 'Infantes circumciduntur ob consuetudinem non ob Judæismum' says Gregory the Abyssinian priest, (apud Ithrie Inx Christiana p. 720.) Yet in the heat of dispute, the Portuguese were sometimes branded with the name of uncircumcised (La Croze, p. 80. Ludolph Hist. and Comment. l. iii. c. 1.)

Basiliides expelled the Latin patriarch, and restored to the wishes of the nation the faith and the discipline of Egypt. The Monophysite churches resounded with a song of triumph, "that the sheep of Æthiopia were now delivered from the hyænas of the west,"

Final expulsion of the Jesuits,
A D 1632, &c

and the gates of that solitary realm were for ever shut against the arts, the science, and the fanaticism of Europe *

CHAP XLVIII

Plan of the four last volumes — Succession and characters of the Greek emperors of Constantinople, from the time of Heraclius to the Latin conquest

Defects of the Byzantine history

I HAVE now deduced from Trajan to Constantine, from Constantine to Heraclius, the regular series of the Roman emperors, and faithfully exposed the prosperous and adverse fortunes of their reigns. Five centuries of the decline and fall of the empire have already elapsed, but a period of more than eight hundred years still separates me from the term of my labours, the taking of Constantinople by the Turks. Should I persevere in the same course, should I observe the same measure, a prolix and slender thread would be spun through many a volume, nor would the patient reader find an adequate reward of instruction or amusement. At every step, as we sink deeper in the decline and fall of the eastern empire, the annals of each succeeding reign would impose a more ungrateful and melancholy task. These annals must continue to repeat a tedious and uniform tale of weakness and misery, the natural connexion of causes and events would be broken by frequent and hasty transitions, and a minute accumulation of circumstances must destroy the light and effect of those general pictures which compose the use and ornament of a remote history. From the time of Heraclius, the Byzantine theatre is contracted and darkened: the line of empire, which had been defined by the laws of Justinian and the arms of Belisarius, recedes on all sides from our view. The Roman name, the proper subject of our inquiries, is reduced to a narrow corner of Europe, to the lonely suburbs of Constantinople, and the fate of the Greek empire has been compared to that of the Rhine, which loses itself in the sands, before its waters can mingle with the ocean. The scale of dominion is diminished to our view by the distance of time and place: nor is the loss of external splendour compensated by the nobler gifts of virtue and genius. In the last moments of her decay, Constantinople was doubtless more opulent and populous than Athens at her most flourishing æra, when a scanty sum of six thousand talents, or twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling, was possessed by twenty-one thousand male citizens of an adult age. But each of these citizens was a free man, who dared to assert the liberty of his thoughts, words, and actions, whose person and property were guarded by equal law, and who exercised his independent vote in the government of the republic. Their numbers seem to be multiplied by the strong and various discriminations of character: under the shield of freedom, on the wings of emulation and vanity, each Athenian aspired to the level of the national dignity: from this commanding eminence, some chosen spirits soared beyond the reach of a vulgar eye, and the chances of superior merit in a great and populous kingdom, as they are proved by experience, would excuse the computation of imaginary millions. The territories of Athens, Sparta, and their allies, do not exceed a moderate province of France or England: but after the trophies of Salamis and Platea, they expand in our fancy to the gigantic size of Asia, which had been trampled under the feet of the victorious Greeks. But the subjects of the Byzantine empire, who assume and dishonour the names both of Greeks and Romans, present a dead uniformity of abject vices, which are neither softened by the weakness of humanity, nor animated by the vigour of memorable crimes. The free men of antiquity might repeat with generous enthusiasm the sentence of Homer, "that on the first day of his servitude, the captive is deprived of one half of his manly virtue." But the poet had only seen the effects of civil or domestic slavery, nor could he foretell that the second moiety of manhood must be annihilated by the spiritual despotism, which shackles, not only the actions, but even the thoughts, of the prostrate votary. By this double yoke, the Greeks were oppressed under the successors of Heraclius, the tyrant, a law of eternal justice was degraded by the vices of his subjects, and on the throne, in the camp, in the schools, we search, perhaps with fruitless diligence, the names and characters that may deserve to be rescued from oblivion. Nor are the defects of the subject compensated by the skill and variety of the painters. Of a space of eight hundred years, the four first centuries are overspread with a cloud interrupted by some faint and broken rays of historic light: in the lives of the emperors, from Maurice to Alexius, Basil the Macedonian has alone been the theme of a separate work, and the absence, or loss, or imperfection of contemporary evidence, must be poorly supplied by the doubtful authority of more recent compilers. The four last centuries are exempt from the reproach of penury: and with the Comnenian family, the historic muse of Constantinople again revives,

* The three protestant historians Ludolphus (Hist. Æthiopiae Francofurt 1681) Commentarius 1691 Relatio Nova, &c 1693 in folio) Goides (Church History of Æthiopia London 1696, in 8vo) and La Croze (Hist. du Christianisme d'Æthiopie et d'Arménie La Haye 1720 in 12mo) have drawn their principal materials from the Jesuits especially from the General History of Teller published in Portuguese at Coimbra, 1620. We might be surprised at their frankness: but their most flagitious vice, the spirit of persecution was in their eyes their most meritorious virtue. Ludolphus possessed some though a slight advantage from the Æthiopic language: and the personal conversation of Gregory, a free spirited Abyssinian priest, whom he invited from Rome to the court of Saxony. See the Theologia Æthiopica of Gregory, in Fabricius. Lux Evan. c. iii p. 16—24

but her apparel is gaudy, her motions are without elegance or grace. A succession of priests, or courtiers, tread in each other's footsteps in the same path of servitude and superstition: their views are narrow, their judgment is feeble or corrupt, and we close the volume of copious barrenness, still ignorant of the causes of events, the characters of the actors, and the manners of the times, which they celebrate or deplore. The observation which has been applied to a man, may be extended to a whole people, that the energy of the sword is communicated to the pen, and it will be found by experience, that the tone of history will rise or fall with the spirit of the age.

From these considerations, I should have abandoned without regret the Greek slaves and their servile historians, had I not reflected that the fate of the Byzantine monarchy is passively connected with the most splendid and important revolutions which have changed the state of the world. The space of the lost provinces was immediately replenished with new colonies and rising kingdoms: the active virtues of peace and war deserted from the vanquished to the victorious nations, and it is in their origin and conquests, in their religion and government, that we must explore the causes and effects of the decline and fall of the eastern empire. Nor will this scope of narrative, the riches and variety of these materials, be incompatible with the unity of design and composition. As, in his daily prayers, the mussulman of Fez or Delhi still turns his face towards the temple of Mecca, the historian's eye shall be always fixed on the city of Constantinople. The excursive line may embrace the wilds of Arabia and Tartary, but the circle will be ultimately reduced to the decreasing limit of the Roman monarchy.

On this principle I shall now establish the plan of the four last volumes of the present work. The first chapter will contain, in a regular series, the emperors who reigned at Constantinople during a period of six hundred years, from the days of Heraclius to the Latin conquest: a rapid abstract, which may be supported by a general appeal to the order and text of the original historians. In this introduction, I shall confine myself to the revolutions of the throne, the succession of families, the personal characters of the Greek princes, the mode of their life and death, the maxims and influence of their domestic government, and the tendency of their reign to accelerate or suspend the downfall of the eastern empire. Such a chronological review will serve to illustrate the various argument of the subsequent chapters, and each circumstance of the eventful story of the barbarians will adapt itself in a proper place to the Byzantine annals. The internal state of the empire, and the dangerous heresy of the Paulicians, which shook the east and enlightened the west, will be the subject of two separate chapters, but these inquiries must be postponed till our further progress shall have opened the view of the world in the ninth and tenth centuries of the christian æra. After this foundation of Byzantine history, the following nations will pass before our eyes, and each will occupy the space to which it may be entitled by greatness or merit, or the degree of connexion with the Roman world and the present age. I. The FRANKS, a general appellation which includes all the barbarians of France, Italy, and Germany, who were united by the sword and sceptre of Charlemagne. The persecution of images and their votaries, separated Rome and Italy from the Byzantine throne, and prepared the restoration of the Roman empire in the west. II. The ARABS or SARACENS. Three ample chapters will be devoted to this curious and interesting object. In the first, after a picture of the country and its inhabitants, I shall investigate the character of Mahomet, the character, religion, and success of the prophet. In the second I shall lead the Arabs to the conquest of Syria, Egypt, and Africa, the provinces of the Roman empire, nor can I check their victorious career till they have overthrown the monarchies of Persia and Spain. In the third I shall inquire how Constantinople and Europe were saved by the luxury and arts, the division and decay, of the empire of the caliphs. A single chapter will include, III. The BULGARIANS, IV. HUNGARIANS, and, V. RUSSIANS, who assaulted by sea or by land the provinces and the capital, but the last of these, so important in their present greatness, will excite some curiosity in their origin and infancy. VI. The NORMANS, or rather the private adventures of that warlike people, who founded a powerful kingdom in Apulia and Sicily, shook the throne of Constantinople, displayed the trophies of chivalry, and almost realized the wonders of romance. VII. The LATINS, the subjects of the pope, the nations of the west, who enlisted under the banner of the cross for the recovery or relief of the holy sepulchre. The Greek emperors were terrified and preserved by the myriads of pilgrims who marched to Jerusalem with Godfrey of Bouillon and the peers of Christendom. The second and third crusades trod in the footsteps of the first. Asia and Europe were mingled in a sacred war of two hundred years, and the christian powers were bravely resisted, and finally expelled, by Saladin and the Mamalukes of Egypt. In these memorable crusades, a fleet and army of French and Venetians were diverted from Syria to the Thracian Bosphorus: they assaulted the capital, they subverted the Greek monarchy, and a dynasty of Latin princes was seated near threescore years on the throne of Constantine. VIII. The GREEKS themselves, during this period of captivity and exile, must be considered as a foreign nation, the enemies, and again the sovereigns, of Constantinople. Misfortune had rekindled a spark of national virtue, and the imperial series may be continued with some dignity from their restoration to the Turkish conquest. IX. The MOGULS and TARTARS. By the arms of Zingis and his descendants, the globe was shaken from China to Poland and Greece the sultans were overthrown the caliphs fell, and the Cæsars trembled on their throne The victories of Timour suspended above fifty years the final ruin of the Byzantine empire X I have already noticed the first appearance of the TURKS, and the names of the fathers, of Seljuk and Othman, discriminate the two successive dynasties of the nation, which emerged in the eleventh century from the Scythian wilderness The former established a potent and splendid kingdom from the banks of the Oxus to Antioch and Nice, and the first crusade was provoked by the violation of Jerusalem and the danger of Constantinople From an humble origin, the Ottomans arose, the scourge and terror of Christendom Constantinople was besieged and taken by Mahomet II, and his triumph annihilates the remnant, the image, the title, of the Roman empire in the east. The schism of the Greeks will be connected with their last calamities, and the restoration of learning in the western world I shall return from the captivity of the new, to the ruins of ancient, ROME and the venerable name, the interesting theme, will shed a ray of glory on the conclusion of my labours

Second marriage and death of Heraclius

THE emperor Heraclius had punished a tyrant and ascended his throne, and the memory of his reign is perpetuated by the transient conquest and irreparable loss of the eastern provinces After the death of Eudocia, his first wife, he disobeyed the patriarch, and violated the laws, by his second marriage with his niece Martina, and the superstition of the Greeks beheld the judgment of heaven in the diseases of the father, and the deformity of his offspring But the opinion of an illegitimate birth is sufficient to distract the choice, and loosen the obedience, of the people, the ambition of Martina was quickened by maternal love, and perhaps by the envy of a step-mother, and the aged husband was too feeble to withstand the arts of conjugal allurements Constantine, his eldest son, enjoyed in a mature age the title of Augustus, but the weakness of his constitution required a colleague and a guardian, and he yielded with secret reluctance to the partition of the empire The senate was summoned to the palace to ratify or attest the association of Heraclionas, the son of Martina, the imposition of the diadem was consecrated by the prayer and blessing of the patriarch, the senators and patricians adored the majesty of the great emperor and the partners of his reign, and as soon as the doors were thrown open, they were hailed by the tumultuary but important voice of the soldiers After an interval of five months, the pompous ceremonies which formed the essence of the Byzantine state were celebrated in the cathedral and the hippodrome the concord of the royal brothers, was affectingly displayed by the younger leaning on the arm of the elder, and the name of Martina was mingled in the reluctant or venal acclamations of the people Heraclius survived this association about two years his last testimony declared his two sons the equal heirs of the eastern empire, and commanded them to honour his widow Martina as their mother and their sovereign

A D 638
July 4

A D 639
January

A D 641
Feb 11

When Martina first appeared on the throne with the name and attributes of royalty, she was checked by a firm though respectful opposition, and the dying embers of freedom were kindled by the breath of superstitious prejudice "We reverence," exclaimed the voice of a citizen, "we reverence the mother of our princes, but to those princes alone our obedience is due, and Constantine, the elder emperor, is of age to sustain, in his own hands, the weight of the sceptre Your sex is excluded by nature from the toils of government How could you combat, how could you answer, the barbarians, who, with hostile or friendly intentions, may approach the royal city? May heaven avert from the Roman republic this national disgrace, which would provoke the patience of the slaves of Persia!" Martina descended from the throne with indignation, and sought a refuge in the female apartment of the palace The reign of Constantine the third lasted only one hundred and three days he expired in the thirtieth year of his age, and although his life had been a long malady, a belief was entertained that poison had been the means, and his cruel step-mother the author, of his untimely fate Martina reaped indeed the harvest of his death, and assumed the government in the name of the surviving emperor, but the incestuous widow of Heraclius was universally abhorred, the jealousy of the people was awakened, and the two orphans whom Constantine had left, became the objects of the public care It was in vain that the son of Martina, who was no more than fifteen years of age, was taught to declare himself the guardian of his nephews, one of whom he had presented at the baptismal font it was in vain that he swore on the wood of the true cross, to defend them against all their enemies On his death-bed, the late emperor had despatched a trusty servant to arm the troops and provinces of the east, in the defence of his helpless children the eloquence and liberality of Valentin had been successful, and from his camp of Chalcedon, he boldly demanded the punishment of the assassins and the restoration of the lawful heir The licence of the soldiers, who devoured the grapes and drank the wine of their Asiatic vineyards, provoked the citizens of Constantinople against the domestic authors of their calamities, and the dome of St Sophia re-echoed, not with prayers and hymns, but with the clamours and imprecations of an enraged multitude At their imperious command,

Heraclionas,
A D 641
May 25

Heraclonas appeared in the pulpit with the eldest of the royal orphans, Constans alone was saluted as emperor of the Romans, and a crown of gold, which had been taken from the tomb of Heraclius, was placed on his head, with the solemn benediction of the patriarch. But in the tumult of joy and indignation, the church was pillaged, the sanctuary was polluted by a promiscuous crowd of Jews and barbarians, and the Monothelite Pyrrhus, a creature of the empress, after dropping a protestation on the altar, escaped by a prudent flight from the zeal of the catholics. A more serious and bloody task was reserved for the senate, who derived a temporary strength from the consent of the soldiers and people. The spirit of Roman freedom revived the ancient and awful examples of the judgment of tyrants, and

Punishment of Martina and He-raclonas
A D 641
September

the imperial culprits were deposed and condemned as the authors of the death of Constantine. But the severity of the conscript fathers was stained by the indiscriminate punishment of the innocent and the guilty. Martina and Heraclonas were sentenced to the amputation, the former of her tongue, the latter of his nose, and after this cruel execution, they consumed the remainder of their days in exile and oblivion. The Greeks who were capable of reflection might find some consolation for their servitude, by observing the abuse of power when it was lodged for a moment in the hands of an aristocracy.

Constans II
A D 641
September

We shall imagine ourselves transported five hundred years backwards to the age of the Antonines, if we listen to the oration which Constans II pronounced in the twelfth year of his age before the Byzantine senate. After returning his thanks for the just punishment of the assassins, who had intercepted the fairest hopes of his father's reign, "By the divine providence," said the young emperor, "and by your righteous decree, Martina and her incestuous progeny have been cast headlong from the throne. Your majesty and wisdom have prevented the Roman state from degenerating into lawless tyranny. I therefore exhort and beseech you to stand forth as the counsellors and judges of the common safety." The senators were gratified by the respectful address and liberal donative of their sovereign, but these servile Greeks were unworthy and regardless of freedom, and in his mind, the lesson of an hour was quickly erased by the prejudices of the age and the habits of despotism. He retained only a jealous fear lest the senate or people should one day invade the right of primogeniture, and seat his brother Theodosius on an equal throne. By the imposition of holy orders, the grandson of Heraclius was disqualified for the purple, but this ceremony, which seemed to profane the sacraments of the church, was insufficient to appease the suspicions of the tyrant, and the death of the deacon Theodosius could alone expiate the crime of his royal birth. His murder was avenged by the imprecations of the people, and the assassin, in the fulness of power, was driven from his capital into voluntary and perpetual exile. Constans embarked for Greece, and, as if he meant to retort the abhorrence which he deserved, he is said, from the imperial galley, to have spit against the walls of his native city. After passing the walls at Athens, he sailed to Tarentum in Italy, visited Rome, and concluded a long pilgrimage of disgrace and sacrilegious rapine, by fixing his residence at Syracuse. But if Constans could fly from his people, he could not fly from himself. The remorse of his conscience created a phantom who pursued him by land and sea, by day and by night, and the visionary Theodosius, presenting to his lips a cup of blood, said, or seemed to say, "Drink, brother, drink," a sure emblem of the aggravation of his guilt, since he had received from the hands of the deacon the mystic cup of the blood of Christ. Odious to himself and to mankind, Constans perished by domestic, perhaps by episcopal, treason, in the capital of Sicily. A servant who waited in the bath, after pouring warm water on his head, struck him violently with the vase. He fell, stunned by the blow, and suffocated by the water, and his attendants, who wondered at the tedious delay, beheld with indifference the corpse of their lifeless emperor. The troops of Sicily invested with the purple an obscure youth, whose inimitable beauty eluded, and it might easily elude, the declining art of the painters and sculptors of the age.

Constans had left in the Byzantine palace three sons, the eldest of whom had been clothed in his infancy with the purple. When the father summoned them to attend his person in Sicily, these precious hostages were detained by the Greeks, and a firm refusal informed him that they were the children of the state. The news of his murder was conveyed with almost supernatural speed from Syracuse to Constantinople, and Constantine, the eldest of his sons, inherited his throne without being the heir of the public hatred. His subjects contributed, with zeal and alacrity, to chastise the guilt and presumption of a province which had usurped the rights of the senate and people, the young emperor sailed from the Hellespont with a powerful fleet, and the legions of Rome and Carthage were assembled under his standard in the harbour of Syracuse. The defeat of the Sicilian tyrant was easy, his punishment just, and his beautiful head was exposed in the hippodrome. But I cannot applaud the clemency of a prince, who, among a crowd of victims, condemned the son of a patrician, for deploring with some bitterness the execution of a virtuous father. The youth was castrated; he survived the operation, and the memory of this indecent cruelty is preserved by the elevation of Germanus to the rank of a patriarch and saint. After pouring this bloody libation on his father's tomb, Constantine returned to his capital, and the growth of his young beard

Constantine IV
Patriarch,
A D 668
September

during the Sicilian voyage, was announced by the familiar surname of Pogonatus, to the Grecian world. But his reign, like that of his predecessor, was stained with fraternal discord. On his two brothers, Heraclius and Tiberius, he had bestowed the title of Augustus, an empty title, for they continued to languish, without trust or power, in the solitude of the palace. At their secret instigation, the troops of the Anatolian theme or province, approached the city on the Asiatic side, demanded for the royal brothers the partition or exercise of sovereignty, and supported their seditious claim by a theological argument. They were christians, (they cried,) and orthodox catholics, the sincere votaries of the holy and undivided Trinity. Since there are three equal persons in heaven, it is reasonable there should be three equal persons upon earth. The emperor invited these learned divines to a friendly conference, in which they might propose their arguments to the senate. They obeyed the summons, but the prospect of their bodies hanging on the gibbet in the suburb of Galata, reconciled their companions to the unity of the reign of Constantine. He pardoned his brothers, and their names were still pronounced in the public acclamations. but on the repetition or suspicion of a similar offence, the obnoxious princes were deprived of their titles and noses, in the presence of the catholic bishops who were assembled at Constantinople in the sixth general synod. In the close of his life, Pogonatus was anxious only to establish the right of primogeniture. the hair of his two sons, Justinian and Heraclius, was offered on the shrine of St Peter, as a symbol of their spiritual adoption by the pope, but the elder was alone exalted to the rank of Augustus, and the assurance of the empire.

Justinian II
A D 685
September

After the decease of his father, the inheritance of the Roman world devolved to Justinian II, and the name of a triumphant lawgiver was dis honoured by the vices of a boy, who imitated his namesake only in the expensive luxury of building. His passions were strong, his understanding was feeble, and he was intoxicated with a foolish pride, that his birth had given him the command of millions, of whom the smallest community would not have chosen him for their local magistrate. His favourite ministers were two beings the least susceptible of human sympathy, a eunuch and a monk. to the one he abandoned the palace, to the other the finances, the former corrected the emperor's mother with a scourge, the latter suspended the insolvent tributaries, with their heads downwards, over a slow and smoky fire. Since the days of Commodus and Caracalla, the cruelty of the Roman princes had most commonly been the effect of their fear, but Justinian, who possessed some vigour of character, enjoyed the sufferings, and braved the revenge, of his subjects about ten years till the measure was full, of his crimes and of their patience. In a dark dungeon, Leontius, a general of reputation, had groaned above three years, with some of the noblest and most deserving of the patricians. he was suddenly drawn forth to assume the government of Greece, and this promotion of an injured man was a mark of the contempt rather than of the confidence of his prince. As he was followed to the port by the kind offices of his friends, Leontius observed with a sigh that he was a victim adorned for sacrifice, and that inevitable death would pursue his footsteps. They ventured to reply, that glory and empire might be the recompence of a generous resolution, that every order of men abhorred the reign of a monster, and that the hands of two hundred thousand patriots expected only the voice of a leader. The night was chosen for their deliverance, and in the first effort of the conspirators, the prefect was slain, and the prisons were forced open. the emissaries of Leontius proclaimed in every street, "Christians, to St Sophia" and the reasonable text of the patriarch, "This is the day of the Lord" was the prelude of an inflammatory sermon. From the church the people adjourned to the hippodrome. Justinian, in whose cause not a sword had been drawn, was dragged before these tumultuary judges, and their clamours demanded the instant death of the tyrant. But Leontius, who was already clothed with the purple, cast an eye of pity on the prostrate son of his own benefactor and of so many emperors. The life of Justinian was spared, the amputation of his nose, perhaps of his tongue, was imperfectly performed. the happy flexibility of the Greek language could impose the name of Rhinotmetus, and the mutilated tyrant was banished to Chersonæ in Crim-Tartary, a lonely settlement, where corn, wine, and oil, were imported as foreign luxuries.

On the edge of the Seythian wilderness, Justinian still cherished the pride <sup>His exile, A D 695-705</sup> of his birth, and the hope of his restoration. After three years' exile, he received the pleasing intelligence that his injury was avenged by a second revolution, and that Leontius in his turn had been dethroned and mutilated by the rebel Apsimar, who assumed the more respectable name of Tiberius. But the claim of lineal succession was still formidable to a plebeian usurper, and his jealousy was stimulated by the complaints and charges of the Chersonites, who beheld the vices of the tyrant in the spirit of the exile. With a band of followers, attached to his person by common hope or common despair, Justinian fled from the inhospitable shore to the horde of the Chozars, who pitched their tents between the Tanais and Borysthenes. The Khan entertained with pity and respect the royal suppliant. Phanagoria, once an opulent city, on the Asiatic side of the lake Mæotis, was assigned for his residence, and every Roman prejudice was stifled in his marriage with the sister of the barbarian, who seems, however, from the name of Theodora to have received the sacrament of baptism. But the faithless Chozar was soon tempted by the gold of Constantinople, and had not the design been revealed by the conjugal love of Theodora, her husband must have been assassinated, or betrayed into the power of his enemies. After strangling, with his own hands, the two emissaries of the Khan, Justinian sent back his wife to her brother, and embarked on the Euxine in search of new and more faithful allies. His vessel was assailed by a violent tempest, and one of his pious companions advised him to deserve the mercy of God by a vow of general forgiveness, if he should be restored to the throne. "Of forgiveness?" replied the intrepid tyrant, "may I perish this instant—may the Almighty overwhelm me in the waves—if I consent to spare a single head of my enemies!" He survived this iniquitous menace, sailed into the mouth of the Danube, trusted his person in the royal village of the Bulgarians, and purchased the aid of Terbelis, a pagan conqueror, by the promise of his daughter and a fair partition of the treasures of the empire. The Bulgarian kingdom extended to the confines of Thrace, and the two princes besieged Constantinople at the head of fifteen thousand horse. Asparmar was dismayed by the sudden and hostile apparition of his rival, whose head had been promised by the Chozar, and of whose evasion he was yet ignorant. After an absence of ten years, the crimes of Justinian were faintly remembered, and the birth and misfortunes of their hereditary sovereign excited the pity of the multitude, ever discontented with the ruling powers, and by the active diligence of his adherents he was introduced into the city and palace of Constantine.

In rewarding his allies, and recalling his wife, Justinian displayed some sense of honour and gratitude, and Terbelis retired, after sweeping away a heap of gold coin, which he measured with his Scythian whip. But never was vow more religiously performed than the sacred oath of revenge which he had sworn amidst the storms of the Euxine. The two usurpers, for I must reserve the name of tyrant for the conqueror, were dragged into the hippodrome, the one from his prison, the other from his palace. Before their execution, Leontius and Asparmar were cast prostrate in chains beneath the throne of the emperor, and Justinian, planting a foot on each of their necks, contemplated above an hour the chariot-race, while the inconstant people shouted, in the words of the Psalmist, "Thou shalt trample on the asp and basilisk, and on the lion and dragon shalt thou set thy foot!" The universal defection which he had once experienced might provoke him to repeat the wish of Caligula, that the Roman people had but one head. Yet I shall presume to observe, that such a wish is unworthy of an ingenious tyrant, since his revenge and cruelty would have been extinguished by a single blow, instead of the slow variety of tortures which Justinian inflicted on the victims of his anger. His pleasures were inexhaustible: neither private virtue nor public service could expiate the guilt of active, or even passive, obedience to an established government, and during the six years of his new reign, he considered the axe, the cord, and the rack, as the only instruments of royalty. But his most implacable hatred was pointed against the Chersonites, who had insulted his exile and violated the laws of hospitality. Their remote situation afforded some means of defence, or at least of escape, and a grievous tax was imposed on Constantinople, to supply the preparations of a fleet and army. "All are guilty, and all must perish," was the mandate of Justinian, and the bloody execution was intrusted to his favourite Stephen, who was recommended by the epithet of the savage. Yet even the savage Stephen imperfectly accomplished the intentions of his sovereign. The slowness of his attack allowed the greater part of the inhabitants to withdraw into the country, and the minister of vengeance contented himself with reducing the youth of both sexes to a state of servitude, with roasting alive seven of the principal citizens, with drowning twenty in the sea, and with reserving forty-two in chains to receive their doom from the mouth of the emperor. In their return, the fleet was driven on the rocky shores of Anatolia, and Justinian applauded the obedience of the Euxine, which had involved so many thousands of his subjects and enemies in a common shipwreck. But the tyrant was still insatiate of blood, and a second expedition was commanded to extirpate the remains of the proscribed colony. In the short interval, the Chersonites had returned to their city, and were prepared to die in arms, the Khan of the Chozars had renounced the cause of his odious brother, the exiles of every province were assembled in Tauris, and Bardanes, under the name of Philippius, was invested with the purple. The imperial troops, unwilling and unable to perpetrate the revenge of Justinian, escaped his displeasure by abjuring his allegiance. The fleet, under their new sovereign, steered back a more auspicious course to the harbours of Sinope and Constantinople, and every tongue was prompt to pronounce, every hand to execute, the death of the tyrant. Destitute of friends, he was deserted by his barbarian guards, and the stroke of the assassin was praised as an act of patriotism and Roman virtue. His son Tiberius had taken refuge in a church, his aged grandmother guarded the door, and the innocent youth, suspending round his neck the most formidable relics, embraced with one hand the altar, with the other the wood of the true cross. But the popular fury that dares to trample on superstition, is deaf to the cries of humanity, and the race of Heraclius was extinguished after a reign of one hundred years.

Between the fall of the Heraclian and the rise of the Isaurian dynasty, a short interval of six years is divided into three reigns. Bardanes, or Philippius, was

Philippius,
A.D. 711
December

hailed at Constantinople as a hero who had delivered his country from a tyrant, and he might taste some moments of happiness in the first transports of sincere and universal joy. Justinian had left behind him an ample treasure, the fruit of cruelty and rapine; but this useful fund was soon and idly dissipated by his successor. On the festival of his birth-day, Philippius entertained the multitude with the games of the hippodrome, from thence he paraded through the streets with a thousand banners and a thousand trumpets, refreshed himself in the baths of Zeuxippus, and returning to the palace, entertained his nobles with a sumptuous banquet. At the meridian hour he withdrew to his chamber, intoxicated with flattery and wine, and forgetful that his example had made every subject ambitious, and that every ambitious subject was his secret enemy. Some bold conspirators introduced themselves in the disorder of the feast, and the slumbering monarch was surprised, bound, blinded, and deposed, before he was sensible of his danger. Yet the traitors were deprived of their reward, and the free voice of the senate and people promoted

Anastasius II
A D 713
June 4

Artemius from the office of secretary to that of emperor, he assumed the title of Anastasius the second, and displayed in a short and troubled reign the virtues both of peace and war. But, after the extinction of the imperial line, the rule of obedience was violated, and every change diffused the seeds of new revolutions. In a mutiny of the fleet, an obscure and reluctant officer of the revenue was forcibly invested with the purple; after some months of a naval war, Anastasius resigned the sceptre, and the conqueror, Theodosius the third, submitted in his turn to the superior ascendant of Leo, the general and

Theodosius III
A D 716
January

emperor of the oriental troops. His two predecessors were permitted to embrace the ecclesiastical profession; the restless impatience of Anastasius tempted him to risk and to lose his life in a treasonable enterprise, but the last days of Theodosius were honourable and secure. The single sublime word, "HΡΑΛΤΗ," which he inscribed on his tomb, expresses the confidence of philosophy or religion, and the fame of his miracles was long preserved among the people of Ephesus. This convenient shelter of the church might sometimes impose a lesson of clemency, but it may be questioned whether it is for the public interest to diminish the perils of unsuccessful ambition.

Leo III
the Isaurian
A D 718
March 25

I have dwelt on the fall of a tyrant, I shall briefly represent the founder of a new dynasty, who is known to posterity by the invectives of his enemies, and whose public and private life is involved in the ecclesiastical story of the Iconoclasts. Yet in spite of the clamours of superstition, a favourable prejudice for the character of Leo the Isaurian may be reasonably drawn from the obscurity of his birth and the duration of his reign.—I In an age of manly spirit, the prospect of an imperial reward would have kindled every energy of the mind, and produced a crowd of competitors as deserving as they were desirous to reign. Even in the corruption and debility of the modern Greeks, the elevation of a plebeian from the last to the first rank of society, supposes some qualifications above the level of the multitude. He would probably be ignorant and disdainful of speculative science, and, in the pursuit of fortune, he might absolve himself from the obligations of benevolence and justice; but to his character we may ascribe the useful virtues of prudence and fortitude, the knowledge of mankind, and the important art of gaining their confidence and directing their passions. It is agreed that Leo was a native of Isauria, and that Conon was his primitive name. The writers, whose awkward satire is praise, describe him as an itinerant pedlar, who drove an ass with some paltry merchandise to the country fairs, and foolishly relate that he met on the road some Jewish fortune-tellers, who promised him the Roman empire, on condition that he should abolish the worship of idols. A more probable account relates the migration of his father from Asia Minor to Thrace, where he exercised the lucrative trade of a grazier, and he must have acquired considerable wealth, since the first introduction of his son was procured by a supply of five hundred sheep to the imperial camp. His first service was in the guards of Justinian, where he soon attracted the notice, and by degrees the jealousy, of the tyrant. His valour and dexterity were conspicuous in the Colehian war; from Anastasius he received the command of the Anatolian legions, and by the suffrage of the soldiers he was raised to the empire with the general applause of the Roman world.—II In this dangerous elevation, Leo the third supported himself against the envy of his equals, the discontent of a powerful faction, and the assaults of his foreign and domestic enemies. The catholics, who accuse his religious innovations, are obliged to confess that they were undertaken with temper and conducted with firmness. Their silence respects the wisdom of his administration and the purity of his manners. After a reign of twenty-four years he peaceably expired in the palace of Constantinople, and the purple which he had acquired, was transmitted by the right of inheritance to the third generation.

312

In a long reign of thirty-four years the son and successor of Leo, Constantine the fifth, surnamed Copronymus

Constantine V
Coprionimus
A D 741
June 18.

attacked with less temperate zeal the images or idols of the church. Their votaries have exhausted the bitterness of religious gall in their portrait of this spotted panther, this antichrist, this flying dragon of the serpent's seed, who surpassed the vices of Elagabalus and Nero. His reign was a long butchery of whatever was most noble or holy or innocent in his empire. In person, the emperor assisted at the execution of his victims, surveyed their agonies, listened to their groans, and indulged, without satiating, his appetite for blood. A plate of noses was accepted as a grateful offering, and his domestics were often scourged or mutilated by the royal hand. His surname was derived from his pollution of his baptismal font. The infant might be excused, but the manly pleasures of Copronymus degraded him below the level of a brute, his lust confounded the eternal distinctions of sex and species, and he seemed to extract some unnatural delight from the objects most offensive to human sense. In his religion, the Iconoclast was a heretic, a Jew, a Mahometan, a pagan, and an atheist, and his belief of an invisible power could be discovered only in his magic rites, human victims, and nocturnal sacrifices to Venus and the dæmons of antiquity. His life was stained with the most opposite vices, and the ulcers which covered his body, anticipated before his death the sentiment of hell-tortures. Of these accusations, which I have so patiently copied, a part is refuted by its own absurdity, and in the private anecdotes of the life of princes, the lie is more easy as the detection is more difficult. Without adopting the pernicious maxim, that where much is alleged, something must be true, I can however discern, that Constantine the fifth was dissolute and cruel. Calumny is more prone to exaggerate than to invent, and her licentious tongue is checked in some measure by the experience of the age and country to which she appeals. Of the bishops and monks, the generals and magistrates, who are said to have suffered under his reign, the numbers are recorded, the names were conspicuous, the execution was public, the mutilation visible and permanent. The catholics hated the person and government of Copronymus, but even their hatred is a proof of their oppression. They dissemble the provocations which might excuse or justify his rigour, but even these provocations must gradually inflame his resentment, and harden his temper in the use or the abuse of despotism. Yet the character of the fifth Constantine was not devoid of merit, nor did his government always deserve the curses or the contempt of the Greeks. From the confession of his enemies I am informed of the restoration of an ancient aqueduct, of the redemption of two thousand five hundred captives, of the uncommon plenty of the times, and of the new colonies with which he re-peopled Constantinople and the Thracian cities. They reluctantly praise his activity and courage: he was on horseback in the field at the head of his legions, and, although the fortune of his arms was various, he triumphed by sea and land, on the Euphrates and the Danube, in civil and barbarian war. Heretical praise must be cast into the scale, to counterbalance the weight of orthodox invective. The Iconoclasts revered the virtues of the prince: forty years after his death, they still prayed before the tomb of the saint. A miraculous vision was propagated by fanaticism or fraud, and the christian hero appeared on a milk-white steed, brandishing his lance against the pagans of Bulgaria. "An absurd fable," says the catholic historian, "since Copronymus is chained with the dæmons in the abyss of hell."

Leo the fourth, the son of the fifth and the father of the sixth Constantine, was of a feeble constitution both of mind and body, and the principal care of his reign was the settlement of the succession. The association of the young Constantine was urged by the officious zeal of his subjects, and the emperor, conscious of his decay, complied, after a prudent hesitation, with their unanimous wishes. The royal infant, at the age of five years, was crowned with his mother Irene, and the national consent was ratified by every circumstance of pomp and solemnity, that could dazzle the eyes, or bind the conscience, of the Greeks. An oath of fidelity was administered in the palace, the church, and the hippodrome, to the several orders of the state, who adjured the holy names of the Son, and mother, of God. "Be witness, O Christ! that we will watch over the safety of Constantine the son of Leo, expose our lives in his service, and bear true allegiance to his person and posterity." They pledged their faith on the wood of the true cross, and the act of their engagement was deposited on the altar of St Sophia. The first to swear, and the first to violate their oath, were the five sons of Copronymus by a second marriage, and the story of these princes is singular and tragic. The right of primogeniture excluded them from the throne, the injustice of their elder brother defrauded them of a legacy of about two millions sterling, some vain titles were not deemed a sufficient compensation for wealth and power, and they repeatedly conspired against their nephew, before and after the death of his father. Their first attempt was pardoned, for the second offence they were condemned to the ecclesiastical state, and for the third treason, Nicophorus, the eldest and most guilty, was deprived of his eyes, and his four brothers, Christopher, Nicetas, Anthemius, and Eudoxas, were punished, as a milder sentence, by the amputation of their tongues. After five years' confinement, they escaped to the church of St Sophia, and displayed a pathetic spectacle to the people. "Countrymen and christians," cried Nicophorus for himself and his mute brethren, "behold the sons of your emperor, if you can still recognize our features in this miserable state. A life, an imperfect life, is all that the malice of our enemies has spared. It is now threatened, and we now throw ourselves on your compassion." The rising murmur might have produced a revolution, had it not been checked by the presence of a minister, who soothed the unhappy princes with flattery and hope, and gently drew them from the sanctuary to the palace. They were speedily embarked for Greece, and Athens was allotted for the place of their exile. In this calm retreat, and in their helpless condition, Nicephorus and his brothers were tormented by the thirst of power, and tempted by a Slavonian chief, who offered to break their prison, and to lead them in arms, and in the 'purple, to the gates of Constantinople. But the Athenian people, ever zealous in the cause of Irene, prevented her justice or cruelty, and the five sons of Copronymus were plunged in eternal darkness and oblivion.

Leo IV
A.D. 775
Sept. 14

Constantine VI and Irene,
A D 780
Sept 8

For himself, that emperor had chosen a barbarian wife, the daughter of the khan of the Chozars, but in the marriage of his heir, he preferred an Athenian virgin, an orphan, seventeen years old, whose sole fortune must have consisted in her personal accomplishments. The nuptials of Leo and Irene were celebrated with royal pomp, she soon acquired the love and confidence of a feeble husband, and in his testament he declared the empress guardian of the Roman world, and of their son Constantine the sixth, who was no more than ten years of age. During his childhood, Irene most ably and assiduously discharged, in her public administration, the duties of a faithful mother, and her zeal in the restoration of images has deserved the name and honours of a saint, which she still occupies in the Greek calendar. But the emperor attained the maturity of youth, the maternal yoke became more grievous, and he listened to the favourites of his own age, who shared his pleasures, and were ambitious of sharing his power. Their reasons convinced him of his right, their praises of his ability, to reign, and he consented to reward the services of Irene by a perpetual banishment to the isle of Sicily. But her vigilance and penetration easily disconcerted their rash projects: a similar, or more severe, punishment was retaliated on themselves and their advisers. And Irene inflicted on the ungrateful prince the chastisement of a boy. After this contest, the mother and the son were at the head of two domestic factions, and, instead of mild influence and voluntary obedience, she held in chains a captive and an enemy. The empress was overthrown by the abuse of victory, the oath of fidelity, which she exacted to herself alone, was pronounced with reluctant murmurs, and the bold refusal of the Armenian guards encouraged a free and general declaration, that Constantine the sixth was the lawful emperor of the Romans. In this character he ascended his hereditary throne, and dismissed Irene to a life of solitude and repose. But her haughty spirit condescended to the arts of dissimulation: she flattered the bishops and eunuchs, revived the filial tenderness of the prince, regained his confidence, and betrayed his credulity. The character of Constantine was not destitute of sense or spirit, but his education had been studiously neglected, and his ambitious mother exposed to the public censure the vices which she had nourished, and the actions which she had secretly advised. His divorce and second marriage offended the prejudices of the clergy, and by his imprudent rigour he forfeited the attachment of the Armenian guards. A powerful conspiracy was formed for the restoration of Irene, and the secret, though widely diffused, was faithfully kept about eight months, till the emperor, suspicious of his danger, escaped from Constantinople, with the design of appealing to the provinces and armies. By this hasty flight, the empress was left on the brink of the precipice, yet before she implored the mercy of her son, Irene addressed a private epistle to the friends whom she had placed about his person, with a menace, that, unless they accomplished, she would reveal, their treason. Their fear rendered them intrepid, they seized the emperor, on the Asiatic shore, and he was transported to the porphyry apartment of the palace, where he had first seen the light. In the mind of Irene, ambition had stifled every sentiment of humanity and nature, and it was decreed in her bloody council, that Constantine should be rendered incapable of the throne. Her emissaries assailed the sleeping prince, and stabbed their daggers with such violence and precipitation into his eyes, as if they meant to execute a mortal sentence. An ambiguous passage of Theophanes persuaded the annalist of the church that death was the immediate consequence of this barbarous execution. The catholics have been deceived or subdued by the authority of Baronius, and protestant zeal has re-echoed the words of a cardinal, desirous, as it should seem, to favour the patroness of images. Yet the blind son of Irene survived many years, oppressed by the court and forgotten by the world: the Isaurian dynasty was silently extinguished, and the memory of Constantine was recalled only by the nuptials of his daughter Euphrosyne with the emperor Michael the second.

The most bigoted orthodoxy has justly execrated the unnatural mother, who may not easily be paralleled in the history of crimes. To her bloody deed, superstition has attributed a subsequent darkness of seventeen days, during which many vessels in mid-day were driven from their course, as if the sun, a globe of fire so vast and so remote, could sympathize with the atoms of a revolving planet. On earth, the crime of Irene was left five years unpunished, her reign was crowned with external splendour, and if she could silence the voice of conscience, she neither heard nor regarded the reproaches of mankind. The Roman world bowed to the government of a female, and as she moved through the streets of Constantinople, the reins of four milk-white steeds were held by as many patricians, who marched on foot before the golden chariot of their queen. But these patricians were for the most part eunuchs: and their black ingratitude justified, on this occasion, the popular hatred and contempt. Raised, enriched, intrusted with the first dignities of the empire, they basely conspired against their benefactress: the great treasurer Nicephorus was secretly invested with the purple, her successor was introduced into the palace, and crowned at St Sophia by the vernal patriarch. In their first interview, she recapitulated with dignity the revolutions of her life, gently accused the perfidy of Nicephorus, insinuated that he owed his life to her unsuspecting clemency, and, for the throne and treasures which she resigned, solicited a decent and honourable retreat. His avarice refused this modest compensation, and, in her exile of the isle of Lesbos, the empress earned a scanty subsistence by the labours of her distaff.

Irene,
A D 792
August 19

Nicephorus I
A D 802
October 31

Many tyrants have reigned undoubtedly more criminal than Nicephorus, but none, perhaps, have more deeply incurred the universal abhorrence of their people. His character was stained with the three odious vices of hypocrisy, ingratitude, and avarice: his want of virtue was not redeemed by any superior talents, nor his want of talents by any pleasing qualifications. Unskilful and unfortunate in war, Nicephorus was vanquished by the Saracens, and slain by the Bulgarians, and the advantage of his death overbalanced, in the public opinion, the destruction of a Roman army. His son and heir Stauracius escaped from the field with a mortal wound: yet six months of an expiring life were sufficient to refute his indecent, though popular, declaration, that he would in all things avoid the example of his father. On the near prospect of his decease, Michael, the great master of the palace, and the husband of his sister Procopia, was named by every person of the palace and city, except by his envious brother. Tenacious of a sceptre now falling from his hand, he conspired against the life of his successor, and cherished the idea of changing to a democracy the Roman empire. But these rash projects served only to inflame the zeal of the people and to remove the scruples of the candidate. Michael the first accepted the purple, and, before he sunk into the grave, the son of Nicephorus implored the clemency

Stauracius
A D 811
July 25

Michael I Nephew of the
A D 811
October 2

of his new sovereign. Had Michael in an age of peace ascended an hereditary throne, he might have reigned and died the father of his people, but his mild virtues were adapted to the shade of private life, nor was he capable of controlling the ambition of his equals, or of resisting the arms of the victorious Bulgarians. While his want of ability and success exposed him to the contempt of the soldiers, the masculine spirit of his wife Procopia awakened their indignation. Even the Greeks of the ninth century were provoked by the insolence of a female, who, in the front of the standards, presumed to direct their discipline and animate their valour, and their licentious clamours advised the new Semiramis to reverence the majesty of a Roman camp. After an unsuccessful campaign, the emperor left, in their winter-quarters of Thrace, a disaffected army under the command of his enemies, and their artful eloquence persuaded the soldiers to break the dominion of the eunuchs, to degrade the husband of Procopia, and to assert the right of a military election. They marched towards the capital: yet the clergy, the senate, and the people of Constantinople, adhered to the cause of Michael, and the troops and treasures of Asia might have protracted the mischiefs of civil war. But his humanity (by the ambitious it will be termed his weakness) protested, that not a drop of christian blood should be shed in his quarrel, and his messengers presented the conquerors with the keys of the city and the palace. They were disarmed by his innocence and submission, his life and his eyes were spared, and the imperial monk enjoyed the comforts of solitude and religion above thirty-two years after he had been stripped of the purple and separated from his wife.

A rebel in the time of Nicephorus, Leo V the Armenian,
A D 813.
July 11

the famous and unfortunate Bardanes, had once the curiosity to consult an Asiatic prophet, who, after prognosticating his fall, announced the fortunes of his three principal officers, Leo the Armenian, Michael the Phrygian, and Thomas the Cappadocian, the successive reigns of the two former, the fruitless and fatal enterprise of the third. This prediction was verified, or rather was produced, by the event. Ten years afterwards, when the Thracian camp rejected the husband of Procopia, the crown was presented to the same Leo, the first in military rank, and the secret author of the mutiny. As he affected to hesitate, "With this sword," said his companion Michael, "I will open the gates of Constantinople to your imperial sway, or instantly plunge it into your bosom, if you obstinately resist the just desires of your fellow-soldiers." The compliance of the Armenian was rewarded with the empire, and he reigned seven years and a half under the name of Leo the fifth. Educated in a camp, and ignorant both of laws and letters, he introduced into his civil government the rigour and even cruelty of military discipline, but if his severity was sometimes dangerous to the innocent, it was always formidable to the guilty. His religious inconstancy was taxed by the epithet of Chameleon, but the catholics have acknowledged by the voice of a saint and confessors, that the life of the Iconoclast was useful to the republic. The zeal of his companion Michael was repaid with riches, honours, and military command, and his subordinate talents were beneficially employed in the public service. Yet the Phrygian was dissatisfied at receiving as a favour a scanty portion of the imperial prize which he had bestowed on his equal, and his discontent, which sometimes evaporated in hasty discourse, at length assumed a more threatening and hostile aspect against a prince whom he represented as a cruel tyrant That tyrant, however, repeatedly detected, warned, and dismissed the old companion of his arms, till fear and resentment prevailed over gratitude, and Michael, after a scrutiny into his actions and designs, was convicted of treason, and sentenced to be burnt alive in the furnace of the private baths The devout humanity of the empress Theophano was fatal to her husband and family A solemn day, the twenty-fifth of December, had been fixed for the execution she urged, that the anniversary of the Saviour's birth would be profaned by this inhuman spectacle, and Leo consented with reluctance to a decent respite But on the vigil of the feast, his sleepless anxiety prompted him to visit at the dead of night the chamber in which his enemy was confined he beheld him released from his chain, and stretched on his gaoler's bed in a profound slumber Leo was alarmed at these signs of security and intelligence, but, though he retired with silent steps, his entrance and departure were noticed by a slave who lay concealed in a corner of the prison Under the pretence of requesting the spiritual aid of a confessor, Michael informed the conspirators, that their lives depended on his discretion, and that a few hours were left to assure their own safety, by the deliverance of their friend and country On the great festivals, a chosen band of priests and chanters was admitted into the palace by a private gate to sing matins in the chapel, and Leo, who regulated with the same strictness the discipline of the choir and of the camp, was seldom absent from those early devotions In the ecclesiastical habit, but with swords under their robes, the conspirators mingled with the procession, lurked in the angles of the chapel, and expected, as the signal of murder, the intonation of the first psalm by the emperor himself The imperfect light, and the uniformity of dress, might have favoured his escape, while their assault was pointed against a harmless priest, but they soon discovered their mistake, and encompassed on all sides the royal victim Without a weapon and without a friend, he grasped a weighty cross, and stood at bay against the hunters of his life, but as he asked for mercy, "This is the hour, not of mercy, but of vengeance," was the inexorable reply The stroke of a well-aimed sword separated from his body the right arm and the cross, and Leo the Armenian was slain at the foot of the altar

Michael II the Stammerer,
A D 820
Dec 25

A memorable reverse of fortune was displayed in Michael the second, who, from a defect in his speech, was sur-named the Stammerer He was snatched from the fiery furnace to the sovereignty of an empire, and as in the tumult a smith could not readily be found, the fetters remained on his legs several hours after he was seated on the throne of the Cæsars The royal blood which had been the price of his elevation, was unprofitably spent in the purple he retained the ignoble vices of his origin, and Michael lost his provinces with a supine indifference as if they had been the inheritance of his fathers His title was disputed by Thomas, the last of the military triumvirate, who transported into Europe four-score thousand barbarians from the banks of the Tigris and the shores of the Caspian He formed the siege of Constantinople, but the capital was defended with spiritual and carnal weapons, a Bulgarian king assaulted the camp of the orientals, and Thomas had the misfortune, or the weakness, to fall alive into the power of the conqueror The hands and feet of the rebel were amputated, he was placed on an ass, and, amidst the insults of the people, was led through the streets, which he sprinkled with his blood The depravation of manners, as savage as they were corrupt, is marked by the presence of the emperor himself Deaf to the lamentations of a fellow-soldier, he incessantly pressed the discovery of more accomplices, till his curiosity was checked by the question of an honest or guilty minister, "Would you give credit to an enemy, against the most faithful of your friends?" After the death of his first wife, the emperor, at the request of the senate, drew from her monastery Euphrosyne, the daughter of Constantine the sixth Her august birth might justify a stipulation in the marriage-contract, that her children should equally share the empire with their elder brother But the nuptials of Michael and Euphrosyne were barren, and she was content with the title of mother of Theophilus, his son and successor

The character of Theophilus is a rare example in which religious zeal has allowed, and perhaps magnified, the virtues of a heretic and a persecutor His valour was often felt by the enemies, and his justice by the subjects, of the monarchy, but the valour of Theophilus was rash and fruitless, and his justice arbitrary and cruel He displayed the banner of the cross against the Saracens, but his five expeditions were concluded by a signal overthrow, Amorium, the native city of his ancestors, was levelled with the ground, and from his military toils, he derived only the surname of the Unfortunate The wisdom of a sovereign is comprised in the institution of laws and the choice of magistrates, and while he seems without action, his civil government revolves round his centre with the silence and order of the planetary system But the justice of Theophilus was fashioned on the model of the oriental despots, who, in personal and irregular acts of authority, consult the reason or passion of the moment without measuring the sentence by the law, or the penalty by the offence A poor woman threw herself at the emperor's feet to complain of a powerful neighbour, the brother of the empress, who had raised his palace-wall to such an inconvenient height, that her humble dwelling was excluded from light and air On the proof of the fact instead of granting, like an ordinary judge, sufficient or ample damages to the plaintiff the sovereign adjudged to her use and benefit the palace and the

Theophilus,
A D 829
October 3

ground Nor was Theophilus content with this extravagant satisfaction his zeal converted a civil trespass into a criminal act, and the unfortunate patrician was stripped and scourged in the public place of Constantinople For some venial offences, some defect of equity or vigilance, the principal ministers, a præfect, a quæstor, a captain of the guards, were banished or mutilated, or scalded with boiling pitch, or burnt alive in the hippodrome, and as these dreadful examples might be the effects of error or caprice, they must have alienated from his service the best and wisest of the citizens But the pride of the monarch was flattered in the exercise of power, or, as he thought, of virtue, and the people, safe in their obscurity, applauded the danger and debasement of their superiors This extraordinary rigour was justified, in some measure, by its salutary consequences, since, after a scrutiny of seventeen days, not a complaint or abuse could be found in the court or city and it might be alleged that the Greeks could be ruled only with a rod of iron, and that the public interest is the motive and law of the supreme judge Yet in the crime, or the suspicion, of treason, that judge is of all others the most credulous and partial Theophilus might inflict a tardy vengeance on the assassins of Leo and the saviours of his father, but he enjoyed the fruits of their crime, and his jealous tyranny sacrificed a brother and a prince to the future safety of his life A Persian of the race of the Sassanides died in poverty and exile at Constantinople, leaving an only son, the issue of a plebeian marriage At the age of twelve years, the royal birth of Theophobus was revealed, and his merit was not unworthy of his birth He was educated in the Byzantine palace, a christian and a soldier, advanced with rapid steps in the career of fortune and glory, received the hand of the emperor's sister, and was promoted to the command of thirty thousand Persians, who, like his father, had fled from the Mahometan conquerors These troops, doubly infected with mercenary and fanatic vices, were desirous of revolting against their benefactor, and erecting the standard of their native king but the loyal Theophobus rejected their offers, disconcerted their schemes, and escaped from their hands to the camp or palace of his royal brother A generous confidence might have secured a faithful and able guardian for his wife and his infant son, to whom Theophilus, in the flower of his age, was compelled to leave the inheritance of the empire But his jealousy was exasperated by envy and disease he feared the dangerous virtues which might either support or oppress their infancy and weakness, and the dying emperor demanded the head of the Persian prince With savage delight, he recognized the familiar features of his brother "Thou art no longer Theophobus," he said, and, sinking on his couch, he added, with a faltering voice, "Soon, too soon, I shall be no more Theophilus!"

The Russians, who have borrowed from the Greeks the greatest part of their civil and ecclesiastical policy, preserved, till the last century, a singular institution in the marriage of the Czar They collected, not the virgins of every rank and of every province, a vain and romantic idea, but the daughters of the principal nobles, who awaited in the palace the choice of their sovereign It is affirmed, that a similar method was adopted in the nuptials of Theophilus With a golden apple in his hand, he slowly walked between two lines of contending beauties, his eye was detained by the charms of Icasia, and, in the awkwardness of a first declaration, the prince could only observe, that, in this world, women had been the cause of much evil "And surely, sir," she pertly replied, "they have likewise been the occasion of much good" This affectation of unseasonable wit displeased the imperial lover, he turned aside in disgust, Icasia concealed her mortification in a convent, and the modest silence of Theodora was rewarded with the golden apple She deserved the love, but did not escape the severity, of her lord From the palace garden he beheld a vessel deeply laden, and steering into the port on the discovery that the precious cargo of Syrian luxury was the property of his wife, he condemned the ship to the flames, with a sharp reproach, that her avarice had degraded the character of an empress into that of a merchant Yet his last choice intrusted her with the guardianship of the empire and her son Michael, who was left an orphan in the fifth year of his age The restoration of images, and the final extirpation of the Iconoclasts, has endeared her name to the devotion of the Greeks, but in the fervour of religious zeal, Theodora entertained a grateful regard for the memory and salvation of her husband After thirteen years of a prudent and frugal administration, she perceived the decline of her influence, but the second Irene imitated only the virtues of her predecessor Instead of conspiring against the life or government of her son, she retired, without a struggle, though not without a murmur, to the solitude of private life, deploring the ingratitude, the vices, and the inevitable ruin, of the worthless youth

Among the successors of Nero and Elagabalus, we have not hitherto found the imitation of their vices, the character of a Roman prince who considered pleasure as the object of life, and virtue as the enemy of pleasure Whatever might have been the maternal care of Theodora in the education of Michael the third, her unfortunate son was a king before he was a man If the ambitious mother laboured to check the progress of reason, she could not cool the ebullition of passion, and her selfish policy was justly repaid by the contempt and ingratitude of the headstrong youth At the age of eighteen, he rejected her authority, without feeling his own incapacity to govern the empire and himself With Theodora, all gravity and wisdom retired from the court, their place was supplied by the alternate dominion of vice and folly, and it was impossible, without forfeiting the public esteem, to acquire or preserve the favour of the emperor. The millions of gold and silver which had been accumulated for the service of the state, were lavished on the vilest of men, who flattered his passions and shared his pleasures, and in a reign of thirteen years, the richest of sovereigns was compelled to strip the palace and the churches of their precious furniture. Like Nero, he delighted in the amusements of the theatre, and sighed to be surpassed in the accomplishments in which he should have blushed to excel. Yet the studies of Nero in music and poetry, betrayed some symptoms of a liberal taste, the more ignoble arts of the son of Theophilus were confined to the chariot-race or the hippodrome. The four factions which had agitated the peace, still amused the idleness, of the capital. For himself, the emperor assumed the blue livery, the three rival colours were distributed to his favourites, and in the vile though eager contention he forgot the dignity of his person and the safety of his dominions. He silenced the messenger of an invasion, who presumed to divert his attention in the most critical moment of the race, and by his command, the importunate beacons were extinguished, that too frequently spread the alarm from Tarsus to Constantinople. The most skilful charioteers obtained the first place in his confidence and esteem, their merit was profusely rewarded, the emperor feasted in their houses, and presented their children at the baptismal font, and while he applauded his own popularity, he affected to blame the cold and stately reserve of his predecessors. The unnatural lusts which had degraded even the manhood of Nero, were banished from the world, yet the strength of Michael was consumed by the indulgence of love and intemperance. In his midnight revels, when his passions were inflamed by wine, he was provoked to issue the most sanguinary commands, and if any feelings of humanity were left, he was reduced, with the return of sense, to approve the salutary disobedience of his servants. But the most extraordinary feature in the character of Michael, is the profane mockery of the religion of his country. The superstition of the Greeks might indeed excite the smile of a philosopher, but his smile would have been rational and temperate, and he must have condemned the ignorant folly of a youth who insulted the objects of public veneration. A buffoon of the court was invested in the robes of the patriarch, the twelve metropolitans, among whom the emperor was ranked, assumed their ecclesiastical garments, they used or abused the sacred vessels of the altar, and in their bacchanalian feasts, the holy communion was administered in a nauseous compound of vinegar and mustard. Nor were these impious spectacles concealed from the eyes of the city. On the day of a solemn festival, the emperor with his bishops or buffoons, rode on asses through the streets, encountered the true patriarch at the head of his clergy, and by their licentious shouts and obscene gestures, disordered the gravity of the christian procession. The devotion of Michael appeared only in some offence to reason or piety. He received his theatrical crowns from the statue of the Virgin, and an imperial tomb was violated for the sake of burning the bones of Constantine the Iconoclast. By this extravagant conduct, the son of Theophilus became as contemptible as he was odious. Every citizen was impatient for the deliverance of his country, and even the favourites of the moment were apprehensive that a caprice might snatch away what a caprice had bestowed. In the thirtieth year of his age, and in the hour of intoxication and sleep, Michael the third was murdered in his chamber by the founder of a new dynasty, whom the emperor had raised to an equality of rank and power.

Michael III
A D 842
January 20

The genealogy of Basil the Macedonian (if it be not the spurious offspring of pride and flattery) exhibits a genuine picture of the revolution of the most illustrious families. The Arsacides, the rivals of Rome, possessed the sceptre of the east near four hundred years, a younger branch of these Parthian kings continued to reign in Armenia, and their royal descendants survived the partition and servitude of that ancient monarchy. Two of these, Artabanus and Chienes, escaped or retired to the court of Leo the first. His bounty seated them in a safe and hospitable exile, in the province of Macedonia. Adrianople was their final settlement. During several generations they maintained the dignity of their birth, and their Roman patriotism rejected the tempting offers of the Persian and Arabian powers who recalled them to their native country. But their splendour was insensibly clouded by time and poverty, and the father of Basil was reduced to a small farm, which he cultivated with his own hands. Yet he scorned to disgrace the blood of the Arsacides by a plebeian alliance. His wife, a widow of Adrianople, was pleased to count among her ancestors the great Constantine, and their royal infant was connected by some dark affinity of lineage or country with the Macedonian Alexander. No sooner was he born, than the cradle of Basil, his family, and his city, were swept away by an inundation of the Bulgarians. He was educated a slave in a foreign land, and in this severe discipline, he acquired the hardness of body and flexibility of mind which promoted his future elevation. In the age of youth or manhood he shared the deliverance of the Roman captives, who generously broke their fetters, marched through Bulgaria to the shores of the Euxine, defeated two armies of barbarians, embarked in the ships which had been stationed for their reception, and returned to Constantinople, from whence they were distributed to their respective homes. But the freedom of Basil was naked and destitute. His farm was ruined by the calamities of war. After his father's death, his manual

Basil I
the Macedonian,
A.D. 867
Sept. 21

labour, or service, could no longer support a family of orphans, and he resolved to seek a more conspicuous theatre, in which every virtue and every vice may lead to the paths of greatness. The first night of his arrival at Constantinople, without friends or money, the weary pilgrim slept on the steps of the church of St Diomede. He was fed by the casual hospitality of a monk, and was introduced to the service of a cousin and namesake of the emperor Theophilus, who, though himself of a diminutive person, was always followed by a train of tall and handsome domestics. Basil attended his patron to the government of Peloponnesus, eclipsed, by his personal merit, the birth and dignity of Theophilus, and formed a useful connexion with a wealthy and charitable matron of Patris. Her spiritual or carnal love embraced the young adventurer, whom she adopted as her son. Danielis presented him with thirty slaves, and the produce of her bounty was expended in the support of his brothers, and the purchase of some large estates in Macedonia. His gratitude or ambition still attached him to the service of Theophilus, and a lucky accident recommended him to the notice of the court. A famous wrestler, in the train of the Bulgarian ambassadors, had defied, at the royal banquet, the boldest and most robust of the Greeks. The strength of Basil was praised, he accepted the challenge, and the barbarian champion was overthrown at the first onset. A beautiful but vicious horse was condemned to be harnessed; it was subdued by the dexterity and courage of the servant of Theophilus, and his conqueror was promoted to an honourable rank in the imperial stables. But it was impossible to obtain the confidence of Michael without complying with his vices, and his new favourite, the great chamberlain of the palace, was raised and supported by a disgraceful marriage with a royal concubine, and the dishonour of his sister, who succeeded to her place. The public administration had been abandoned to the Cæsar Bardas, the brother and enemy of Theodora, but the arts of female influence persuaded Michael to hate and to fear his uncle. He was drawn from Constantinople, under the pretext of a Cretan expedition, and stabbed in the tent of audience, by the sword of the chamberlain, and in the presence of the emperor. About a month after this execution, Basil was invested with the title of Augustus and the government of the empire. He supported this unequal association till his influence was forfeited by popular esteem. His life was endangered by the caprice of the emperor, and his dignity was profaned by a second colleague, who had rowed in the galleys. Yet the murder of his benefactor must be condemned as an act of ingratitude and treason, and the churches which he dedicated to the name of St Michael, were a poor and puerile expiation of his guilt.

The different ages of Basil the first may be compared with those of Augustus. The situation of the Greek did not allow him in his earliest youth to lead an army against his country, or to proscribe the noblest of her sons, but his aspiring genius stooped to the arts of a slave, he dissembled his ambition and even his virtues, and grasped, with the bloody hand of an assassin, the empire which he ruled with the wisdom and tenderness of a parent. A private citizen may feel his interest repugnant to his duty, but it must be from a deficiency of sense or courage, that an absolute monarch can separate his happiness from his glory, or his glory from the public welfare. The life or panegyric of Basil has indeed been composed and published under the long reign of his descendants, but even their stability on the throne may be justly ascribed to the superior merit of their ancestor. In his character, his grandson Constantine has attempted to delineate a perfect image of royalty, but that feeble prince, unless he had copied a real model, could not easily have soared so high above the level of his own conduct or conceptions. But the most solid praise of Basil is drawn from the comparison of a ruined and a flourishing monarchy, that which he wrested from the dissolute Michael, and that which he bequeathed to the Macedonian dynasty. The evils which had been sanctified by time and example, were corrected by his master-hand, and he revived, if not the national spirit, at least the order and majesty, of the Roman empire. His application was indefatigable, his temper cool, his understanding vigorous and decisive, and in his practice he observed that rare and salutary moderation, which pursues each virtue, at an equal distance between the opposite vices. His military service had been confined to the palace, nor was the emperor endowed with the spirit or the talents of a warrior. Yet under his reign the Roman arms were again formidable to the barbarians. As soon as he had formed a new army by discipline and exercise, he appeared in person on the banks of the Euphrates, curbed the pride of the Saracens, and suppressed the dangerous though just revolt of the Manichæans. His indignation against a rebel who had long eluded his pursuit, provoked him to wish and to pray, that, by the grace of God, he might drive three arrows into the head of Chrysochir. That odious head, which had been obtained by treason rather than by valour, was suspended from a tree, and thrice exposed to the dexterity of the imperial archer. A base revenge against the dead, more worthy of the times than of the character of Basil. But his principal merit was in the civil administration of the finances and of the laws. To replenish an exhausted treasury, it was proposed to resume the lavish and ill-placed gifts of his predecessor. His prudence abated one moiety of the restitution, and a sum of twelve hundred thousand pounds was instantly procured to answer the most pressing demands, and to allow some space for the mature operations of economy. Among the various schemes for the improvement of the revenue, a new mode was suggested of capitation, or tribute, which would have too much depended on the arbitrary discretion of the assessors. A sufficient list of honest and able agents was instantly produced by the minister, but on the more careful scrutiny of Basil himself, only two could be found, who might be safely intrusted with such dangerous powers, and they justified his esteem by declining his confidence. But the serious and successful diligence of the emperor established by degrees an equitable balance of property and payment, of receipt and expenditure: a peculiar fund was appropriated to each service, and a public method secured the interest of the prince and the property of the people. After reforming the luxury, he assigned two patrimonial estates to supply the decent plenty, of the imperial table: the contributions of the subject were reserved for his defence, and the residue was employed in the embellishment of the capital and provinces. A taste for building, however costly, may deserve some praise and much excuse, from whence industry is fed, art is encouraged, and some object is attained of public emolument or pleasure: the use of a road, an aqueduct, or an hospital, is obvious and solid, and the hundred churches that arose by the command of Basil, were consecrated by the devotion of the age. In the character of a judge, he was assiduous and impartial, desirous to save, and not afraid to strike the oppressors of the people were severely chastised, but his personal foes, whom it might be unsafe to pardon, were condemned, after the loss of their eyes, to a life of solitude and repentance. The change of language and manners demanded a revision of the obsolete jurisprudence of Justinian, the voluminous body of his Institutes, Pandects, Code, and Novels, was digested under forty titles, in the Greek idiom, and the Basilics, which were improved and completed by his son and grandson, must be referred to the original genius of the founder of their race. This glorious reign was terminated by an accident in the chase. A furious stag entangled his horns in the belt of Basil, and raised him from his horse: he was rescued by an attendant, who cut the belt and slew the animal, but the fall, or the fever, exhausted the strength of the aged monarch, and he expired in the palace, amidst the tears of his family and people. If he struck off the head of the faithful servant, for presuming to draw his sword against his sovereign, the pride of despotism, which had lain dormant in his life, revived in the last moments of despair, when he no longer wanted or valued the opinion of mankind.

Leo VI the Philosopher,
A. D. 886
March 1

Of the four sons of the emperor, Constantine died before his father, whose grief and credulity were amused by a flattering impostor and a vain apparition. Stephen, the youngest, was content with the honours of a patriarch and a saint, both Leo and Alexander were alike invested with the purple, but the powers of government were solely exercised by the elder brother. The name of Leo the sixth has been dignified with the title of philosopher, and the union of the prince and the sage, of the active and speculative virtues, would indeed constitute the perfection of human nature. But the claims of Leo are far short of this ideal excellence. Did he reduce his passions and appetites under the dominion of reason? His life was spent in the pomp of the palace, in the society of his wives and concubines, and even the clemency which he showed, and the peace which he strove to preserve, must be imputed to the softness and indolence of his character. Did he subdue his prejudices, and those of his subjects? His mind was tinged with the most puerile superstition, the influence of the clergy, and the errors of the people, were consecrated by his laws, and the oracles of Leo, which reveal, in prophetic style, the fates of the empire, are founded on the arts of astrology and divination. If we still inquire the reason of his sage appellation, it can only be replied, that the son of Basil was less ignorant than the greater part of his contemporaries in church and state, that his education had been directed by the learned Photius, and that several books of profane and ecclesiastical science were composed by the pen, or in the name, of the imperial philosopher. But the reputation of his philosophy and religion was overthrown by a domestic vice, the repetition of his nuptials. The primitive ideas of the merit and holiness of celibacy, were preached by the monks and entertained by the Greeks. Marriage was allowed as a necessary means for the propagation of mankind, after the death of either party, the survivor might satisfy, by a second union, the weakness or the strength of the flesh, but a third marriage was censured as a state of legal fornication, and a fourth was a sin or scandal as yet unknown to the Christians of the east. In the beginning of his reign, Leo himself had abolished the state of concubines, and condemned, without annulling, third marriages: but his patriotism and love soon compelled him to violate his own laws, and to incur the penance, which in a similar case he had imposed on his subjects. In his three first alliances, his nuptial bed was unfruitful, the emperor required a female companion, and the empire a legitimate heir. The beautiful Zoe was introduced into the palace as a concubine, and after a trial of her fecundity and the birth of Constantine, her lover declared his intention of legitimating the mother and the child, by the celebration of his fourth nuptials. But the patriarch Nicholas refused his blessing: the imperial baptism of the young prince was obtained by a promise of separation, and the contumacious husband of Zoe was excluded from the communion of the faithful. Neither the fear of exile, nor the desertion of his brethren, nor the authority of the Latin church, nor the danger of failure or doubt in the succession to the empire, could bend the spirit of the inflexible monk. After the death of Leo he was recalled from exile to the civil and ecclesiastical administration: and the edict of union which was promulgated in the name of Constantine, condemned the future scandal of fourth marriages, and left a tacit imputation on his own birth

Alexander Con
stantine VII Porphyrogeni-
tus, A D 911
May 11

In the Greek language purple and porphyry are the same word, and as the colours of nature are invariable, we may learn that a dark deep red was the Tyrian dye which stained the purple of the ancients. An apartment of the Byzantine palace was lined with porphyry: it was reserved for the use of the pregnant empresses, and the royal birth of their children was expressed by the appellation of porphyrogenite, or born in the purple. Several of the Roman princes had been blessed with an heir, but this peculiar surname was first applied to Constantine the seventh. His life and titular reign were of equal duration, but of fifty-four years, six had elapsed before his father's death, and the son of Leo was ever the voluntary or reluctant subject of those who oppressed his weakness or abused his confidence. His uncle Alexander, who had long been invested with the title of Augustus, was the first colleague and governor of the young prince: but in a rapid career of vice and folly, the brother of Leo already emulated the reputation of Michael, and when he was extinguished by a timely death, he entertained a project of castrating his nephew, and leaving the empire to a worthless favourite. The succeeding years of the minority of Constantine were occupied by his mother Zoe, and a succession or council of seven regents, who pursued their interest, gratified their passions, abandoned the republic, supplanted each other, and finally vanished in the presence of a soldier. From an obscure origin, Romanus Lecapenus had raised himself to the command of the naval armies, and in the anarchy of the times, had deserved, or at least had obtained, the national esteem. With a victorious and affectionate fleet, he sailed from the mouth of the Danube into the harbour of Constantinople, and was hailed as the deliverer of the people, and the guardian of the prince. His supreme office was at

Romanus I Le-
capenus
A D 919
Dec 24
Christopher,
Stephen Constantine VIII

first defined by the new appellation of father of the emperor, but Romanus soon disdained the subordinate powers of a minister, and assumed, with the titles of Caesar and Augustus, the full independence of royalty, which he held near five and twenty years. His three sons, Christopher, Stephen, and Constantine, were successively adorned with the same honours, and the lawful emperor was degraded from the first to the fifth rank in this college of princes. Yet, in the preservation of his life and crown, he might still applaud his own fortune and the clemency of the usurper. The examples of ancient and modern history would have excused the ambition of Romanus: the powers and the laws of the empire were in his hand, the spurious birth of Constantine would have justified his exclusion, and the grave or the monastery was open to receive the son of the concubine. But Lecapenus does not appear to have possessed either the virtues or the vices of a tyrant. The spirit and activity of his private life dissolved away in the sunshine of the throne, and in his licentious pleasures, he forgot the safety both of the republic and of his family. Of a mild and religious character, he respected the sanctity of oaths, the innocence of the youth, the memory of his parents, and the attachment of the people. The studious temper and retirement of Constantine disarmed the jealousy of power: his books and music, his pen and his pencil, were a constant source of amusement, and if he could improve a scanty allowance by the sale of his pictures, if their price was not enhanced by the name of the artist, he was endowed with a personal talent, which few princes could employ in the hour of adversity.

The fall of Romanus was occasioned by his own vices and those of his children. After the decease of Christopher, his eldest son, the two surviving brothers quarrelled with each other, and conspired against their father. At the hour of noon, when all strangers were regularly excluded from the palace, they entered his apartment with an armed force, and conveyed him, in the habit of a monk, to a small island in the Propontis, which was peopled by a religious community. The rumour of this domestic revolution excited a tumult in the city, but Porphyrogenitus alone, the true and lawful emperor, was the object of the public care, and the sons of Lecapenus were taught, by tardy experience, that they had achieved a guilty and perilous enterprise for the benefit of their rival. Their sister Helena, the wife of Constantine, revealed, or supposed, their treacherous design of assassinating her husband at the royal banquet. His loyal adherents were alarmed, and the two usurpers were prevented, seized, degraded from the purple, and embarked for the same island and monastery where their father had been so lately confined. Old Romanus met them on the beach with a sarcastic smile, and, after a just reproach of their folly and ingratitude, presented his imperial colleagues with an equal share of his water and vegetable diet. In the fortieth year of his reign, Constantine the seventh obtained the possession of the eastern world, which he ruled, or seemed to rule, near fifteen years. But he was devoid of that energy of character which could emerge into a life of action and glory, and the studies which had amused and dignified his leisure, were incompatible with the serious duties of a sovereign. The emperor neglected the practice, to instruct his son Romanus in the theory, of government: while he indulged the habits of intemperance and sloth, he dropt the reins of the administration into the hands of Helena his wife, and, in the shifting scene of her favour and caprice, each minister was regretted in the promotion of a more worthless successor. Yet the birth and misfortunes of Constantine had endeared him to the Greeks, they excused his failings,

Constantine VII
A D 945
Jan 27

they respected his learning, his innocence, and charity, his love of justice, and the ceremony of his funeral was mourned with the unfeigned tears of his subjects. The body, according to ancient custom, lay in state in the vestibule of the palace, and the civil and military officers, the patricians, the senate, and the clergy, approached in due order to adore and kiss the inanimate corpse of their sovereign. Before the procession moved towards the imperial sepulchre, a herald proclaimed this awful admonition: "Arise, O king of the world, and obey the summons of the King of kings!"

Romanus II ju nior, A D 959
Nov 15

The death of Constantine was imputed to poison, and his son Romanus, who derived that name from his maternal grandfather, ascended the throne of Constantinople. A prince who, at the age of twenty, could be suspected of anticipating his inheritance, must have been already lost in the public esteem, yet Romanus was rather weak than wicked, and the largest share of the guilt was transferred to his wife, Theophano, a woman of base origin, masculine spirit, and flagitious manners. The sense of personal glory and public happiness, the true pleasures of royalty, were unknown to the son of Constantine, and, while the two brothers, Nicephorus and Leo, triumphed over the Saracens, the hours which the emperor owed to his people were consumed in strenuous idleness. In the morning he visited the circus, at noon he feasted the senators, the greater part of the afternoon he spent in the sphaeristerium, or tennis-court, the only theatre of his victories, from thence he passed over to the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus, hunted and killed four wild boars of the largest size, and returned to the palace, proudly content with the labours of the day. In strength and beauty he was conspicuous above his equals: tall and straight as a young cypress, his complexion was fair and florid, his eyes sparkling, his shoulders broad, his nose long and aquiline. Yet even these perfections were insufficient to fix the love of Theophano, and, after a reign of four years, she mingled for her husband the same deadly draught which she had composed for his father.

Nicephorus II
Phocas
A D 963 Aug 6

By his marriage with this impious woman, Romanus the younger left two sons, Basil the second and Constantine the ninth, and two daughters, Theophano and Anne. The eldest sister was given to Otho the second, emperor of the west, the younger became the wife of Wolodomir, great duke and apostle of Russia, and, by the marriage of her grand-daughter with Henry the first, king of France, the blood of the Macedonians, and perhaps of the Arricides, still flows in the veins of the Bourbon line. After the death of her husband, the empress aspired to reign in the name of her sons, the elder of whom was five, and the younger only two, years of age, but she soon felt the instability of a throne which was supported by a female who could not be esteemed, and two infants who could not be feared. Theophano looked around for a protector, and threw herself into the arms of the bravest soldier, her heart was capacious, but the deformity of the new favourite rendered it more than probable that interest was the motive and excuse of her love. Nicephorus Phocas united, in the popular opinion, the double merit of a hero and a saint. In the former character, his qualifications were genuine and splendid: the descendant of a race, illustrious by their military exploits, he had displayed, in every station and in every province, the courage of a soldier and the conduct of a chief, and Nicephorus was crowned with recent laurels, from the important conquest of the isle of Crete. His religion was of a more ambiguous cast, and his hair-cloth, his fasts, his pious idiom, and his wish to retire from the business of the world, were a convenient mask for his dark and dangerous ambition. Yet he imposed on a holy patriarch, by whose influence, and by a decree of the senate, he was intrusted, during the minority of the young princes, with the absolute and independent command of the oriental armies. As soon as he had secured the leaders and the troops, he boldly marched to Constantinople, trampled on his enemies, avowed his correspondence with the empress, and, without degrading her sons, assumed, with the title of Augustus, the pre-eminence of rank and plenitude of power. But his marriage with Theophano was refused by the same patriarch who had placed the crown on his head: by his second nuptials he incurred a year of canonical penance, a bar of spiritual affinity was opposed to their celebration, and some evasion and perjury were required to silence the scruples of the clergy and people. The popularity of the emperor was lost in the purple: in a reign of six years he provoked the hatred of strangers and subjects, and the hypocrisy and avarice of the first Nicephorus were revived in his successor. Hypocrisy I shall never justify or palliate, but I will dare to observe, that the odious vice of avarice is of all others most hastily arraigned, and most unmercifully condemned. In a private citizen, our judgment seldom expects an accurate scrutiny into his fortune and expense, and in a steward of the public treasure, frugality is always a virtue, and the increase of taxes too often an indispensable duty. In the use of his patrimony, the generous temper of Nicephorus had been proved, and the revenue was strictly applied to the service of the state: each spring the emperor marched in person against the Saracens, and every Roman might compute the employment of his taxes in triumphs, conquests, and the security of the eastern barrier.

Among the warriors who promoted John Zimisce's elevation, and served under his standard a noble and valiant Armenian- Paul II
Gen. antioch 18
A D 972 Dec 22
an had deserved and obtained the most eminent rewards. The stature of John Zimisce was below the ordinary standard, but this diminutive body was endowed with strength, beauty, and the soul of a hero. By the jealousy of the emperor's brother, he was degraded from the office of general of the east, to that of director of the posts, and his murmurs were chastised with disgrace and exile. But Zimiscees was ranked among the numerous lovers of the empress: on her intercession he was permitted to reside at Chalcedon, in the neighbourhood of the capital. Her bounty was repaid in his clandestine and amorous visits to the palace, and Theophano consented, with alacrity, to the death of an ugly and penurious husband. Some bold and trusty conspirators were concealed in her most private chambers: in the darkness of a winter night, Zimiscees, with his principal companions, embarked in a small boat, traversed the Bosphorus, landed at the palace stairs, and silently ascended a ladder of ropes, which was cast down by the female attendants. Neither his own suspicions, nor the warnings of his friends, nor the tardy aid of his brother Leo, nor the fortress which he had erected in the palace, could protect Nicephorus from a domestic foe, at whose voice every door was opened to the assassins. As he slept on a bear-skin, on the ground, he was roused by their noisy intrusion, and thirty daggers glittered before his eyes. It is doubtful whether Zimiscees imbrued his hands in the blood of his sovereign, but he enjoyed the inhuman spectacle of revenge. The murder was protracted by insult and cruelty, and as soon as the head of Nicephorus was shown from the window, the tumult was hushed, and the Armenian was emperor of the east. On the day of his coronation, he was stopped on the threshold of St. Sophia, by the intrepid patriarch, who charged his conscience with the deed of treason and blood, and required, as a sign of repentance, that he should separate himself from his more criminal associate. This sally of apostolic zeal was not offensive to the prince, since he could neither love nor trust a woman who had repeatedly violated the most sacred obligations, and Theophano, instead of sharing his imperial fortune, was dismissed with ignominy from his bed and palace. In their last interview, she displayed a frantic and impotent rage, accused the ingratitude of her lover, assailed, with words and blows, her son Basil, as he stood silent and submissive in the presence of a superior colleague, and avowed her own prostitution, in proclaiming the illegitimacy of his birth. The public indignation was appeased by her exile, and the punishment of the manner recompensed the death of an unpopular prince: was forgiven, and the guilt of Zimiscees was forgotten in the splendour of his virtues. Perhaps his profusion was less useful to the state than the variegated behaviour of Nicephorus, but his gentle and generous behaviour delighted all who approached his person, and it was only in the paths of victory that he trod in the footsteps of his predecessor. The greatest part of his reign was employed in the camp, and the field: his personal valour and activity were signalized on the Danube and the Tigris, the ancient boundaries of the Roman world, and by his double triumph over the Russians and the Saracens, he deserved the titles of saviour of the empire, and conqueror of the east. In his last return from Syria, he observed that the most fruitful lands of his new provinces were possessed by the eunuchs. "And is it for them," he exclaimed, with honest indignation, "that we have fought and conquered? Is it for them that we shed our blood, and exhaust the treasures of our people?" The complaint was re-echoed to the palace, and the death of Zimiscees is strongly marked with the suspicion of poison.

Under this usurpation, or regency, Basil II and Constantine IX. A.D. 976. January 10 of twelve years, the two lawful emperors, Basil and Constantine, had silently grown to the age of manhood. Their tender years had been incapable of dominion: the respectful modesty of their attendance and salutation, was due to the age and merit of their guardians: the childless ambition of those guardians had no temptation to violate their right of succession: their patrimony was ably and faithfully administered, and the premature death of Zimiscees was a loss, rather than a benefit, to the sons of Romanus. Their want of experience detained them twelve years longer the obscure and voluntary pupils of a minister, who extended his reign by persuading them to indulge the pleasures of youth, and to disdain the labours of government. In this silken web, the weakness of Constantine was for ever entangled, but his elder brother felt the impulse of genius and the desire of action, he frowned, and the minister was no more. Basil was the acknowledged sovereign of Constantinople and the provinces of Europe, but Asia was oppressed by two veteran generals, Phocas and Selcirus, who, alternately friends and enemies, subjects and rebels, maintained their independence, and laboured to emulate the example of successful usurpation. Against these domestic enemies, the son of Romanus first drew his sword, and they trembled in the presence of a lawful and high-spirited prince. The first, in the front of battle, was thrown from his horse, by the stroke of poison, or an arrow: the second, who had been twice loaded with chains, and twice invested with the purple, was desirous of ending in peace the small remainder of his days. As the aged suppliant approached the throne, with dim eyes and faltering steps, leaning on his two attendants, the emperor exclaimed, in the insolence of youth and power, "And is this the man who has so long been the object of our terror?" After he had confirmed his own authority, and the peace of the empire, the trophies of Nicephorus and Zimiscees would not suffer their royal pupil to sleep in the palace. His long and frequent expeditions against the Saracens were rather glorious than useful to the empire, but the final destruction of the kingdom of Bulgaria appears, since the time of Belisarius, the most important triumph of the Roman arms. Yet instead of applauding their victorious prince, his subjects detested the rapacious and rigid avarice of Basil, and in the imperfect narrative of his exploits, we can only discern the courage, patience, and ferociousness of a soldier. A vicious education, which could not subdue his spirit, had clouded his mind, he was ignorant of every science, and the remembrance of his learned and feeble grandsire might encourage his real or affected contempt of laws and lawyers, of artists and arts. Of such a character, in such an age, superstition took a firm and lasting possession, after the first licence of his youth, Basil the second devoted his life, in the palace and the camp, to the penance of a hermit, wore the monastic habit under his robes and armour, observed a vow of continence, and imposed on his appetites a perpetual abstinence from wine and flesh. In the sixty-eighth year of his age, his martial spirit urged him to embark in person for a holy war against the Saracens of Sicily, he was prevented by death, and Basil, surnamed the Slayer of the Bulgarians, was dismissed from the world, with the blessings of the clergy and the curses of the people. After his decease, his

Constantine IX
A D 1025
December

brother Constantine enjoyed, about three years, the power, or rather the pleasures, of royalty, and his only care was the settlement of the succession. He had enjoyed sixty-six years the title of Augustus, and the reign of the two brothers is the longest, and most obscure, of the Byzantine history.

Romanus III
Argyrus
A D 1028
Nov 12

A lineal succession of five emperors, in a period of one hundred and sixty years, had attached the loyalty of the Greeks to the Macedonian dynasty, which had been three respected by the usurpers of their power. After the death of Constantine the ninth, the last male of the royal race, a new and broken scene presents itself, and the accumulated years of twelve emperors do not equal the space of his single reign. His elder brother had preferred his private chastity to the public interest, and Constantine himself had only three daughters, Eudocia, who took the veil, and Zoe and Theodora, who were preserved till a mature age in a state of ignorance and virginity. When their marriage was discussed in the council of their dying father, the cold or pious Theodora refused to give an heir to the empire, but her sister Zoe presented herself a willing victim at the altar. Romanus Argyrus, a patrician of a graceful person and fair reputation, was chosen for her husband, and, on his declining that honour, was informed, that blindness or death was the second alternative. The motive of his reluctance was conjugal affection, but his faithful wife sacrificed her own happiness to his safety and greatness, and her entrance into a monastery removed the only bar to the imperial nuptials. After the decease of Constantine, the sceptre devolved to Romanus the third, but his labours at home and abroad were equally feeble and fruitless, and the mature age, the forty-eight years of Zoe, were less favourable to the hopes of pregnancy than to the indulgence of pleasure. Her favourite chamberlain was a handsome Paphlagonian of the name of Michael, whose first trade had been that of a money-changer, and Romanus, either from gratitude or equity, connived at their criminal intercourse, or accepted a slight assurance of their innocence. But Zoe soon justified the Roman maxim, that every adulteress is capable of poisoning her husband, and the death of Romanus was instantly followed by the scandalous marriage and elevation of Michael the fourth. The expectations of Zoe were, however, disappointed instead of a vigorous and grateful lover, she had placed in her bed a miserable wretch, whose health and reason were impaired by epileptic fits, and whose conscience was tormented by despair and remorse. The most skilful physicians of the mind and body were summoned to his aid, and his hopes were amused by frequent pilgrimages to the baths, and to the tombs of the most popular saints, the monks applauded his penance, and, except restitution, (but to whom should he have restored?) Michael sought every method of expiating his guilt. While he groaned and prayed in sackcloth and ashes, his brother, the eunuch John, smiled at his remorse, and enjoyed the harvest of a crime of which himself was the secret and most guilty author. His administration was only the art of satiating his avarice, and Zoe became a captive in the palace of her fathers and in the hands of her slaves. When he perceived the irretrievable decline of his brother's health, he introduced his nephew, another Michael, who derived his surname of Calaphates from his father's occupation in the careening of vessels at the command of the eunuch, Zoe adopted, for her son, the son of a mechanic, and this fictitious heir was invested with the title and purple of the Cæsars, in the presence of the senate and clergy. So feeble was the character of Zoe, that she was oppressed by the liberty and power which she recovered by the death of the Paphlagonian, and at the end of four days, she placed the crown on the head of Michael V. Calaphates the fifth, who had protested, with tears and oaths, that he should ever reign the first and most obedient of her subjects. The only act of his short reign was his base ingratitude to his benefactors, the eunuch and the empress. The disgrace of the former was pleasing to the public, but the murmurs, and at length the clamours, of Constantinople deplored the exile of Zoe the daughter of so many emperors, her woes were forgotten and Michael was taught, that there is a period in which the patience of the truest slaves rises into fury and revenge. The citizens of every degree assembled in a formidable tumult which lasted three days: they besieged the palace, forced the gates, recalled their mothers, Zoe and Theodora from her prison, Theodora from her monastery, and condemned the son

Michael IV the Paphlagonian,
A D 1034
April 11

Michael V. Cal
phates
A D 1041
Dec 14

A D 1042
April 21

of Calaphates to the loss of his eyes or of his life. For the first time, the Greeks beheld with surprise the two royal sisters seated on the same throne, presiding in the senate, and giving audience to the ambassadors of the nations. But this singular union subsisted no more than two months, the two sovereigns, their tempers, interests, and adherents, were secretly hostile to each other, and as Theodora was still averse to marriage, the indefatigable

Constantine X
Monomachus
A D 1042
June 11

Zoe, at the age of sixty, consented, for the public good, to sustain the embraces of a third husband, and the censures of the Greek church. His name and number were Constantine the tenth, and the epithet of Monomachus, the single combatant, must have been expressive of his valour and victory in some public or private quarrel. But his health was broken by the tortures of the gout, and his dissolute reign was spent in the alternative of sickness and pleasure. A fair and noble widow had accompanied Constantine in his exile to the isle of Lesbos, and Sclerena gloried in the appellation of his mistress. After his marriage and elevation, she was invested with the title and pomp of Augusta, and occupied a contiguous apartment in the palace. The lawful consort (such was the delicacy or corruption of Zoe) consented to this strange and scandalous partition, and the emperor appeared in public between his wife and his concubine. He survived them both, but the last measures of Constantine to change the order of succession were prevented by the more vigilant friends of

Theodora
A D 1054
Nov 30

Theodora, and after his decease, she resumed, with the general consent, the possession of her inheritance. In her name, and by the influence of four eunuchs, the eastern world was peaceably governed about nineteen months, and as they wished to prolong their dominion, they persuaded the aged princess to nominate for her successor Michael the sixth. The surname of Stratioticus declares his military profession, but the crazy and decrepit veteran could only see with the eyes, and execute with the hands, of his ministers. Whilst he ascended the throne, Theodora sunk into the grave, the last of the Macedonian or Basilian dynasty. I have hastily reviewed, and gladly dismiss, this shameful and destructive period of twenty-eight years, in which the Greeks, degraded below the common level of servitude, were transferred like a herd of cattle by the choice or caprice of two impotent females.

Isaac I Comnenus
A D 1057
Aug. 31

From this night of slavery, a ray of freedom, or at least of spirit, begins to emerge. The Greeks, either preserved or revived the use of surnames, which perpetuate the fame of hereditary virtue, and we now discern the rise, succession, and alliances of the last dynasties of Constantinople and Trebizond. The Comneni, who upheld for a while the fate of the sinking empire, assumed the honour of a Roman origin, but the family had been long since transported from Italy to Asia. Their patrimonial estate was situate in the district of Castamona, in the neighbourhood of the Euxine, and one of their chiefs, who had already entered the paths of ambition, revisited with affection, perhaps with regret, the modest though honourable dwelling of his fathers. The first of their line was the illustrious Manuel, who, in the reign of the second Basil, contributed by war and treaty to appease the troubles of the east. He left in a tender age two sons, Isaac and John, whom, with the consciousness of desert, he bequeathed to the gratitude and favour of his sovereign. The noble youths were carefully trained in the learning of the monastery, the arts of the palace, and the exercises of the camp, and from the domestic service of the guards, they were rapidly promoted to the command of provinces and armies. Their fraternal union doubled the force and reputation of the Comneni, and their ancient nobility was illustrated by the marriage of the two brothers, with a captive princess of Bulgaria, and the daughter of a patriarch, who had obtained the name of Charon from the number of enemies whom he had sent to the infernal shades. The soldiers had served with reluctant loyalty a series of effeminate masters, the elevation of Michael the sixth was a personal insult to the more deserving generals, and their discontent was inflamed by the parsimony of the emperor and the insolence of the eunuchs. They secretly assembled in the sanctuary of St Sophia, and the votes of the military synod would have been unanimous in favour of the old and valiant Catacalon, if the patriotism or modesty of the veteran had not suggested the importance of birth as well as merit in the choice of a sovereign. Isaac Comnenus was approved by general consent, and the associates separated without delay to meet in the plains of Phrygia at the head of their respective squadrons and detachments. The cause of Michael was defended in a single battle by the mercenaries of the imperial guard, who were aliens to the public interest, and animated only by a principle of honour and gratitude. After their defeat, the fears of the emperor solicited a treaty, which was almost accepted by the moderation of the Comnenian. But the former was betrayed by his ambassadors, and the latter was prevented by his friends. The solitary Michael submitted to the voice of the people, the patriarch annulled their oath of allegiance, and as he shaved the head of the royal monk, congratulated his beneficial exchange of temporal royalty for the kingdom of heaven, an exchange, however, which the priest, on his own account, would probably have declined. By the hands of the same patriarch, Isaac Comnenus was solemnly crowned the sword which he inscribed on his coins, might be an offensive symbol, if it implied his title by conquest, but this sword would have been drawn against the foreign and domestic enemies of the state. The decline of his health and vigour suspended the operation of active virtue, and the prospect of approaching death determined him to interpose some moments between life and eternity. But instead of leaving the empire as the marriage portion of his daughter, his reason and inclination concurred in the preference of his brother John, a soldier, a patriot, and the father of five sons, the future pillars of an hereditary succession. His first modest reluctance might be the natural dictates of discretion and tenderness, but his obstinate and successful perseverance, however it may dazzle with the show of virtue, must be censured as a criminal desertion of his duty, and a rare offence against his family and country. The purple which he had refused was accepted by Constantine Ducas, a friend of the Comnenian house, and whose noble birth was adorned with the experience and reputation of civil policy. In the monastic habit, Isaac recovered his health, and survived two years his voluntary abdication. At the command of his abbot, he observed the rule of St Basil, and executed the most servile offices of the convent but his latent vanity was gratified by the frequent and respectful visits of the reigning monarch, who revered in his person the character of a benefactor and a saint.

Constantine XI
Ducas
A D 1059
Dec 25

If Constantine the eleventh were indeed the subject most worthy of empire, we must pity the debasement of the age and nation in which he was chosen. In the labour of puerile declamations he sought, without obtaining, the crown of eloquence, more precious, in his opinion, than that of Rome, and, in the subordinate functions of a judge, he forgot the duties of a sovereign and a warrior. Far from imitating the patriotic indifference of the authors of his greatness, Ducas was anxious only to secure, at the expense of the republic, the power and prosperity of his children. His three sons, Michael the seventh, Andronicus the first, and Constantine the twelfth, were invested, in a tender age, with the equal title of Augustus, and the succession was speedily opened by their father's death. His widow,

Eudocia
A D 1067
May

Eudocia, was intrusted with the administration, but experience had taught the jealousy of the dying monarch to protect his sons from the danger of her second nuptials, and her solemn engagement, attested by the principal senators, was deposited in the hands of the patriarch. Before the end of seven months, the wants of Eudocia, or those of the state, called aloud for the male virtues of a soldier, and her heart had already chosen Romanus Diogenes, whom she had raised from the scaffold to the throne. The discovery of a treasonable attempt had exposed him to the severity of the laws. His beauty and valour absolved him in the eyes of the empress, and Romanus, from a mild exile, was recalled on the second day to the command of the oriental armies. Her royal choice was yet unknown to the public, and the promise which would have betrayed her falsehood and levity, was stolen by a dexterous emissary from the ambition of the patriarch. Laphilin at first alleged the sanctity of oaths and the sacred nature of a trust, but a whisper, that his brother was the future emperor, relaxed his scruples, and forced him to confess that the public safety was the supreme law. He resigned the important paper, and when his hopes were confounded by the nomination of Romanus, he could no longer regain his security,

3 A

Romanus III
Diogenes
A D 1057
August

retract his declarations, nor oppose the second nuptials of the empress. Yet a murmur was heard in the palace, and the barbarian guards had raised their battle-axes in the cause of the house of Ducas, till the young princes were soothed by the tears of their mother, and the solemn assurances of the fidelity of their guardian, who filled the imperial station with dignity and honour. Hereafter I shall relate his valiant but unsuccessful efforts to resist the progress of the Turks. His defeat and captivity inflicted a deadly wound on the Byzantine monarchy of the east, and after he was released from the chains of the sultan, he vainly sought his wife and his subjects. His wife had been thrust into a monastery, and the subjects of Romanus had embraced the rigid maxim of the civil law, that a prisoner in the hands of the enemy is deprived, as by the stroke of death, of all the public and private rights of a citizen. In the general

Michael VII
Parapinaces, Andronicus I
Constantine XI
A D 1071
August

consternation, the Caesar John asserted the infeasible right of his three nephews. Constantinople listened to his voice, and the Turkish captive was proclaimed in the capital, and received on the frontier, as an enemy of the republic. Romanus was not more fortunate in domestic than in foreign war. The loss of two battles compelled him to yield, on the assurance of fair and honourable treatment, but his enemies were devoid of faith or humanity, and, after the cruel extinction of his sight, his wounds were left to bleed and corrupt, till in a few days he was relieved from a state of misery. Under the triple reign of the house of Ducas, the two younger brothers were reduced to the vain honours of the purple, but the eldest, the pusillanimous Michael, was incapable of sustaining the Roman sceptre, and his surname of Parapinaces denotes the reproach which he shared with an avaricious favourite, who enhanced the price, and diminished the measure, of wheat. In the school of Psellus, and after the example of his mother, the son of Eudocia made some proficiency in philosophy and rhetoric, but his character was degraded, rather than ennobled, by the virtues of a monk and the learning of a sophist. Strong in the contempt of their sovereign and their own esteem two generals, at the head of the European and Asiatic legions, assumed the purple at Adrianople and Nice. Their revolt was in the same month, they bore the same name of Nicephorus, but the two candidates were distinguished by the surnames of Bryennius and Botaniates, the former in the maturity of wisdom and courage, the latter conspicuous only by the memory of his past exploits. While Botaniates advanced with cautious and dilatory steps, his active competitor stood in arms before the gates of Constantinople. The name of Bryennius was illustrious, his cause was popular, but his licentious troops could not be restrained from burning and pillaging a suburb, and the people, who would have hailed the rebel, rejected and repulsed the incendiary of his country. This change of the public opinion was favourable to Botaniates, who at length, with an army of Turks, approached the shores of Chalcedon. A formal invitation, in the name of the patriarch, the synod, and the senate, was circulated through the streets of Constantinople, and the general assembly, in the dome of St Sophia, debated, with order and calmness, on the choice of their sovereign. The guards of Michael would have dispersed this unarmed multitude, but the feeble emperor, applauding his own moderation and clemency, resigned the ensigns of royalty, and was rewarded with the monastic habit, and the title of archbishop of Ephesus. He left a son, a Constantine, born and educated in the purple, and a daughter of the house of Ducas illustrated the blood, and confirmed the succession, of the Comnenian dynasty.

Nicephorus III John Comnenus, the brother of the Botaniates emperor Isaac, survived in peace and
A D 1078 dignity his generous refusal of the March 20 sceptre. By his wife Anne, a woman of masculine spirit and policy, he left eight children: the three daughters multiplied the Comnenian alliances with the noblest of the Greeks; of the five sons, Manuel was stopped by a premature death, Isaac and Alexius restored the imperial greatness of their house, which was enjoyed without toil or danger by the two younger brethren, Adrian and Nicephorus. Alexius, the third and most illustrious of the brothers, was endowed by nature with the choicest gifts both of mind and body: they were cultivated by a liberal education, and exercised in the school of obedience and adversity. The youth was dismissed from the perils of the Turkish war, by the paternal care of the emperor Romanus, but the mother of the Comneni, with her aspiring race, was accused of treason, and banished, by the sons of Ducas, to an island in the Propontis. The two brothers soon emerged into favour and action, fought by each other's side against the rebels and barbarians, and adhered to the emperor Michael, till he was deserted by the world and by himself. In his first interview with Botaniates, "Prince," said Alexius, with a noble frankness, "my duty rendered me your enemy, the decrees of God and of the people have made me your subject. Judge of my future loyalty by my past opposition." The successor of Michael entertained him with esteem and confidence: his valour was employed against three rebels, who disturbed the peace of the empire, or at least of the emperors. Ursel, Bryennius, and Basilacius, were formidable by their numerous forces and military fame: they were successively vanquished in the field, and led in chains to the foot of the throne, and whatever treatment they might receive from a timid and cruel court, they applauded the clemency, as well as the courage, of their conqueror. But the loyalty of the Comneni was soon tainted by fear and suspicion, nor is it easy to settle, between a subject and a despot, the debt of gratitude, which the former is tempted to claim by a revolt, and the latter to discharge by an executioner. The refusal of Alexius to march against a fourth rebel, the husband of his sister, destroyed the merit or memory of his past services: the favourites of Botaniates provoked the ambition which they apprehended and accused, and the retreat of the two brothers might be justified by the defence of their life or liberty. The women of the family were deposited in a sanctuary, respected by tyrants: the men, mounted on horseback, sallied from the city, and erected the standard of civil war. The soldiers, who had been gradually assembled in the capital and the neighbourhood, were devoted to the cause of a victorious and injured leader: the ties of common interest and domestic alliance secured the attachment of the house of Ducas, and the generous dispute of the Comneni was terminated by the decisive resolution of Isaac, who was the first to invest his younger brother with the name and ensigns of royalty. They returned to Constantinople, to threaten rather than besiege that impregnable fortress, but the fidelity of the guards was corrupted, a gate was surprised, and the fleet was occupied by the active courage of George Pelagologus, who fought against his father, without foreseeing that he laboured for his posterity. Alexius ascended the throne, and his aged competitor disappeared in a monastery. An army of various nations was gratified with the pillage of the city, but the public disorders were expiated by the tears and fasts of the Comneni, who submitted to every penance compatible with the possession of the empire.

The life of the emperor Alexius has been delineated by a favourite daughter, who was inspired by a tender regard for his person and a laudable zeal to perpetuate his virtues. Conscious of the just suspicion of her readers, the princess Anna Comnena repeatedly protests, that, besides her personal knowledge, she had searched the discourse and writings of the most respectable veterans, that after an interval of thirty years, forgotten by, and forgetful of, the world, her mournful solitude was inaccessible to hope and fear, and that truth, the naked perfect truth, was more dear and sacred than the memory of her parent. Yet, instead of the simplicity of style and narrative which wins our belief, an elaborate affectation of rhetoric and science betrays in every page the vanity of a female author. The genuine character of Alexius is lost in a vague constellation of virtues, and the perpetual strain of panegyric and apology awakens our jealousy, to question the veracity of the historian and the merit of the hero. We cannot, however, refuse her judicious and important remark, that the disorders of the times were the misfortune and the glory of Alexius, and that every calamity which can afflict a declining empire was accumulated on his reign by the justice of Heaven and the vices of his predecessors. In the east, the victorious Turks had spread, from Persia to the Hellespont, the reign of the Koran and the Crescent: the west was invaded by the adventurous valour of the Normans, and, in the moments of peace, the Danube poured forth new swarms, who had gained, in the science of war, what they had lost in the ferociousness of manners. The sea was not less hostile than the land, and while the frontiers were assaulted by an open enemy, the palace was distracted with secret treason and conspiracy. On a sudden, the banner of the cross was displayed by the Latins, Europe was precipitated on Asia, and Constantinople had almost been swept away by this impetuous deluge. In the tempest Alexius steered the imperial vessel with dexterity and courage. At the head of his armies, he was bold in action, skilful in stratagem, patient of fatigue, ready to improve his advantages, and rising from his defeats with inexhaustible vigour. The discipline of the camp was revived, and a new generation of men and soldiers was created by the example and the precepts of their leader. In his intercourse with the Latins, Alexius was patient and artful: his discerning eye pervaded the new system of an unknown world, and I shall hereafter describe the superior policy with which he balanced the interests and passions of the champions of the first crusade. In a long reign of thirty-seven years, he subdued and pardoned the envy of his equals: the laws of public and private order were restored: the arts of wealth and science were cultivated: the limits of the empire were enlarged in Europe and Asia, and the Comnenian sceptre was transmitted to his children of the third and fourth generation. Yet the difficulties of the times betrayed some defects in his character, and have exposed his memory to some just or ungenerous reproach. The reader may possibly smile at the lavish praise which his daughter so often bestows on a flying hero: the weakness or prudence of his situation might be mistaken for a want of personal courage, and his political arts are branded by the Latins with the names of deceit and dissimulation. The increase of the male and female branches of his family adorned the throne, and secured the succession, but their princely luxury and pride offended the patricians, exhausted the revenue, and insulted the misery of the people. Anna is a faithful witness that his happiness was destroyed, and his health was broken, by the cares of a public life: the patience of Constantinople was fatigued by the length and severity of his reign, and before Alexius expired, he had lost the love and reverence of his subjects. The clergy could not forgive his application of the sacred riches to the defence of the state, but they applauded his theological learning and ardent zeal for the orthodox faith, which he defended with his tongue, his pen, and his sword. His character was degraded by the superstition of the Greeks, and the same inconsistent principle of human nature enjoined the emperor to found an hospital for the poor and infirm, and to direct the execution of a heretic, who was burnt alive in the square of St Sophia. Even the sincerity of his moral and religious virtues was suspected by the persons who had passed their lives in his familiar confidence. In his last hours, when he was pressed by his wife Irene to alter the succession, he raised his head, and breathed a pious ejaculation on the vanity of this world. The indignant reply of the empress may be inscribed as an epitaph on his tomb, "You die, as you have lived,—ΑΝ ΗΥΠΟΚΡΙΤΗ!"

Alexius I Comnenus
A D 1081
April 1

It was the wish of Irene to supplant John, or Calo-Johannus
A. D. 1118.
An. 15 the eldest of her surviving sons, in favour of her daughter the princess

Anna, whose philosophy would not have refused the weight of a diadem. But the order of male succession was asserted by the friends of their country, the lawful heir drew the royal signet from the finger of his insensible or conscious father, and the empire obeyed the master of the palace. Anna Comnena was stimulated by ambition and revenge to conspire against the life of her brother, and when the design was prevented by the fears or scruples of her husband, she passionately exclaimed, that nature had mistaken the two sexes, and had endowed Bryennius with the soul of a woman. The two sons of Alexius, John and Isaac, maintained the fraternal concord, the hereditary virtue of their race, and the younger brother was content with the title of Sebastocrator, which approached the dignity, without sharing the power, of the emperor. In the same person, the claims of primogeniture and merit were fortunately united, his swarthy complexion, harsh features, and diminutive stature, had suggested the ironical surname of Calo-Johannes, or John the Handsome, which his grateful subjects more seriously applied to the beauties of his mind. After the discovery of her treason, the life and fortune of Anna were justly forfeited to the laws. Her life was spared by the clemency of the emperor, but he visited the pomp and treasures of her palace, and bestowed the rich confiscation on the most deserving of his friends. That respectable friend, Aech, a slave of Turkish extraction, presumed to decline the gift, and to intercede for the criminal: his generous master applauded and imitated the virtue of his favourite, and the reproach or complaint of an injured brother was the only chastisement of the guilty princess. After this example of clemency, the remainder of his reign was never disturbed by conspiracy or rebellion: feared by his nobles, beloved by his people, John was never reduced to the painful necessity of punishing, or ever of pardon-

ing, his personal enemies During his government of twenty-five years, the penalty of death was abolished in the Roman empire, a law of mercy most delightful to the humane theorist, but of which the practice, in a large and vicious community, is seldom consistent with the public safety Severe to himself, indulgent to others, chaste, frugal, abstemious, the philosophic Marcus would not have disdained the artless virtues of his predecessor, derived from his heart, and not borrowed from the schools He despised and moderated the stately magnificence of the Byzantine court, so oppressive to the people, so contemptible to the eye of reason Under such a prince, innocence had nothing to fear, and merit had every thing to hope, and without assuming the tyrannic office of a censor, he introduced a gradual though visible reformation in the public and private manners of Constantinople The only defect of this accomplished character, was the frailty of noble minds, the love of arms and military glory Yet the frequent expeditions of John the Handsome may be justified, at least in their principle, by the necessity of repelling the Turks from the Hellespont and the Bosphorus The sultan of Iconium was confined to his capital, the barbarians were driven to the mountains, and the maritime provinces of Asia enjoyed the transient blessings of their deliverance From Constantinople to Antioch and Aleppo, he repeatedly marched at the head of a victorious army, and in the sieges and battles of this holy war, his Latin allies were astonished by the superior spirit and prowess of a Greek As he began to indulge the ambitious hope of restoring the ancient limits of the empire, as he revolved in his mind the Euphrates and Tigris, the dominion of Syria, and the conquest of Jerusalem, the thread of his life and of the public felicity was broken by a singular accident He hunted the wild boar in the valley of Anazarbus, and had fixed his javelin in the body of the furious animal but, in the struggle, a poisoned arrow dropped from his quiver, and a slight wound in his hand, which produced a mortification, was fatal to the best and greatest of the Comnenian princes

Manuel
A D 1143
April 8.

A premature death had swept away the two eldest sons of John the Handsome, of the two survivors, Isaac and Manuel, his judgment or affection preferred the younger, and the choice of their dying prince was ratified by the soldiers, who had applauded the valour of his favourite in the Turkish war The faithful Anach hastened to the capital, secured the person of Isaac in honourable confinement, and purchased, with a gift of two hundred pounds of silver, the leading ecclesiastics of St Sophia, who possessed a decisive voice in the consecration of an emperor With his veteran and affectionate troops, Manuel soon visited Constantinople, his brother requiesced in the title of Sebastocrator, his subjects admired the lofty stature and martial graces of their new sovereign, and listened with credulity to the flattering promise, that he blended the wisdom of age with the activity and vigour of youth By the experience of his government, they were taught, that he emulated the spirit, and shared the talents, of his father, whose social virtues were buried in the grave A reign of thirty-seven years is filled by a perpetual though various warfare against the Turks, the christians, and the hordes of the wilderness beyond the Danube The arms of Manuel were exercised on mount Taurus, in the plains of Hungary, on the coast of Italy and Egypt, and on the seas of Sicily and Greece the influence of his negotiations extended from Jerusalem to Rome and Russia, and the Byzantine monarchy, for a while, became an object of respect or terror to the powers of Asia and Europe Educated in the silk and purple of the east, Manuel possessed the iron temper of a soldier, which cannot easily be paralleled, except in the lives of Richard the first of England, and of Charles the twelfth of Sweden Such was his strength and exercise in arms, that Raymond, surnamed the Hercules of Antioch, was incapable of wielding the lance and buckler of the Greek emperor In a famous tournament, he entered the lists on a fiery courser, and overturned in his first career two of the stoutest of the Italian knights The first in the charge, the last in the retreat, his friends and his enemies alike trembled, the former for his safety, and the latter for their own After posting an ambuscade in the wood, he rode forwards in search of some perilous adventure, accompanied only by his brother and the faithful Anach, who refused to desert their sovereign Eighteen horsemen, after a short combat, fled before them but the numbers of the enemy increased, the march of the reinforcement was tardy and fearful, and Manuel, without receiving a wound, cut his way through a squadron of five hundred Turks In a battle against the Hungarians, impatient of the slowness of his troops, he snatched a standard from the head of the column, and was the first, almost alone, who passed a bridge that separated him from the enemy In the same country, after transporting his army beyond the Save, he sent back the boats, with an order, under pain of death, to their commander, that he should leave him to conquer or die on that hostile land In the siege of Corfu, towing after him a captive galley, the emperor stood aloft on the poop, opposing against the volleys of darts and stones, a large buckler and a flowing sail, nor could he have escaped inevitable death, had not the Sicilian admiral enjoined his archers to respect the person of a hero In one day, he is said to have slain above forty of the barbarians with his own hand, he returned to the camp, dragging along four Turkish prisoners, whom he had tied to the rings of his saddle he was ever the foremost to provoke or to accept a single combat, and the gigantic champions, who encountered his arm, were transpierced by the lance, or cut asunder by the sword, of the invincible Manuel The story of his exploits, which appear as a model or a copy of the romances of chivalry, may induce a reasonable suspicion of the veracity of the Greeks I will not, to vindicate their credit, endanger my own, yet I may observe, that in the long series of their annals, Manuel is the only prince who has been the subject of similar exaggeration With the valour of a soldier, he did not unite the skill or prudence of a general his victories were not productive of any permanent or useful conquest, and his Turkish laurels were blasted in his last unfortunate campaign, in which he lost his army in the mountains of Pisidia, and owed his deliverance to the generosity of the sultan But the most singular feature in the character of Manuel, is the contrast and vicissitude of labour and sloth, of hardness and effeminacy In war he seemed ignorant of peace, in peace he appeared incapable of war In the field he slept in the sun or in the snow, tired in the longest marches the strength of his men and horses, and shared with a smile the abstinence or diet of the camp No sooner did he return to Constantinople, than he resigned himself to the arts and pleasures of a life of luxury the expense of his dress, his table, and his palace, surpassed the measure of his predecessors, and whole summer days were idly wasted in the delicious isles of the Propontis, in the incestuous love of his niece Theodora The double cost of a warlike and dissolute prince exhausted the revenue, and multiplied the taxes, and Manuel, in the distress of his last Turkish camp, endured a bitter reproach from the mouth of a desperate soldier As he quenched his thirst, he complained that the water of a fountain was mingled with christian blood "It is not the first time," exclaimed a voice from the crowd, "that you have drunk, O emperor, the blood of your christian subjects" Manuel Comnenus was twice married, to the virtuous Bertha or Irene of Germany, and to the beautiful Maria, a French or Latin princess of Antioch The only daughter of his first wife was destined for Bela an Hungarian prince, who was educated at Constantinople under the name of Alexius, and the consummation of their nuptials might have transferred the Roman sceptre to a race of free and warlike barbarians But as soon as Maria of Antioch had given a son and heir to the empire, the presumptive rights of Bela were abolished, and he was deprived of his promised bride, but the Hungarian prince resumed his name and the kingdom of his fathers, and displayed such virtues as might excite the regret and envy of the Greeks The son of Maria was named Alexius, and at the age of ten years, he ascended the Byzantine throne, after his father's decease had closed the glories of the Comnenian line

Alexius II
A.D. 1180
September 21
Character and first adventures of Andronicus

The fraternal concord of the two sons of the great Alexius, had been sometimes clouded by an opposition of interest and passion By ambition,

Isaac the Sebastocrator was excited to flight and rebellion, from whence he was reclaimed by the firmness and clemency of John the Handsome The errors of Isaac, the father of the emperors of Trebizond, were short and venial, but John, the elder of his sons, renounced for ever his religion Provoked by a real or imaginary insult of his uncle, he escaped from the Roman to the Turkish camp his apostasy was rewarded with the Sultan's daughter, the title of Chelebi, or noble, and the inheritance of a princely estate, and in the fifteenth century, Mahomet the second boasted of his imperial descent from the Comnenian family Andronicus, the younger brother of John, son of Isaac, and grandson of Alexius Comnenus, is one of the most conspicuous characters of the age and his genuine adventures might form the subject of a very singular romance To justify the choice of three ladies of royal birth, it is incumbent on me to observe, that their fortunate lover was cast in the best proportions of strength and beauty, and that the want of the softer graces was supplied by a manly countenance, a lofty stature, athletic muscles, and the air and deportment of a soldier The preservation, in his old age, of health and vigour, was the reward of temperance and exercise A piece of bread and a draught of water were often his sole and evening repast, and if he tasted of a wild boar, or a stag, which he had roasted with his own hands, it was the well-earned fruit of a laborious chase Dexterous in arms, he was ignorant of fear his persuasive eloquence could bend to every situation and character of life his style, though not his practice, was fashioned by the example of St Paul, and, in every deed of mischief, he had a heart to resolve, a head to contrive, and a hand to execute In his youth, after the death of the emperor John, he followed the retreat of the Roman army, but, in the march through Asia Minor, design or accident tempted him to wander in the mountains, the hunter was encompassed by the Turkish huntsmen, and he remained some time a reluctant or willing captive in the power of the sultan His virtues and vices recommended him to the favour of his cousin he shared the perils and the pleasures of Manuel; and while the emperor lived in public incest with his niece Theodora, the affections of her sister Eudocia were seduced and enjoyed by Andronicus Above the decencies of her sex and rank, she gloried in the name of his concubine, and both the palace and the camp could witness that she slept, or watched, in the arms of her lover She accompanied him to his military command of Cilicia the first scene of his valour and imprudence He pressed, with active ardour the siege of Mopsuestia the day was employed in the boldest attacks, but the night was wasted in song and dance, and a band of Greek comedians formed the choicest part of his retinue Andronicus was surprised by the sally of a vigilant foe, but while his troops fled in disorder, his invincible lance transpierced the thickest ranks of the Armenians. On his return to the imperial camp of Macedonia, he was received by Manuel with public smiles and a private reproof, but the duchies of Naissus, Braniseba, and Castoria, were the reward or consolation of the unsuccessful general. Eudocia still attended his motions at midnight, their tent was suddenly attacked by her angry brothers, impatient to expiate her infamy in his blood. His daring spirit refused her advice, and the disguise of a female habit, and boldly starting from his couch, he drew his sword, and cut his way through the numerous assassins. It was here that he first betrayed his ingratitude and treachery. He engaged in a treasonable correspondence with the king of Hungary, and the German emperor approached the royal tent at a suspicious hour, with a drawn sword, and, under the mask of a Latin soldier, avowed an intention of revenge against a mortal foe, and imprudently praised the fleetness of his horse, as an instrument of flight and safety. The monarch dissembled his suspicions, but, after the close of the campaign, Andronicus was arrested and strictly confined in a tower of the palace of Constantinople.

In this prison he was left above twelve years, a most painful restraint, from which the thirst of action and pleasure perpetually urged him to escape. Alone and pensive, he perceived some broken bricks in a corner of the chamber, and gradually widened the passage, till he had explored a dark and forgotten recess. Into this hole he conveyed himself, and the remains of his provisions, replacing the bricks in their former position, and erasing with care the footsteps of his retreat. At the hour of the customary visit, his guards were amazed by the silence and solitude of the prison, and reported with shame and fear his incomprehensible flight. The gates of the palace and city were instantly shut, the strictest orders were despatched into the provinces, for the recovery of the fugitive, and his wife, on the suspicion of a pious act, was basely imprisoned in the same tower. At the dead of night, she beheld a spectre she recognized her husband. They shared their provisions, and a son was the fruit of these stolen interviews, which alleviated the tediousness of their confinement. In the custody of a woman, the vigilance of the keepers was insensibly relaxed, and the captive had accomplished his real escape, when he was discovered, brought back to Constantinople and loaded with a double chain. At length he found the moment, and the means, of his deliverance. A boy, his domestic servant, intoxicated the guards, and obtained in vain the impression of the keys. By the diligence of his friends, a similar key, with a bundle of ropes, was introduced into the prison, in the bottom of a hogsheed. Andronicus employed, with industry and courage, the instruments of his safety, unlocked the doors, descended from the tower, concealed himself all day among the bushes, and scaled in the night the garden-wall of the palace. A boat was stationed for his reception. He visited his own house, embraced his children, cast away his chain, mounted a fleet horse, and directed his rapid course towards the banks of the Danube. At Anchialus in Thrace, an intrepid friend supplied him with horses and money. He passed the river, traversed with speed the desert of Moldavia and the Carpathian hills, and had almost reached the town of Halicz, in the Polish Russia, when he was intercepted by a party of Walachians, who resolved to convey their important captive to Constantinople. His presence of mind again extricated him from this danger. Under the pretence of sickness, he dismounted in the night, and was allowed to step aside from the troop. He planted in the ground his long staff, clothed it with his cap and upper garment, and, stealing into the wood, left a phantom to amuse, for some time, the eyes of the Walachians. From Halicz he was honourably conducted to Kiow, the residence of the great duke. The subtle Greek soon obtained the esteem and confidence of Ieroslaus. His character could assume the manners of every climate, and the barbarians applauded his strength and courage in the chase of the elks and bears of the forest. In this northern region he deserved the forgiveness of Manuel, who solicited the Russian prince to join his arms in the invasion of Hungary. The influence of Andronicus achieved this important service. His private treaty was signed with a promise of fidelity on one side, and of oblivion on the other, and he marched, at the head of the Russian cavalry, from the Borysthenes to the Danube. In his resentment Manuel had ever sympathized with the martial and dissolute character of his cousin, and his free pardon was sealed in the assault of Zemlin, in which he was second, and second only, to the valour of the emperor.

No sooner was the exile restored to freedom and his country, than his ambition revived, at first to his own, and at length to the public, misfortune. A daughter of Manuel was a feeble bar to the succession of the more deserving males of the Comnenian blood. Her future marriage with the prince of Hungary was repugnant to the hopes or prejudices of the princes and nobles. But when an oath of allegiance was required to the presumptive heir, Andronicus alone asserted the honour of the Roman name, declined the unlawful engagement, and boldly protested against the adoption of a stranger. His patriotism was offensive to the emperor, but he spoke the sentiments of the people, and was removed from the royal presence by an honourable banishment, a second command of the Cilician frontier, with the absolute disposal of the revenues of Cyprus. In this station the Armenians again exercised his courage and exposed his negligence, and the same rebel, who baffled all his operations, was unhorsed and almost slain by the vigour of his lance. But Andronicus soon discovered a more easy and pleasing conquest, the beautiful Philippa, sister of the empress Maria, and daughter of Raymond of Portou, the Latin prince of Antioch For her sake, he deserted his station, and wasted the summer in balls and tournaments to his love she sacrificed her innocence, her reputation, and the offer of an advantageous marriage But the resentment of Manuel for this domestic affront, interrupted his pleasures Andronicus left the indiscreet princess to weep and to repent, and, with a band of desperate adventurers, undertook the pilgrimage of Jerusalem His birth, his martial renown, and professions of zeal, announced him as the champion of the cross he soon captivated both the clergy and the king, and the Greek prince was invested with the lordship of Berytus, on the coast of Phœnicia In his neighbourhood resided a young and handsome queen, of his own nation and family, great-grand-daughter of the emperor Alexis, and widow of Baldwin the third, king of Jerusalem She visited and loved her kinsman Theodora was the third victim of his amorous seduction, and her shame was more public and scandalous than that of her predecessors The emperor still thirsted for revenge, and his subjects and allies of the Syrian frontier were repeatedly pressed to seize the person, and put out the eyes, of the fugitive In Palestine he was no longer safe, but the tender Theodora revealed his danger, and accompanied his flight The queen of Jerusalem was exposed to the east, his obsequious concubine, and two illegitimate children were the living monuments of her weakness Damaseus was his first refuge, and, in the characters of the great Nourreddin and his servant Saladin, the superstitious Greek might learn to reverse the virtues of the mussulmans As the friend of Nourreddin he visited, most probably, Bagdad, and the courts of Persia, and, after a long circuit round the Caspian sea and the mountains of Georgia, he finally settled among the Turks of Asia Minor, the hereditary enemies of his country The sultan of Colonia afforded an hospitable retreat to Andronicus, his mistress, and his band of outlaws the debt of gratitude was paid by frequent inroads in the Roman province of Trebizond, and he seldom returned without an ample harvest of spoil and of christian captives In the story of his adventures, he was fond of comparing himself to David, who escaped, by a long exile, the snares of the wicked But the royal prophet (he presumed to add) was content to lurk on the borders of Judæa, to slay an Amalekite, and to threaten, in his miserable state, the life of the avaricious Nabal The excursions of the Comnenian prince had a wider range, and he had spread over the eastern world the glory of his name and religion By a sentence of the Greek church, the licentious rover had been separated from the faithful, but even this excommunication may prove, that he never abjured the profession of christianity

His vigilance had eluded or repelled the open and secret persecution of the emperor, but he was at length ensnared by the captivity of his female companion The governor of Trebizond succeeded in his attempt to surprise the person of Theodora the queen of Jerusalem and her two children were sent to Constantinople, and their loss imbibed the tedious solitude of banishment The fugitive implored and obtained a final pardon, with leave to throw himself at the feet of his sovereign, who was satisfied with the submission of this haughty spirit Prostrate on the ground, he deplored with tears and groans the guilt of his past rebellion, nor would he presume to arise, unless some faithful subject would drag him to the foot of the throne, by an iron chain with which he had secretly encircled his neck This extraordinary penance excited the wonder and pity of the assembly, his sins were forgiven by the church and state, but the just suspicion of Manuel fixed his residence at a distance from the court, at Oenoe, a town of Pontus, surrounded with rich vineyards, and situate on the coast of the Euxine The death of Manuel, and the disorders of the minority, soon opened the fairest field to his ambition The emperor was a boy of twelve or fourteen years of age, without vigour, or wisdom, or experience his mother, the empress Mary, abandoned her person and government to a favourite of the Comnenian name, and his sister, another Mary, whose husband, an Italian, was decorated with the title of Cesar, excited a conspiracy, and at length an insurrection, against her odious stepmother The provinces were forgotten, the capital was in flames, and a century of peace and order was overthrown in the vice and weakness of a few months A civil war was kindled in Constantinople, the two factions fought a bloody battle in the square of the palace, and the rebels sustained a regular siege in the cathedral of St Sophia The patriarch laboured with honest zeal to heal the wounds of the republic, the most respectable patriots called aloud for a guardian and avenger, and every tongue repeated the praise of the talents and even the virtues of Andronicus In his retirement, he affected to revolve the solemn duties of his oath "If the safety or honour of the imperial family he threatened, I will reveal and oppose the mischief to the utmost of my power" His correspondence with the patriarch and patricians was seasoned with apt quotations from the psalms of David and the epistles of St Paul, and he patiently waited till he was called to her deliverance by the voice of his country In his march from Oenoe to Constantinople, his slender train insensibly swelled to a crowd and an army, his professions of religion and loyalty were mistaken for the language of his heart, and the simplicity of a foreign dress, which showed to advantage his majestic stature, displayed a lively image of his poverty and exile All opposition sunk before him, he reached the straits of the Thracian Bosphorus, the Byzantine navy sailed from the harbour to receive and transport the saviour of the empire the torrent was loud and irresistible, and the insects who had basked in the sunshine of royal favour disappeared at the blast of the storm

It was the first care of Andronicus to occupy the palace, to salute the emperor to confine his mother, to punish her minister, and to restore the public order and tranquillity. He then visited the sepulchre of Manuel: the spectators were ordered to stand aloof, but as he bowed in the attitude of prayer, they heard, or thought they heard a murmur of triumph and revenge. "I no longer fear thee, my old enemy, who hast driven me a vagabond to every climate of the earth. Thou art safely deposited under a seven-fold dome, from whence thou canst never arise till the signal of the last trumpet. It is now my turn, and speedily will I trample on thy ashes and thy posterity." From his subsequent tyranny we may impute such feelings to the man and the moment; but it is not extremely probable that he gave an articulate sound to his secret thoughts. In the first months of his administration his designs were veiled by a fair semblance of hypocrisy, which could delude only the eyes of the multitude: the coronation of Alexius was performed with due solemnity, and his perfidious guardian, holding in his hands the body and blood of Christ, most fervently declared, that he lived, and was ready to die, for the service of his beloved pupil. But his numerous adherents were instructed to maintain, that the sinking empire must perish in the hands of a child, that the Romans could only be saved by a veteran prince bold in arms, skilful in policy, and taught to reign by the long experience of fortune and mankind, and that it was the duty of every citizen to force the reluctant modesty of Andronicus to undertake the burthen of the public care. The young emperor was himself constrained to join his voice to the general acclamation and to solicit the association of a colleague, who instantly degraded him from the supreme rank, secluded his person, and verified the rash declaration of the patriarch, that Alexius might be considered as dead, so soon as he was committed to the custody of his guardian. But his death was preceded by the imprisonment and execution of his mother. After blackening her reputation, and inflaming against her the passions of the multitude the tyrant accused and tried the empress for a treasonable correspondence with the king of Hungary. His own son a youth of honour and humanity, avowed his abhorrence of this flagitious act and three of the judges had the merit of preferring their conscience to their safety: but the obsequious tribunal, without requiring any proof, or hearing any defence, condemned the widow of Manuel, and her unfortunate son subscribed the sentence of her death. Maria was strangled, her corpse was buried in the sea, and her memory was wounded by the insult most offensive to female vanity, a false and ugly representation of her heauteous form. The fate of her son was not long deferred: he was strangled with a bowstring, and the tyrant, insensible to pity or remorse, after surveying the body of the innocent youth, struck it rudely with his foot. "Thy father," he cried, "was a harc, thy mother a whore, and thyself a fool!"

The Roman sceptre, the reward of his crimes, was held by Andronicus about three years and a half as the guardian or sovereign of the empire. His government exhibited a singular contrast of vice and virtue. When he listened to his passions he was the scourge, when he consulted his reason the father, of his people. In the exercise of private justice, he was equitable and rigorous: a shameful and pernicious venality was abolished, and the offices were filled with the most deserving candidates by a prince who had sense to choose, and severity to punish. He prohibited the inhuman practice of pillaging the goods and persons of shipwrecked mariners, the provinces, so long the objects of oppression or neglect, revived in prosperity and plenty, and millions applauded the distant blessings of his reign, while he was cursed by the witnesses of his daily cruelties. The ancient proverb, That blood-thirsty is the man who returns from banishment to power, had been applied with too much truth to Marius and Tiberius, and was now verified for the third time in the life of Andronicus. His memory was stored with a black list of the enemies and rivals, who had traduced his merit, opposed his greatness, or insulted his misfortunes: and the only comfort of his exile was the sacred hope and promise of revenge. The necessary extinction of the young emperor and his mother, imposed the fatal obligation of extirpating the friends, who hated, and might punish, the assassin, and the repetition of murder rendered him less willing, and less able to forgive. A horrid narrative of the victims whom he sacrificed by poison or the sword, by the sea or the flames, would be less expressive of his cruelty than the appellation of the halcyon days, which was applied to a rare and bloodless week of repose: the tyrant strove to transfer, on the laws and the judges, some portion of his guilt, but the mask was fallen, and his subjects could no longer mistake the true author of their calamities. The noblest of the Greeks, more especially those who, by descent or alliance, might dispute the Comnenian inheritance, escaped from the monster's den: Nice or Prusa, Sicily or Cyprus, were their places of refuge, and as their flight was already criminal, they aggravated their offence by an open revolt, and the imperial title. Yet Andronicus resisted the daggers and swords of his most formidable enemies: Nice and Prusa were reduced and chastised: the Sicilians were content with the sack of Thessalonica, and the distance of Cyprus was not more propitious to the rebel than to the tyrant. His throne was subverted by a rival without merit, and a people without arms. Isaac Angelus a descendant in the female line from the great Alexius, was marked as a victim, by the prudence or superstition of the emperor. In a moment of despair, Angelus defended his life and liberty, slew the executioner, and fled to the church of St. Sophia. The sanctuary was insensibly filled with a curious and mournful crowd, who, in his fate, prog-

Andronicus I
Comnenus
A.D. 1173
October

nosticated their own But their lamentations were soon turned to curses, and their curses to threats they dared to ask, "Why do we fear? why do we obey? We are many, and he is one, our patience is the only bond of our slavery" With the dawn of day the city burst into a general sedition, the prisons were thrown open, the coldest and most servile were roused to the defence of their country, and Isaac, the second of the name, was raised from the sanctuary to the throne Unconscious of his danger, the tyrant was absent, withdrawn from the toils of state, in the delicious islands of the Propontis He had contracted an indecent marriage with Alice, or Agnes, daughter of Lewis the seventh, of France, and relief of the unfortunate Alexius, and his society, more suitable to his temper than to his age, was composed of a young wife and a favourite concubine On the first alarm he rushed to Constantinople, impatient for the blood of the guilty, but he was astonished by the silence of the palace, the tumult of the city, and the general desertion of mankind Andronicus proclaimed a free pardon to his subjects, they neither desired, nor would grant, forgiveness he offered to resign the crown to his son Manuel, but the virtues of the son could not expiate his father's crimes The sea was still open for his retreat, but the news of the revolution had flown along the coast when fear had ceased, obedience was no more the imperial galley was pursued and taken by an armed brigantine, and the tyrant was dragged to the presence of Isaac Angelus, loaded with fetters, and a long chain round his neck His eloquence, and the tears of his female companions, pleaded in vain for his life, but, instead of the decencies of a legal execution, the new monarch abandoned the criminal to the numerous sufferers, whom he had deprived of a father, a husband, or a friend His teeth and hair, an eye and a hand, were torn from him, as a poor compensation for their loss, and a short respite was allowed, that he might feel the bitterness of death Astride on a camel, without any danger of a rescue, he was carried through the city, and the basest of the populace rejoiced to trample on the fallen majesty of their prince After a thousand blows and outrages, Andronicus was hung by the feet, between two pillars that supported the statues of a wolf and a sow, and every hand that could reach the public enemy, inflicted on his body some mark of ingenious or brutal cruelty, till two friendly or furious Italians plunging their swords into his body, released him from all human punishment In this long and painful agony, "Lord, have mercy upon me! and why will you bruise a broken reed?" were the only words that escaped his mouth Our hatred for the tyrant is lost in pity for the man, nor can we blame his pusillanimous resignation since a Greek christian was no longer master of his life

Isaac II Ange
his
A D 1185
Sept 12

I have been tempted to expatiate on the extraordinary character and adventures of Andronicus but I shall

here terminate the series of the Greek emperors since the time of Heraclius The branches that sprang from the Comnenian trunk had insensibly withered, and the male line was continued only in the posterity of Andronicus himself, who, in the public confusion, usurped the sovereignty of Trebizond, so obscure in history, and so famous in romance A private citizen of Philadelphia, Constantine Angelus, had emerged to wealth and honours, by his marriage with a daughter of the emperor Alexius His son Andronicus is conspicuous only by his cowardice His grandson Isaac punished and succeeded the tyrant A D 1204
April 12. but he was dethroned by his own vices, and the ambition of his brother, and their discord introduced the Latins to the conquest of Constantinople, the first great period in the fall of the eastern empire

If we compute the number and duration of the reigns, it will be found, that a period of six hundred years is filled by sixty emperors, including in the Augustan list some female sovereigns, and deducting some usurpers who were never acknowledged in the capital, and some princes who did not live to possess their inheritance The average proportion will allow ten years for each emperor, far below the chronological rule of Sir Isaac Newton, who, from the experience of more recent and regular monarchies, has defined about eighteen or twenty years as the term of an ordinary reign The Byzantine empire was most tranquil and prosperous when it could acquiesce in hereditary succession, five dynasties, the Heraclian, Isaurian, Amorian, Basilian, and Comnenian families, enjoyed and transmitted the royal patrimony during their respective series of five, four, three, six, and four generations, several princes number the years of their reign with those of their infancy and Constantine the seventh and his two grandsons occupy the space of an entire century But in the intervals of the Byzantine dynasties, the succession is rapid and broken, and the name of a successful candidate is speedily erased by a more fortunate competitor Many were the paths that led to the summit of royalty the fabric of rebellion was overthrown by the stroke of conspiracy, or undermined by the silent arts of intrigue the favourites of the soldiers or people, of the senate or clergy, of the women and eunuchs, were alternately clothed with the purple, the means of their elevation were base, and their end was often contemptible or tragic A being of the nature of man, endowed with the same faculties, but with a longer measure of existence, would cast down a smile of pity and contempt on the crimes and follies of human ambition, so eager, in a narrow span to grasp at a precarious and short-lived enjoyment It is thus that the experience of history exalts and enlarges the horizon of our intellectual view In a composition of some days in a perusal of some hours six hundred years have rolled away, and the duration of a life or reign is contracted to a fleeting moment the grave is ever beside the throne, the success of a criminal is almost instantly followed by the loss of his prize, and our immortal reason survives and disdains the sixty phantoms of kings who have passed before our eyes, and faintly dwell on our remembrance. The observation, that, in every age and climate, ambition has prevailed with the same commanding energy, may abate the surprise of a philosopher, but while he condemns the vanity, he may search the motive, of this universal desire to obtain and hold the sceptre of dominion. To the greater part of the Byzantine series, we cannot reasonably ascribe the love of fame and of mankind. The virtue alone of John Comnenus was beneficent and pure: the most illustrious of the princes, who precede or follow that respectable name, have trod with some dexterity and vigour the crooked and bloody paths of a selfish policy in scrutinizing the imperfect characters of Leo the Isaurian, Basil the first, and Alexius Comnenus, of Theophilus, the second Basil, and Manuel Comnenus, our esteem and censure are almost equally balanced, and the remainder of the imperial crowd could only desire and expect to be forgotten by posterity. Was personal happiness the aim and object of their ambition? I shall not descant on the vulgar topics of the misery of kings, but I may surely observe, that their condition, of all others, is the most pregnant with fear, and the least susceptible of hope. For these opposite passions, a larger scope was allowed in the revolutions of antiquity, than in the smooth and solid temper of the modern world, which cannot easily repeat either the triumph of Alexander or the fall of Darius. But the peculiar insolvency of the Byzantine princes exposed them to domestic perils, without affording any lively promise of foreign conquest. From the pinnacle of greatness, Andronicus was precipitated by a death more cruel and shameful than that of the vilest malefactor, but the most glorious of his predecessors had much more to dread from their subjects than to hope from their enemies. The army was licentious without spirit, the nation turbulent without freedom: the barbarians of the east and west pressed on the monarchy, and the loss of the provinces was terminated by the final servitude of the capital.

The entire series of Roman emperors, from the first of the Cæsars to the last of the Constantines, extends above fifteen hundred years: and the term of dominion, unbroken by foreign conquest, surpasses the measure of the ancient monarchies, the Assyrians or Medes, the successors of Cyrus, or those of Alexander.

CHAP XLIX

Introduction, worship, and persecution of images — Revolt of Italy and Rome — Temporal dominion of the popes — Conquest of Italy by the Franks — Establishment of images, — Character and coronation of Charlemagne — Restoration and decay of the Roman empire in the west — Independence of Italy — Constitution of the Germanic body

IN the connexion of the church and state, I have considered the former as subservient only, and relative, to the latter, a salutary maxim, if in fact, as well as in narrative it had ever been held sacred. The oriental philosophy of the Gnostics, the dark abyss of predestination and grace, and the strange transformations of the eucharist from the sign to the substance of Christ's body,<sup>a</sup> I have purposely abandoned to the curiosity of speculative divines. But I have reviewed, with diligence and pleasure, the objects of ecclesiastical history, by which the decline and fall of the Roman empire were maternally affected, the propagation of christianity, the constitution of the catholic church, the ruin of paganism, and the sects that arose from the mysterious controversies concerning the Trinity and incarnation. At the head of this class, we may justly rank the worship of images, so fiercely disputed in the eighth and ninth centuries, since a question of popular superstition produced the revolt of Italy, the temporal power of the popes, and the restoration of the Roman empire in the west.

The primitive christians were possessed with an unconquerable repugnance to the use and abuse of images, and this aversion may be ascribed to their descent from the Jews, and their enmity to the Greeks. The Mosaic law had severely proscribed all representations of the Deity, and that precept was firmly established in the principles and practice of the chosen people. The wit of the christian apologists was pointed against the foolish idolaters, who bowed before the workmanship of their own hands<sup>b</sup>, the images of brass and marble, which, had they been endowed with sense and motion, should have started rather from the pedestal to adore the creative powers of the artist<sup>c</sup>. Perhaps some recent and imperfect converts of the Gnostic tribe, might crown the statues of Christ and St Paul with the profane honours which they paid to those of Aristotle and Pythagoras,<sup>d</sup> but the public religion of the catholics was uniformly simple and spiritual, and the first notice of the use of pictures is in the censure of the council of Elberis, three hundred years after the christian æra. Under the successors of Constantine, in the peace and luxury of the triumphant church, the more prudent bishops con-

Introduction of images into the christian church

<sup>a</sup> The learned Selden has given the history of transubstantiation in a comprehensive and pithy sentence. "This opinion is only rhetoric turned into logic" (His Works, vol. iii. p. 2073, in his Table Talk).
<sup>b</sup> Nec intelligunt homines ineptissimi, quod si sentire simulacra et materiæ possent adoratura hominem facient a quo sunt exposita (Divin. Institut. l. i. c. 2.) Lactantius is the last, as well as the most eloquent, of the Latin apologists. Their railery of idols attacks not only the object, but the form and matter.

<sup>c</sup> See Irenæus, Ippolytus, and Augustin (Barnes, c. Hist. des Eglises Reformées tom. ii. p. 1313). This Gnostic practice has a singular affinity with the private worship of Alexander Severus. (Lampridius, c. 29. Lardner, Healtien Testimonies, vol. iii. p. 34.)

descended to indulge a visible superstition, for the benefit of the multitude and, after the ruin of paganism, they were no longer restrained by the apprehension of an odious parallel. The first introduction of a symbolic worship was in the veneration of the cross, and of relics. The saints and martyrs, whose intercession was implored, were seated on the right hand of God, but the gracious and often supernatural favours, which in the popular belief were showered round their tomb, conveyed an unquestionable sanction of the devout pilgrims, who visited, and touched, and kissed, these lifeless remains, the memorials of their merits and sufferings<sup>d</sup>. But a memorial, more interesting than the skull or the sandals of a departed worthy, is the faithful copy of his person and features, delineated by the arts of painting or sculpture. In every age, such copies, so congenial to human feelings, have been cherished by the zeal of private friendship, or public esteem. the images of the Roman emperors were adored with civil, and almost religious, honours, a reverence less ostentatious, but more sincere, was applied to the statues of sages and patriots, and these profane virtues, these splendid sins, disappeared in the presence of the holy men, who had died for their celestial and everlasting country. At first, the experiment was made with caution and scruple, and the venerable pictures were discreetly allowed to instruct the ignorant, to awaken the cold, and to gratify the prejudices of the heathen proselytes. By a slow though inevitable progression, the honours of the original were transferred to the copy: the devout christian prayed before the image of a saint, and the pagan rites of genuflection, luminaries, and incense, again stole into the catholic church. The scruples of reason, or piety, were silenced by the strong evidence of visions and miracles, and the pictures which speak, and move, and bleed, must be endowed with a divine energy, and may be considered as the proper objects of religious adoration. The most audacious pencil might tremble in the rash attempt of defining, by forms and colours, the infinite Spirit, the eternal Father, who pervades and sustains the universe. But the superstitious mind was more easily reconciled to paint and to worship the angels, and, above all, the Son of God, under the human shape, which, on earth, they have condescended to assume. The second person of the Trinity had been clothed with a real and mortal body, but that body had ascended into heaven, and, had not some similitude been presented to the eyes of his disciples, the spiritual worship of Christ might have been obliterated by the visible relics and representations of the saints. A similar indulgence was requisite, and propitious, for the Virgin Mary: the place of her burial was unknown, and the assumption of her soul and body into heaven was adopted by the credulity of the Greeks and Latins. The use, and even the worship, of images, was firmly established before the end of the sixth century: they were fondly cherished by the warm imagination of the Greeks and Asiatics: the Pantheon and Vatican were adorned with the emblems of a new superstition, but this semblance of idolatry was more coldly entertained by the rude barbarians and the Arian clergy of the west. The bolder forms of sculpture, in brass or marble, which peopled the temples of antiquity, were offensive to the fancy or conscience of the christian Greeks, and a smooth surface of colours has ever been esteemed a more decent and harmless mode of imitation.<sup>f</sup>

The merit and effect of a copy depends on its resemblance with the original, but the primitive christians were ignorant of the genuine features of the Son of God, his mother, and his apostles. The statue of Christ at Pameas in Palestine<sup>c</sup> was more probably that of some temporal saviour, the Gnostics and their profane monuments were reprobated, and the fancy of the christian artists could only be guided by the clandestine imitation of some heathen model. In this distress, a bold and dexterous invention assured at once the likeness of the image and the innocence of the worship. A new superstructure of fable was raised on the popular basis of a Syrian legend, on the correspondence of Christ and Abgarus, so famous in the days of Eusebius, so reluctantly deserted by our modern advocates. The bishop of Casarea<sup>b</sup> records the epistle,<sup>1</sup> but he most strangely forgets the picture, of Christ,<sup>k</sup> the perfect impres-

or perhaps the queen Berenice (Bibliothèque Germanique tom xii. p. 1-72.)

h. Tisch. Hist. Eccles. l. i. c. 12. The learned Astrucius has brought up the collateral aid of three Syriac St. Irenaeus Stylites and James Bishop of Sarug but I do not find any notice of the Syriac original or the archives of Edessa, (Biblist Orient tom. i. p. 318 423 534) their vague belief is probably derived from the Cracks.

1. The existence for these epistles is stated and rejected by the candid Gardner (Heavenly Testimonies, vol. 1, p. 279-280). Among the host of his, and other, falsehoods derived from this convenient but unscrupulous poet, I am ashamed with the Crabes, Cayes, Tallmout &c to discover Mr Addison, an English gentleman (his Works, vol. 1, p. 523, Ba Kerville edition) but his supernatural tract is the christian religion owes its credit to his name, his style, and the interested and late of our clergy.

[illegible]

d See this history, 295 356 470 473

ρ ΟΙ ΥΠΟ ΤΟΙΣ ΑΙΩΝΙΣ ΠΑΡΧΟΝΤΕΣ ΑΙ ΑΛΗΘΕΙΕΣ ΜΟΡΦΑΙ ΤΙΣΙ ΚΑΙ ΣΧΗ
 ΜΑΤΙΝ· ΕΙΣΑΓΟΡΑΙ· ΕΙΣ ΤΗ ΚΗΡΗ ΚΑΙ ΕΛΘΟΙΣ ΤΗ· ΤΕΡΟΙΣ ΣΥΝ ΚΑΙ ΤΡΟΠΙ ΑΡΧΩΝ ΟΙΣΙΝ ΤΙΜΑΙ ΠΝΕΙΣ ΔΕΥΣΙ· ΚΑΝΕΥ· (Coneuiliu Decemum u in Collect Labb tom vii p 102v edit Venet) Il seront peultre à propos de ne point souffrir d'images de la Trinité ou de la Divinité· les defenſeurs les plus zelez des uns, es ayant condamni celles ci, et le concile de Trente en parlant que des images de Jesus Christ et des Saints. (Dupin, Biblioth Eccl'es tom vi p 154)

¶ The general history of indiges is drawn from the twenty second book of the Hist des I. lves Reformes of Jhuaze tom li p 1310—1317. He was a protestant but of a manly spirit and on this head the protestants are so intoriously in the right, that they can venture to be impartial. See the perplexity of poor Frar Page, Culora tom 1 p 42

After removing some rubbish of miracle and inconsistency, it may be allowed that, as late as the year 300 Perea in Palestine was decorated with a bronze statue, representing a grave personage wrapped in a cloak with a grateful or suppliant female kneeling before him, and that an inscription in ἑλληνιστῶν was perhaps inscribed on the pedestal. By the Christians, this group was (wisely) explained of their founder and the poor woman whom he had cured of the blood flux (Luke vii 18 Philostorg. vii 3, &c.) M. de Beaulieu more reasonably conjectures the philosopher Apollonius or the emperor Vespasian in the latter supposition, the ἑλληνιστῶν is a city, a province, sion of his face on a linen, with which he gratified the faith of the royal stranger, who had invoked his healing power, and offered the strong city of Edessa to protect him against the malice of the Jews. The ignorance of the primitive church is explained by the long imprisonment of the image in a niche of the wall, from whence, after an oblivion of five hundred years, it was released by some prudent bishop, and seasonably presented to the devotion of the times. Its first and most glorious exploit was the deliverance of the city from the arms of Chosroes Nushirvan, and it was soon revered as a pledge of the divine promise, that Edessa should never be taken by a foreign enemy. It is true, indeed, that the text of Procopius ascribes the double deliverance of Edessa to the wealth and valour of her citizens, who purchased the absence and repelled the assaults of the Persian monarch. He was ignorant, the profane historian, of the testimony which he is compelled to deliver in the ecclesiastical page of Evagrius, that the Palladium was exposed on the rampart, and that the water which had been sprinkled on the holy face, instead of quenching, added new fuel to the flames of the besieged. After this important service, the image of Edessa was preserved with respect and gratitude, and if the Armenians rejected the legend, the more credulous Greeks adored the similitude, which was not the work of any mortal pencil, but the immediate creation of the divine original. The style and sentiments of a Byzantine hymn will declare how far their worship was removed from the grossest idolatry. "How can we with mortal eyes contemplate this image, whose celestial splendour the host of heaven presumes not to behold? He who dwells in heaven condescends this day to visit us by his venerable image. He who is seated on the cherubim, visits us this day by a picture, which the Father has delineated with his immaculate hand, which he has formed in an ineffable manner, and which we sanctify by adoring it with fear and love." Before the end of the sixth century, these images, made without hands, (in Greek it is a single word,) were propagated in the camps and cities of the eastern empire; they were the objects of worship, and the instruments of miracles, and in the hour of danger or tumult, their venerable presence could revive the hope, rekindle the courage, or repress the fury, of the Roman legions.

Its copies

Of these pictures, the far greater part, the transcripts of a human pencil, could only pretend to a secondary likeness and improper title but there were some of higher descent, who derived their resemblance from an immediate contact with the original, endowed, for that purpose, with a miraculous and prolific virtue. The most ambitious aspired from a filial to a fraternal relation with the image of Edessa, and such is the veronica of Rome, or Spain, or Jerusalem, which Christ in his agony and bloody sweat applied to his face, and delivered to a holy matron. The fruitful precedent was speedily transferred to the Virgin Mary, and the saints and martyrs. In the church of Diospolis, in Palestine, the features of the mother of God<sup>a</sup> were deeply inscribed in a marble column. The east and west have been decorated by the pencil of St. Luke, and the evangelist, who was perhaps a physician, has been forced to exercise the occupation of a painter, so profane and odious in the eyes of the primitive christians. The Olympian Jove, created by the muse of Homer and the chisel of Phidias, might inspire a philosophic mind with momentary devotion, but these catholic images were faintly and flatly delineated by monkish artists in the last degeneracy of taste and genius<sup>b</sup>.

The worship of images had stolen <sup>Opposition to image worship</sup> into the church by insensible degrees, and each petty step was pleasing to the superstitious mind, as productive of comfort, and innocent of sin. But in the beginning of the eighth century, in the full magnitude of the abuse, the more timorous Greeks were awakened by an apprehension, that under the mask of christianity they had restored the religion of their fathers: they heard, with grief and impatience, the name of idolaters, the incessant charge of the Jews and Mahometans,<sup>c</sup> who derived from the Law and the Koran an immortal hatred to graven images and all the relative worship. The servitude of the Jews might curb their zeal, and depreciate their authority, but the triumphant muslimans, who reigned at Damascus, and threatened Constantinople, cast into the scale of reproach the accumulated weight of truth and victory. The cities of Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, had been fortified with the images of Christ, his mother, and his saints, and each city presumed on the hope or promise of miraculous defence. In a rapid conquest of ten years, the Arabs subdued those cities and these images, and, in their opinion, the Lord of hosts pronounced a decisive judgment between the adoration and contempt of these mute and inanimate idols. For a while Edessa had braved the Persian assaults, but the chosen city,

<sup>a</sup> ἡ εἰκὼν τοῦ κυρίου. See Ducauge, in Gloss. Græc. et Lat. The subject is treated with equal learning and beauty by the Jesuit Gretser (Mythologiae non Manichæi factis ad calumniam Constantini de Officiis, p. 291—330) the ass or rather the fox of Ingoldstadt (see the Scab. crania), with equal reason and wit by the protestant Bausobre in the ironical controversy which he has spread through many volumes of the Bibliothèque Germanique (tom. xviii. p. 1—60. xx. p. 27—68. xxx. p. 1—46. xxvii. p. 8—112. xxxiii. p. 1—33. xxxi. p. 111—148. xxxii. p. 73—107. xxiv. p. 67—96).

<sup>b</sup> Theophylact Simocatta (l. ii. c. 3. p. 31. l. iii. c. 1. p. 62) celebrates the εἰκόνες κατασκευασμέναι, which he styles εἰκονομαστρίαι. Yet it was no more than a copy, since he adds εἰκονομαστρίαν to εἰκόνος or εἰκονισμός (of ἡ δὲ εἰκὼν) εἰκονομαστρίαν τις ἀνθρώπου. See Pagi, tom. ii. A. D. 556. No. 11.

<sup>a</sup> See in the genuine or supposed words of John Damascenus, two passages on the Virgin and St. Luke, which have not been noticed by Gretser nor consequently by Bausobre (Opera Joh. Damasceni tom. i. p. 618. 631).

<sup>b</sup> "Four scandalous figures stand quite out from the curves: they are as bad as a group of statues!" It was thus that the ignorance and bigotry of a Greek priest applauded the pictures of Titian, which he had ordered and refused to accept.

<sup>c</sup> By Cedrenus, Zonaras, Glycas, and Manasses the origin of the Iconoclasts is imputed to the caliph Yazid and two Jews who promised the empire to Leo, and the repudiation of these hostile sectaries are turned into an absurd conspiracy for restoring the purity of the christian worship. (See Spanheim, Hist. Imag. c. 2.)

the spouse of Christ, was involved in the common ruin, and his divine resemblance became the slave and trophy of the infidels. After a servitude of three hundred years, the Palladium was yielded to the devotion of Constantinople, for a ransom of twelve thousand pounds of silver, the redemption of two hundred mussulmans, and a perpetual truce for the territory of Edessa.<sup>q</sup> In this season of distress and dismay, the eloquence of the monks was exercised in the defence of images, and they attempted to prove, that the sin and schism of the greatest part of the orientals had forfeited the favour, and annihilated the virtue, of these precious symbols. But they were now opposed by the murmurs of many simple or rational christians, who appealed to the evidence of texts, of facts, and of the primitive times, and secretly desired the reformation of the church. As the worship of images had never been established by any general or positive law, its progress in the eastern empire had been retarded, or accelerated, by the differences of men and manners, the local degrees of refinement, and the personal characters of the bishops. The splendid devotion was fondly cherished by the levity of the capital, and the inventive genius of the Byzantine clergy, while the rude and remote districts of Asia were strangers to this innovation of sacred luxury. Many large congregations of Gnostics and Arians maintained, after their conversion, the simple worship which had preceded their separation, and the Armenians, the most warlike subjects of Rome, were not reconciled, in the twelfth century, to the sight of images.<sup>r</sup> These various denominations of men afforded a fund of prejudice and aversion, of small account in the villages of Anatolia or Thraee, but which, in the fortune of a soldier, a prelate, or a eunuch, might be often connected with the powers of the church and state.

Leo the Iconoclast, and his successors.
A D 726-810

Of such adventurers, the most fortunate was the emperor Leo the third,<sup>s</sup> who, from the mountains of Isauria, ascended the throne of the east. He was ignorant of sacred and profane letters, but his education, his reason, perhaps his intercourse with the Jews and Arabs, had inspired the martial peasant with a hatred of images, and it was held to be the duty of a prince, to impose on his subjects the dictates of his own conscience. But in the outset of an unsettled reign, during ten years of toil and danger, Leo submitted to the meanness of hypocrisy, bowed before the idols which he despised, and satisfied the Roman pontiff with the annual professions of his orthodoxy and zeal. In the reformation of religion, his first steps were moderate and cautious. He assembled a great council of senators and bishops, and enacted, with their consent, that all the images should be removed from the sanctuary and altar to a proper height in the churches, where they might be visible to the eyes, and inaccessible to the superstition, of the people. But it was impossible on either side to check the rapid though adverse impulse of veneration and abhorrence. In their lofty position, the sacred images still edified their votaries, and reproached the tyrant. He was himself provoked by resistance and invective, and his own party accused him of an imperfect discharge of his duty, and urged for his imitation the example of the Jewish king, who had broken without scruple the brazen serpent of the temple. By a second edict, he proscribed the existence as well as the use of religious pictures, the churches of Constantinople and the provinces were cleansed from idolatry, the images of Christ, the Virgin, and the saints, were demolished, or a smooth surface of plaster was spread over the walls of the edifice. The sect of the Iconoclasts was supported by the zeal and despotism of six emperors, and the east and west were involved in a noisy conflict of one hundred and twenty years. It was the design of Leo the Isaurian to pronounce the condemnation of images, as an article of faith, and by the authority of a general council. But the convocation of such an assembly was reserved for his son Constantine,<sup>t</sup> and though it is stigmatized by triumphant bigotry as a meeting of fools and atheists, their own partial and mutilated acts betray many symptoms of reason and piety. The debates and decrees of many provincial synods introduced the summons

Their synod of Constantinople, A D 754

of the general council which met in the suburbs of Constantinople, and was composed of the respectable number of three hundred and thirty-eight bishops of Europe and Anatolia, for the patriarchs of Antioch and Alexandria were the slaves of the caliph, and the Roman pontiff had withdrawn the churches of Italy and the west from the communion of the Greeks. This Byzantine synod assumed the rank and powers of the seventh general council, yet even this title was a recognition of the six preceding assemblies, which had laboriously built the structure of the catholic faith. After a serious deliberation of six months, the three hundred and thirty-eight bishops pronounced and subscribed a unanimous decree, that all visible

<sup>q</sup> See Elmæin, (Hist. Saracen. p. 267.) Ahnpharagius (Dynast. p. 201.) and Abulfeda, (Annal. Moslem. p. 261.) and the criticisms of Pagi, (tom. iii. A D 844.) The prudent Franciscan refuses to determine whether the image of Edessa now reposes at Rome or Genoa, but its repose is in, lation, and this ancient object of worship is no longer famous or fashionable.

<sup>r</sup> Apuricour kat Ahamarior etienne n'ont pas cru que les images fussent priées (Nectas, l. ii. p. 238.) The Armenian churches are still content with the cross (Missions du Levant, tom. iii. p. 149.) but surely the superstitions of Greece are unjust to the superstition of the Germans of the twelfth century.

<sup>s</sup> Our original, but not impartial monuments of the Iconoclasts must be drawn from the Acts of the Councils, tom. viii. and ix. Collect. Labbe edit. Venet. and the historical writings of Theophanes, Nicephorus, Manasses, Cedrenus, Zonaras, &c. Of the modern catholics, Baronius Pagi Natalis Alexander (Hist. Eccles. Scæntum viii. and ix.) and Maimbourg, (Hist. des Iconoclastes) have treated the subject with learning, precision and credulity. The protestant labours of Frederic Spanheim (Historia Imperii maritimi Rostiniani) and James Bannier (Hist. des Iconoclastes) are excellent. The Reformation (tom. ii. l. xiii. p. 115-116) are excellent. The Iconoclasts were not without mutual aid and reciprocal tendency. It is easy for us to give the balance with philosophical indifference. Some flowers of rhetoric are to be seen in the original and the beginning of the history. By Damascenus it is stated that the emperor (Opera tom. i. p. 224.) Spanheim's Apology for the Synod of Constantinople (p. 171.) is written up with truth and ingenuity, from such materials as he could find in the Greek texts (p. 164.) &c. The witty John of Damascus converts the emperor's image into a statue of their deity, &c. Opera tom. i. p. 224.

symbols of Christ, except in the eucharist, were either blasphemous or heretical, that image-worship was a corruption of christianity and a renewal of paganism, that all such monuments of idolatry should be broken or erased, and that those who should refuse to deliver the objects of their private superstition, were guilty of disobedience to the authority of the church and of the emperor. In their loud and loyal acclamations, they celebrated the merits of their temporal redeemer, and to his zeal and justice they intrusted the execution of their spiritual censures. At Constantinople, as in the former councils, the will of the prince was the rule of episcopal faith, but on this occasion, I am inclined to suspect that a large majority of the prelates sacrificed their secret conscience to the temptations of hope and fear. In the long night of superstition, the christians had wandered far away from the simplicity of the gospel: nor was it easy for them to discern the clue, and tread back the mazes, of the labyrinth. The worship of images was inseparably blended, at least to a pious fancy, with the cross, the Virgin, the saints and their relics: the holy ground was involved in a cloud of miracles and visions, and the nerves of the mind, curiosity and scepticism, were benumbed by the habits of obedience and belief. Constantine himself is accused of indulging a royal licence to doubt, to deny, or deride the mysteries of the catholics,<sup>a</sup> but they were deeply inscribed in the public and private creed of his bishops, and the boldest Iconoclast might assault with a secret horror the monuments of popular devotion, which were consecrated to the honour of his celestial patrons. In the reformation of the sixteenth century, freedom and knowledge had expanded all the faculties of man: the thirst of innovation superseded the reverence of antiquity, and the vigour of Europe could disdain those phantoms which terrified the sickly and servile weakness of the Greeks.

Their creed

Their persecution of the images and monks, A.D. 725-775

The scandal of an abstract heresy can be only proclaimed to the people by the blast of the ecclesiastical trumpet, but the most ignorant can perceive, the most torpid must feel, the profanation and downfall of their visible deities. The first hostilities of Leo were directed against a lofty Christ on the vestibule, and above the gate, of the palace. A ladder had been planted for the assault, but it was furiously shaken by a crowd of zealots and women they beheld, with pious transport, the ministers of sacrilege tumbling from on high, and dashed against the pavement, and the honours of the ancient martyrs were prostituted to these criminals, who justly suffered for murder and rebellion*. The execution of the imperial edict was resisted by frequent tumults in Constantinople and the provinces: the person of Leo was endangered, his officers were massacred, and the popular enthusiasm was quelled by the strongest efforts of the civil and military power. Of the Archipelago, or Holy sea, the numerous islands were filled with images and monks: their votaries abjured, without scruple, the eucmy of Christ, his mother, and the saints: they armed a fleet of boats and galleys, displayed their consecrated banners, and boldly steered for the harbour of Constantinople, to place on the throne a new favourite of God and the people. They depended on the succour of a miracle, but their miracles were inefficient against the Greek fire, and, after the defeat and conflagration of their fleet, the naked islands were abandoned to the element or justice of the conqueror. The son of Leo, in the first year of his reign, had undertaken an expedition against the Saracens: during his absence, the capital, the palace, and the purple, were occupied by his kinsman, Artavasdes, the ambitious champion of the orthodox faith. The worship of images was triumphantly restored: the patriarch renounced his dissimulation, or dissembled his sentiments, and the righteous claim of the usurper was acknowledged, both in the new and in ancient Rome. Constantine fled for refuge to his paternal mountains, but he descended at the head of the bold and affectionate Isaurians, and his final victory confounded the arms and predictions of the fanatics. His long reign was distracted with clamour, sedition, conspiracy, and mutual hatred, and sanguinary revenge: the persecution of images was the motive or pretence, of his adversaries, and, if they missed a temporal diadem, they were rewarded by the Greeks with the crown of martyrdom. In every act of open and clandestine treason, the emperor felt the unforgiving enmity of the monks, the faithful slaves of the superstition to which they owed their riches and influence. They prayed, they preached, they absolved, they inflamed, they conspired: the solitude of Palestine poured forth a torrent of invective, and the pen of St. John Damascenus,<sup>f</sup> the last of the Greek fathers, devoted the tyrant's head, both in this world and the next*. I am not at leisure to examine how far the monks provoked, nor how much they have exaggerated, their real and pretended sufferings, nor how many lost their lives or limbs, their eyes or their beards, by the cruelty

<sup>a</sup> He is accused of proscribing the title of saint, styling the Virgin mother of Christ, comparing her after her delivery to an empty purse of Ariarianism, Nestorianism &c. In his defence Spanheim (c. 17. p. 207) is somewhat embarrassed between the interest of a protestant and the duty of an orthodox divine.

<sup>b</sup> The holy confessor Theophanes approves the principle of their rebellion ἔπειτα ἀνέστησαν ἐπὶ τῷ βασιλεὶ (p. 339). Gregory II. (in Epist. ad Imp. Leonem Concil. tom. viii. p. 661. 664) applauds the zeal of the Byzantine women who killed the imperial officers.

<sup>c</sup> John or Nannos, was a noble christian of Damascus, who held a civil or military office in the service of the caliph. His zeal in the cause of images exposed him to the resentment and treachery of the Greek emperor: and on the suspicion of a treasonable correspondence, he was deprived of his right hand, which was miraculously restored by the Virgin. After this deliverance he resigned his office, distributed his wealth, and buried himself in the monastery of St. Saba between Jerusalem and the Dead sea. The legend is famous: but his learned editor father Lequien has unlikely proved that St. John Damascenus was already a monk before the Iconoclast dispute (Opera, tom. I. p. 101. St. Joan. Damascenus p. 10-17 et Notæ ad loc.).

<sup>d</sup> After sending Leo to the devil he introduces his heir—ὁ μισθὸν αὐτοῦ γενόμενος, καὶ τὴν κακίαν αὐτοῦ ἀναπνεύσας ἐν τῷ αἵματι γενόμενος (Opera Damascenus tom. I. p. 625). If the authenticity of this piece be suspicious, we are sure that in other works, no longer extant, Damascenus bestowed on Constantine the title of ἱεὺς Μωυσεῖ, Ἀβραάμ, καὶ Ἰσραὴλ, (Opera I. p. 306.)

of the emperor From the chastisement of individuals, he proceeded to the abolition of the order, and, as it was wealthy and useless, his resentment might be stimulated by avarice, and justified by patriotism The formidable name and mission of the Dragon,<sup>a</sup> his visitor-general, excited the terror and abhorrence of the black nation the religious communities were dissolved, the buildings were converted into magazines, or barracks, the lands, movables, and cattle, were confiscated, and our modern precedents will support the charge, that much wanton or malicious havoc was exercised against the relics, and even the books, of the monasteries With the habit and profession of monks, the public and private worship of images was rigorously proscribed, and it should seem, that a solemn abjuration of idolatry was exacted from the subjects, or at least from the clergy, of the eastern empire<sup>b</sup>

State of Italy

The patient east abjured, with reluctance, her sacred images, they were fondly cherished, and vigorously defended, by the independent zeal of the Italians In ecclesiastical rank and jurisdiction, the patriarch of Constantinople and the pope of Rome were nearly equal But the Greek prelate was a domestic slave under the eye of his master, at whose nod he alternately passed from the convent to the throne, and from the throne to the convent A distant and dangerous station, amidst the barbarians of the west, excited the spirit and freedom of the Latin bishops Their popular election endeared them to the Romans the public and private indigence was relieved by their ample revenue, and the weakness or neglect of the emperors compelled them to consult, both in peace and war, the temporal safety of the city In the school of adversity the priest insensibly imbibed the virtues and the ambition of a prince, the same character was assumed, the same policy was adopted, by the Italian, the Greek, or the Syrian, who ascended the chair of St Peter, and, after the loss of her legions and provinces, the genius and fortune of the popes again restored the supremacy of Rome It

<sup>a</sup> In the narrative of this persecution from Theophanes and Cedrenus Spanheim (p. 235-238) is happy to compare the Draco of Leo with the dragons (Dracones) of Louis XIV., and highly solaces himself with this controversial pun

<sup>b</sup> Προγράμμιον γὰρ ἐξερμηνεύει κατὰ τὰς ἀρχαίας τὴν ὑπο τῆς χειρὸς αὐτοῦ πάντα ὑπογράψας καὶ ὁμολογῶν τὸν ἀσθενησά τὴν προσκύνησιν τῶν σικτων εἰκότων (Dimitscul Op. lomm i p. 625) This oath and subscription I do not remember to have seen in any modern compilation

<sup>c</sup> καὶ τὴν ἰωάννην συν-ᾠσιν ἰταλῶν τῆς βασιλείας αὐτοῦ ἀνέστησε καὶ Θεοφιλοῦς (Chironographi p. 143) For this Gregory is styled by Cedrenius ἀσθενὴς ἀπὸ προσβολῆς (p. 430) Zonaras specifies the thin der σισθησὶν ἐπὶ τοῖς οἰκείοις (lomm i l. xv p. 104 105) It may be observed, that the Greeks are apt to confound the times and actions of two Gregories

<sup>d</sup> See Baronius Annal. Eccles. A. D. 730 No. 4. 5. dignum exemplum! Bellarmus de Romano Pontifice l. v. c. 8. muletauit eum (sic) imperi. S. conus de Regno Italia l. iii. Opera, lomm i p. 167 Yet such is the chance of Italy that Sigonius is corrected by the editor of Milan, Philippus Argelatus a Bolognese and subject of the pope

<sup>e</sup> Quid si christiani olim non despuerunt Neronem aut Julianum, id fuit quia deerant vires temporales christiani (honest) Bellarmine, de Rom. Pont. l. v. c. 7) Cardinal Perron adds a distinction more honourable to the first christians but not more satisfactory to modern princes—the treason of heretics and apostates who break their oath before their own and renounce their allegiance to Christ and his vicar (Perroniana, p. 89)

<sup>f</sup> Take as a specimen, the cantors Barroge (Hist. de l'Église p. 130, 1351) and the vehement Spanheim (Hist. Imaginum) who with a hundred more, tread in the footsteps of the centurators of Magdeburgh

is agreed, that in the eighth century, their dominion was founded on rebellion, and that the rebellion was produced and justified, by the heresy of the Iconoclasts, but the conduct of the second and third Gregory, in this memorable contest, is variously interpreted by the wishes of their friends and enemies The Byzantine writers unanimously declare, that, after a fruitless admonition, they pronounced the separation of the east and west, and deprived the sacrilegious tyrant of the revenue and sovereignty of Italy Their excommunication is still more clearly expressed by the Greeks, who beheld the accomplishment of the papal triumphs, and as they are more strongly attached to their religion than to their country, they praise, instead of blaming, the zeal and orthodoxy of these apostolical men<sup>c</sup> The modern champions of Rome are eager to accept the praise and the precedent this great and glorious example of the deposition of royal heretics is celebrated by the cardinals Baronius and Bellarmine,<sup>d</sup> and if they are asked, why the same thunders were not hurled against the Neros and Julians of antiquity? they reply, that the weakness of the primitive church was the sole cause of her patient loyalty<sup>e</sup> On this occasion, the effects of love and hatred are the same, and the zealous protestants, who seek to kindle the indignation, and to alarm the fears, of princes and magistrates, expatiate on the insolence and treason of the two Gregories against their lawful sovereign<sup>f</sup> They are defended only by the moderate catholics, for the most part, of the Gallican church,<sup>g</sup> who respect the saint, without approving the sin These common advocates of the crown and the mitre circumscribe the truth of facts by the rule of equity, Scripture, and tradition, and appeal to the evidence of the Latins,<sup>h</sup> and the lives<sup>i</sup> and epistles of the popes themselves

Two original epistles, from Gregory Epistles of Gregory the second to the emperor Leo, are <sup>lives II to the emperor,</sup> still extant,<sup>k</sup> and if they cannot be <sup>A. D. 727</sup> praised as the most perfect models of eloquence and logic, they exhibit the portrait, or at least the mask,

<sup>c</sup> See Lannoy, (Opera, tom v. pars ii. epist. vii. p. 456-474) Nithis Alexander, (Hist. Nov. Testamenti scilicet vii. disc. l. p. 92-96) Pagi (Critica, tom iii. p. 215, 216) and Ciarbone (Istoria Civile di Napoli tom i p. 317-320) a disciple of the Gallican school In the field of controversy I always pity the moderate party, who stand on the open middle ground exposed to the fire of both sides

<sup>d</sup> They appeared in Paul Warnefrid, or Diaconus (de Gestis Langobard. l. vi. c. 49. p. 206 207 in Script. Ital. Muratori tom i. pars i.) and the nominal Anastasius (de Vit. Pont. in Muratori tom iii. pars i. Gregorius II. p. 154 Gregorius III. p. 149 Zacharias p. 164 Stephani III. p. 165 Paulus p. 172 Stephanus IV. p. 174 Hadrianus p. 179 Leo III. p. 195) Yet I may remark, that the Hist. Anastasius (Hist. Eccles. p. 134 edit. Re.) and the Historia Miscella, (l. xxi. p. 151 in tom i. Script. Ital.) both of the ninth century, translate and approve the Greek text of Theophanes

<sup>e</sup> With some minute difference the most learned critics Lucas Holstenius, Schelstrate, Ciampini, Bianchini, Muratori (Prolegomena ad tom iii. pars i.) are agreed that the Liber Pontificalis was composed and continued by the apostolical librarians and scribes of the eighth and ninth centuries and that the best and smallest part is the work of Anastasius whose name it bears The style is bad though the narrative partial the details are trifling—yet it must be read as a curious and authentic record of the times The epistles of the popes are dispersed in the volumes of Councils of the founder of the papal monarchy "During ten pure and fortunate years," says Gregory to the emperor, "we have tasted the annual comfort of your royal letters, subscribed in purple ink, with your own hand the sacred pledges of your attachment to the orthodox creed of our fathers. How deplorable is the change! how tremendous the scandal! You now accuse the Catholics of idolatry, and, by the accusation, you betray your own impiety and ignorance. To this ignorance we are compelled to adapt the grossness of our style and arguments: the first elements of holy letters are sufficient for your confusion, and were you to enter a grammar-school, and avow yourself the enemy of our worship, the simple and pious children would be provoked to cast their horn-books at your head." After this decent salutation, the pope attempts the usual distinction between the idols of antiquity and the Christian images. The former were the fanciful representations of phantoms or dæmons, at a time when the true God had not manifested his person in any visible likeness. The latter are the genuine forms of Christ, his mother, and his saints, who had approved, by a crowd of miracles, the innocence and merit of this relative worship. He must indeed have trusted to the ignorance of Leo, since he could assert the perpetual use of images, from the apostolic age, and their venerable presence in the six synods of the Catholic Church. A more specious argument is drawn from present possession and recent practice: the harmony of the Christian world supersedes the demand of a general council, and Gregory frankly confesses, that such assemblies can only be useful under the reign of an orthodox prince. To the impudent and inhuman Leo, more guilty than a heretic, he recommends peace, silence, and implicit obedience to his spiritual guides of Constantinople and Rome. The limits of civil and ecclesiastical powers are defined by the pontiff. To the former he appropriates the body, to the latter, the soul: the sword of justice is in the hands of the magistrate; the more formidable weapon of excommunication is intrusted to the clergy, and in the exercise of their divine commission, a zealous son will not spare his offending father: the successor of St. Peter may lawfully chastise the kings of the earth. "You assault us, O tyrant! with a carnal and military hand unarmed and naked, we can only implore the Christ, the prince of the heavenly host, that he will send unto you a devil, for the destruction of your body and the salvation of your soul. You declare, with foolish arrogance, I will despatch my orders to Rome. I will break in pieces the image of St. Peter, and Gregory, like his predecessor Martin, shall be transported in chains, and in exile, to the foot of the imperial throne. Would to God, that I might be permitted to tread in the footsteps of the holy Martin, but may the fate of Constantine serve as a warning to the persecutors of the Church. After his just condemnation by the bishops of Sicily, the tyrant was cut off, in the fulness of his sins, by a domestic servant: the saint is still adored by the nations of Scythia, among whom he ended his banishment and his life. But it is our duty to live for the edification and support of the faithful people, nor are we reduced to risk our safety on the event of a combat. Incapable as you are of defending your Roman subjects, the maritime situation of the city may perhaps expose it to your depredation, but we can remove to the distance of four-and-twenty stadia,<sup>1</sup> to the first fortress of the Lombards, and then—you may pursue the winds. Are you ignorant that the popes are the bond of union, the mediators of peace, between the east and west? The eyes of the nations are fixed on our humility, and they revere, as a God upon earth, the apostle St. Peter, whose image you threaten to destroy.<sup>m</sup> The remote and interior kingdoms of the west present their homage to Christ and his viceroy, and we now prepare to visit one of their most powerful monarchs, who desires to receive from our hands the sacrament of baptism.<sup>n</sup> The barbarians have submitted to the yoke of the gospel, while you alone are deaf to the voice of the Shepherd. These pious barbarians are kindled into rage: they thirst to avenge the persecution of the east. Abandon your rash and fatal enterprise, reflect, tremble, and repent. If you persist, we are innocent of the blood that will be spilt in the contest, may it fall on your own head."

<sup>k</sup> The two epistles of Gregory II. have been preserved in the Acts of the Synod Council (tom vii. p. 63-64) They are written at a date which is variously fixed by Baronius to the year 724, by Muratori (Anali d'Italia tom vi. p. 129) by Pagi and by Pagi in 720. Such is the force of prejudice that some of us have praised the good sense and moderation of these letters.

The first assault of Leo against the Result of Italy, A. D. 728, &c images of Constantinople had been witnessed by a crowd of strangers from Italy and the west, who related with grief and indignation the sacrilege of the emperor. But on the reception of his proscriptive edict, they trembled for their domestic deities, the images of Christ and the Virgin, of the angels, martyrs, and saints, were abolished in all the churches of Italy, and a strong alternative was proposed to the Roman pontiff, the royal favour as the price of his compliance, degradation and exile as the penalty of his disobedience. Neither zeal nor policy allowed him to hesitate, and the haughty strain in which Gregory addressed the emperor displays his confidence in the truth of his doctrine or the powers of resistance. Without depending on prayers or miracles, he boldly armed against the public enemy, and his pastoral letters admonished the Italians of their danger and their duty.<sup>o</sup> At this signal, Ravenna, Venice, and

<sup>1</sup> Εἰκοσι τεσσαρα εἰδία ποταμῶν δ' Ἀρχιερεὺς Πωμὸς εἰς τὴν πόλιν τῆς Ἀνατολῆς, καὶ ὡς τὰς διαφύων τὸν ἀνεμῶν. (Epist. i. l. 621.) This proximity of the Lombards is hard of digestion. Camillo Pellegrini (Dissert. v. de Ducatu Beneventi, in the Script. Ital. tom. v. p. 172, 173) rightly reckons the twenty-fourth stadium not from Rome, but from the limits of the Roman dominion to the first fortress or castrum of the Lombards. I rather believe that Gregory, with the pedantry of the age, employs stadia for miles, without much inquiry into its genuine signification.

<sup>m</sup> τὴν αὐτὴν ἀναφορὰν τῆς ἀνατολῆς ὡς ὅταν ἐπὶ τῶν ἐκείνων ἐχθρῶν

<sup>n</sup> Ἀπὸ τῆς ἐσώτερου διακρίσεως τῶν λεγομένων Σερβῶν. (p. 661.) The pope appears to have imposed on the ignorance of the Greeks: he lived and died in the Lateran, and in his time all the kingdoms of the west had embraced Christianity. May not these unknown Serptines have some reference to the chief of the Saxon Heptarchy, in the king of Wessex who, in the pontificate of Gregory the second, visited Rome for the purpose, not of baptism, but of pilgrimage? (Pagi, A. D. 680, No. 2. A. D. 726 No. 10.)

<sup>o</sup> I shall transcribe the important and decisive passage of the Liber Pontificalis. Resurgens ergo pius vir profanam principis jussionem,

the cities of the exarchate and Pentapolis, adhered to the cause of religion, their military force by sea and land consisted, for the most part, of the natives, and the spirit of patriotism and zeal was transfused into the mercenary strangers. The Italians swore to live and die in the defence of the pope and the holy images, the Roman people were devoted to their father, and even the Lombards were ambitious to share the merit and advantage of this holy war. The most treasonable act, but the most obvious revenge, was the destruction of the statues of Leo himself: the most effectual and pleasing measure of rebellion, was the withholding the tribute of Italy, and depriving him of a power which he had recently abused by the imposition of a new capitation.<sup>1</sup> A form of administration was preserved by the election of magistrates and governors, and so high was the public indignation, that the Italians were prepared to create an orthodox emperor, and to conduct him with a fleet and army to the palace of Constantinople. In that palace, the Roman bishops, the second and third Gregory, were condemned as the authors of the revolt, and every attempt was made, either by fraud or force, to seize their persons, and to strike at their lives. The city was repeatedly visited or assaulted by captains of the guards, and dukes and exarchs of high dignity or secret trust, they landed with foreign troops, they obtained some domestic aid, and the superstition of Naples may blush that her fathers were attached to the cause of heresy. But these clandestine or open attacks were repelled by the courage and vigilance of the Romans, the Greeks were overthrown and massacred, their leaders suffered an ignominious death, and the popes, however inclined to mercy, refused to intercede for these guilty victims. At Ravenna,<sup>2</sup> the several quarters of the city had long exercised a bloody and hereditary feud, in religious controversy they found a new aliment of faction: but the votaries of images were superior in numbers or spirit, and the exarch, who attempted to stem the torrent, lost his life in a popular sedition. To punish this flagitious deed, and restore his dominion in Italy, the emperor sent a fleet and army into the Adriatic gulf. After suffering from the winds and waves much loss and delay, the Greeks made their descent in the neighbourhood of Ravenna: they threatened to depopulate the guilty capital, and to imitate, perhaps to surpass, the example of Justinian the second, who had chastised a former rebellion by the choice and execution of fifty of the principal inhabitants. The women and clergy, in sackcloth and ashes, lay prostrate in prayer, the men were in arms for the defence of their country, the common danger had united the factions, and the event of a battle was preferred to the slow miseries of a siege. In a hard-fought day, as the two armies alternately yielded and advanced, a phantom was seen, a voice was heard, and Ravenna was victorious by the assurance of victory. The strangers retreated to their ships, but the populous sea-coast poured forth a multitude of boats, the waters of the Po were so deeply infected with blood, that during six years, the public prejudice abstained from the fish of the river, and the institution of an annual feast perpetuated the worship of images, and the abhorrence of the Greek tyrant. Amidst the triumph of the catholic arms, the Roman pontiff convened a synod of ninety-three bishops against the heresy of the Iconoclasts. With their consent, he pronounced a general excommunication against all who by word or deed should attack the tradition of the fathers and the images of the saints: in this sentence the emperor was tacitly involved,<sup>3</sup> but the vote of a last and hopeless remonstrance may seem to imply that the anathema was yet suspended over his guilty head. No sooner had they confirmed their own safety, the worship of images, and the freedom of Rome and Italy, than the popes appear to have relaxed of their severity, and to have spared the relics of the Byzantine dominion. Their moderate counsels delayed and prevented the election of a new emperor, and they exhorted the Italians not to separate from the body of the Roman monarchy. The exarch was permitted to reside within the walls of Ravenna, a captive rather than a master, and till the imperial coronation of Charlemagne, the government of Rome and Italy was exercised in the name of the successors of Constantine.<sup>4</sup>

The liberty of Rome, which had been oppressed by the arms and arts of Augustus, was rescued, after seven hundred and fifty years of servitude, from the persecution of Leo the Isaurian. By the Cæsars, the triumphs of the consuls had been annihilated in the decline and fall of the empire, the god Terminus, the sacred boundary, had insensibly receded from the ocean, the Rhine, the Danube, and the Euphrates, and Rome was reduced to her ancient territory from Viterbo to Terracina, and from Narni to the mouth of the Tiber.<sup>5</sup> When the kings were banished, the republic reposed on the firm basis which had been jam contra imperatorem quasi contra hostem se armavit, renuens heretici ejus, scribens utique se cavere christianos, eo quod orta fuisset impietas talis. Igitur primis omnibus Pentapolitenses atque Venetiarum exercitus contra imperatoris jussionem restiterunt, dicentes se nunquam in ejusdem pontificis condescendere necem, sed pro ejus magis defensione viriliter decertare (p. 156).

Republic of Rome

<sup>1</sup> A census or capitation says Anastasius (p. 156.) a most cruel tax, unknown to the Saracens themselves: exclaims the zealous Maimbourg (Hist. des Iconoclastes l. 1.) and Theophanes, (p. 311.) who talks of Pharaoh's unburden, the male children of Israel. This mode of taxation was familiar to the Saracens, and most unluckily for the historian it was imposed a few years afterwards in France by his patron Louis XI.

<sup>2</sup> See the later Pontificalis of Agnellus (In the Scriptores Rerum Italicarum of Muratori tom. ii. pars i.) whose deeper shade of darkness marks the difference between Rome and Ravenna. Yet we are indebted to him for some curious and domestic facts—the exarchs and factions of Ravenna (p. 164.) the revenge of Justinian II (p. 160, 161.) the defeat of the Greeks (p. 170, 171.) &c.

<sup>3</sup> Yet Leo was undoubtedly comprised in the anathema: imaginum sacrarum destructor existerit, sic excommunicatus a corpore D. N. Jesu Christi vel totius ecclesie unitate. The canonists may decide whether the guilt or the name constitutes the excommunication, and the decision is of the last importance to their safety: non accedimus, to the oracle, (Cralin Caus. xxiii. p. 3 c. 1. apud Sparhelm Hist. Ital. p. 112.) homicidas non esse qui excommunicatos levedant.

<sup>4</sup> Compensant lile consilium Pontifex, exorans eo ut non remingeretur (Ana. tas. p. 156.) See the desiderant abbas re et l. de R. J. admodum (p. 157.) The popes style Leo and Constantine heretici or Imperatores et Domini with the strange epithet of Petrus et A. famulus (Mosaic of the Lateran A. D. 784.) represents Christ vestitus the keys to St. Peter and the banner to Constantine V. Mosaic Annali d'Italia l. vi. c. 1. p. 237.

<sup>5</sup> I have traced the Roman d. chs. according to the map, & it is

tounded by their wisdom and virtue. Their perpetual jurisdiction was divided between two annual magistrates: the senate continued to exercise the powers of administration and counsel, and the legislative authority was distributed in the assemblies of the people, by a well-proportioned scale of property and service. Ignorant of the arts of luxury, the primitive Romans had improved the science of government and war: the will of the community was absolute; the rights of individuals were sacred: one hundred and thirty thousand citizens were armed for defence or conquest, and a band of robbers and outlaws was moulded into a nation, deserving of freedom, and ambitious of glory.<sup>a</sup> When the sovereignty of the Greek emperors was extinguished, the ruins of Rome presented the sad image of depopulation and decay: her slavery was a habit, her liberty an accident, the effect of superstition, and the object of her own amazement and terror. The last vestige of the substance, or even the forms, of the constitution, was obliterated from the practice and memory of the Romans, and they were devoid of knowledge, or virtue, again to build the fabric of a commonwealth. Their scanty remnant, the offspring of slaves and strangers, was despicable in the eyes of the victorious barbarians. As often as the Franks or Lombards expressed their most bitter contempt of a foe, they called him a Roman, "and in this name," says the bishop Luitprand, "we include whatever is base, whatever is cowardly, whatever is perfidious, the extremes of avarice and luxury, and every vice that can prostitute the dignity of human nature."<sup>b</sup> By the necessity of their situation, the inhabitants of Rome were cast into the rough model of a republican government: they were compelled to elect some judges in peace, and some leaders in war: the nobles assembled to deliberate, and their resolves could not be executed without the union and consent of the multitude. The style of the Roman senate and people was revived,<sup>c</sup> but the spirit was fled, and their new independence was disgraced by the tumultuous conflict of licentiousness and oppression. The want of laws could only be supplied by the influence of religion, and their foreign and domestic counsels were moderated by the authority of the bishop. His alms, his sermons, his correspondence with the kings and prelates of the west, his recent services, their gratitude, and oath, accustomed the Romans to consider him as the first magistrate or prince of the city. The christian humility of the popes was not offended by the name of Dominus, or Lord, and their face and inscription are still apparent on the most ancient coins.<sup>d</sup> Their temporal dominion is now confirmed by the reverence of a thousand years, and their noblest title is the free choice of a people, whom they had redeemed from slavery.

In the quarrels of ancient Greece, <sup>Rome attacked by the Lombards, A.D. 730-752.</sup> the holy people of Elis enjoyed a perpetual peace, under the protection of Jupiter, and in the exercise of the Olympic games.<sup>e</sup> Happy would it have been for the Romans, if a similar privilege had guarded the patrimony of St. Peter from the calamities of war, if the christians, who visited the holy threshold, would have sheathed their swords in the presence of the apostle and his successor. But this mystic circle could have been traced only by the wand of a legislator and a sage: this pacific system was incompatible with the zeal and ambition of the popes. The Romans were not addicted, like the inhabitants of Elis, to the innocent and placid labours of agriculture, and the barbarians of Italy, though softened by the climate, were far below the Grecian states in the institutions of public and private life. A memorable example of repentance and piety was exhibited by Luitprand, king of the Lombards. In arms, at the gate of the Vatican, the conqueror listened to the voice of Gregory the second,<sup>f</sup> withdrew his troops, resigned his conquests, respectfully visited the church of St. Peter, and, after performing his devotions, offered his sword and dagger, his cuirass and mantle, his silver cross, and his crown of gold, on the tomb of the apostle. But this religious fervour was the illusion, perhaps the artifice, of the moment, the sense of interest is strong and lasting, the love of arms and rapine was congenial to the Lombards, and both the prince and people were irresistibly tempted by the disorders of Italy, the nakedness of Rome, and the unwelcome profession of her new chief. On the first edicts of the emperor, they declared themselves the champions of the holy images, Luitprand invaded the province of Romagna, which had already assumed that distinctive appellation, the catholics of the exarchate yielded without reluctance to his civil and military power, and a foreign enemy was introduced for the first time into the impregnable fortress of Ravenna. That city and fortress were speedily recovered by the active diligence and maritime forces of the Venetians, <sup>a</sup> maps according to the excellent dissertation of Fulher Barrethi (de Chorographia Italiae Medii Aevi sect. ix. p. 216-232). Yet I must needs observe, that Viterbia is of Lombard foundation, (p. 211) and that Terracina was occupied by the Greeks.

<sup>b</sup> On the extent, population &c. of the Roman kingdom the reader may peruse, with pleasure the Discours Preliminaire to the Republique Romaine of M. de Beaufort, (tom. i.) who will not be accused of too much credulity for the early age of Rome.

<sup>c</sup> Quae (Romanae) non Latini, sed collectae Sacerdos Franci Lotarii, Bajani, Suesi, Burgundiones, Iuvini, dedignamur ut inimicos nostris communi, nil aliud continentiumque non Romanis, dicamus: hoc solo id est, et numerum nomine quicquid ignobilitatis quicquid turpitudinis quicquid avaritiae quicquid luxuriae quicquid mendaciarum quicquid vitiorum est comprehendentes. (Luitprand in Legati script. Ital. tom. i. p. 481.) For the suit of Calo or Tully, who must have imposed as a fit penance, the daily perusal of this part of our passage.

<sup>d</sup> Pipino regi Francorum, omnis senatus atque universae populi gentilitas a Deo servata Romana urbis. Codex Carolinus epist. 36 in Script. Ital. tom. ii. pars ii. p. 160. The names of senators and senators were never totally extinct. (Dissert. Chronograph. p. 216, 217.) but in the middle ages they signified little more than nobles, optimates &c. (Durange Gloss. Latin.)

<sup>e</sup> See Muratori's Antiquit. Italiae Medii Aevi tom. ii. Dissertat. xxviii. p. 518. On one of the coins we read Hadrianus Papa, (A.D. 772) on the reverse, Viet DDNN with the word COAON, which the P. Joubert (Science des Medailles, tom. ii. p. 42) explains by COAON nopolis Officii β (secunda).

<sup>f</sup> See West's Dissertation on the Olympic games (Pindar vol. ii. p. 32-36) edition in 12mo) and the judicious reflections of Polibius, (tom. i. lib. i. p. 466. edit. Gronov.)

<sup>g</sup> The speech of Gregory to the Lombard is finely composed by G. G. (de Regno Italiae lib. i. in Opera tom. ii. p. 177) who imitates the licence and the spirit of Sallust or Livy.

and those faithful subjects obeyed the exhortation of Gregory himself, in separating the personal guilt of Leo from the general cause of the Roman empire. The Greeks were less mindful of the service, than the Lombards of the injury the two nations, hostile in their faith, were reconciled in a dangerous and unnatural alliance the king and the exarch marched to the conquest of Spoleto and Rome the storm evaporated without effect, but the policy of Luitprand alarmed Italy with a vexatious alternative of hostility and truce His successor Astolphus declared himself the equal enemy of the emperor and the pope Ravenna was subdued by force or treachery,<sup>a</sup> and this final conquest extinguished the series of the exarchs, who had reigned with a subordinate power since the time of Justinian and the ruin of the Gothic kingdom Rome was summoned to acknowledge the victorious Lombard as her lawful sovereign, and the annual tribute of a piece of gold was fixed as the ransom of each citizen, and the sword of destruction was unsheathed to exact the penalty of her disobedience The Romans hesitated, they entreated, they complained, and the threatening barbarians were checked by arms and negotiations, till the popes had engaged the friendship of an ally and avenger beyond the Alps.

Her deliverance
by Pepin,
A. D. 754

In his distress, the first Gregory had implored the aid of the hero of the age, of Charles Martel, who governed the French monarchy with the humble title of mayor or duke, and who, by his signal victory over the Saracens, had saved his country, and perhaps Europe, from the Mahometan yoke The ambassadors of the pope were received by Charles with decent reverence, but the greatness of his occupations, and the shortness of his life, prevented his interference in the affairs of Italy, except by a friendly and ineffectual mediation His son Pepin, the heir of his power and virtues, assumed the office of champion of the Roman church, and the zeal of the French prince appears to have been prompted by the love of glory and religion But the danger was on the banks of the Tiber, the succour on those of the Seine, and our sympathy is cold to the relation of distant misery Amidst the tears of the city, Stephen the third embraced the generous resolution of visiting in person the courts of Lombardy and France, to deprecate the injustice of his enemy, or to excite the pity and indignation of his friend After soothing the public despair by litanies and orations, he undertook this laborious journey with the ambassadors of the French monarch and the Greek

emperor The king of the Lombards was inexorable, but his threats could not silence the complaints, nor retard the speed, of the Roman pontiff, who traversed the Pennine Alps, reposed in the abbey of St Maurice, and hastened to grasp the right hand of his protector, a hand which was never lifted in vain, either in war or friendship Stephen was entertained as the visible successor of the apostle, at the next assembly, the field of March or of May, his injuries were exposed to a devout and warlike nation, and he repassed the Alps, not as a suppliant, but as a conqueror, at the head of a French army, which was led by the king in person The Lombards, after a weak resistance, obtained an ignominious peace, and swore to restore the possessions, and to respect the sanctity, of the Roman church But no sooner was Astolphus delivered from the presence of the French arms, than he forgot his promise and resented his disgrace Rome was again encompassed by his arms, and Stephen, apprehensive of fatiguing the zeal of his Transalpine allies, enforced his complaint and request by an eloquent letter in the name and person of St Peter himself The apostle assures his adoptive sons, the king, the clergy, and the nobles of France, that, dead in the flesh, he is still alive in the spirit, that they now hear, and must obey, the voice of the founder and guardian of the Roman church that the Virgin, the angels, the saints, and the martyrs, and all the host of heaven, unanimously urge the request, and will confess the obligation, that riches, victory, and paradise, will crown their pious enterprise, and that eternal damnation will be the penalty of their neglect, if they suffer his tomb, his temple, and his people, to fall into the hands of the perfidious Lombards The second expedition of Pepin was not less rapid and fortunate than the first St Peter was satisfied, Rome was again saved, and Astolphus was taught the lessons of justice and sincerity by the scourge of a foreign master After this double chastisement, the Lombards languished about twenty years in a state of languor and decay But their minds were not yet humbled to their condition, and instead of affecting the pacific virtues of the feeble, they peevishly harassed the Romans with a repetition of claims, evasions, and inroads, which they undertook without reflection and terminated without glory On either side, their expiring monarchy was pressed by the zeal and prudence of pope Adrian the first, the genius, the fortune, and greatness of Charlemagne the son of Pepin, these heroes of the church and state were united in public and domestic friendship, and, while they

<sup>a</sup> The Venetian historians, John Sagorninus (Chron. Venet. p. 13) and the doge Andrew Dandolo (Scriptores Rer. Ital. tom. xii. p. 135) have preserved this epistle of Gregory The loss and recovery of Ravenna are mentioned by Paulus Diaconus (de Gest. Langobard. l. vi. c. 49-54 in Script. Ital. tom. i. pars. i. p. 365-364) but our chronologists, Pagi, Muratori, &c. cannot ascertain the date or circumstances

<sup>b</sup> The origin will depend on the various readings of the MSS. of Anastasius—deceperat, or deceperet (Script. Ital. tom. iii. pars. i. p. 16)

<sup>c</sup> The Colecta Carolinus is a collection of the epistles of the popes to Charles Martel, (whom they style S. Regularis) Pepin, and Charle-

magne, as far as the year 791 when it was formed by the list of these princes The original and authentic MS. still in the library of the Vatican is now in the imperial library of Vienna and has been published by La Beaume and Muratori (Script. Rerum Ital. tom. iii. pars. ii. p. 76-78)

<sup>d</sup> See this most extraordinary letter in the Colecta Carolinus epist. iii. p. 92 The enemies of the popes have charged it with heresy and blasphemy yet they surely must be perverted rather than deceived This introduction of the dead or of living is a mistake in the original orators, in which it is executed on this occasion in the style of the age

trampled on the prostrate, they varnished their proceedings with the fairest colours of equity and moderation.<sup>6</sup> The passes of the Alps, and the walls of Pavia, were the only defence of the Lombards, the former were surprised, the latter were invested, by the son of Pepin, and after a blockade of two years, Desiderius, the last of their native princes, surrendered his sceptre and his capital. Under the dominion of a foreign king, but in the possession of their national laws, the Lombards became the brethren rather than the subjects of the Franks, who derived their blood, and manners, and language, from the same Germanic origin.<sup>h</sup>

The mutual obligations of the popes and the Carolingian family, form the important link of ancient and modern, of civil and ecclesiastical, history. In the conquest of Italy, the champions of the Roman church obtained a favourable occasion, a specious title, the wishes of the people, the prayers and intrigues of the clergy. But the most essential gifts of the popes to the Carolingian race were the dignities of king of France,<sup>i</sup> and of patrician of Rome. I. Under the sacerdotal monarchy of St Peter, the nations began to resume the practice of seeking, on the banks of the Tiber, their kings, their laws, and the oracles of their fate. The Franks were perplexed between the name and substance of their government. All the powers of royalty were exercised by Pepin, mayor of the palace, and nothing, except the regal title, was wanting to his ambition. His enemies were crushed by his valour, his friends were multiplied by his liberality, his father had been the saviour of Christendom, and the claims of personal merit were repeated and ennobled in a descent of four generations. The name and image of royalty was still preserved in the last descendant of Clovis, the feeble Childeric, but his obsolete right could only be used as an instrument of sedition, the nation was desirous of restoring the simplicity of the constitution, and Pepin, a subject and a prince, was ambitious to ascertain his own rank and the fortune of his family. The mayor and the nobles were bound, by an oath of fidelity, to the royal phantom, the blood of Clovis was pure and sacred in their eyes, and their common ambassadors addressed the Roman pontiff, to dispel their scruples, or to absolve their promise. The interest of pope Zachary, the successor of the two Gregories, prompted him to decide, and to decide in their favour. He pronounced that the nation might lawfully unite, in the same person, the title and authority of king, and that the unfortunate Childeric, a victim of the public safety, should be degraded, shaved, and confined in a monastery for the remainder of his days. An answer so agreeable to their wishes was accepted by the Franks, as the opinion of a casuist, the sentence of a judge, or the oracle of a prophet. The Merovingian race disappeared from the earth, and Pepin was exalted on a buckler by the suffrage of a free people, accustomed to obey his laws, and to march under his standard. His coronation was twice performed, with the sanction of the popes, by their most faithful servant St Boniface, the apostle of Germany, and by the grateful hands of Stephen the third, who, in the monastery of St Denys, placed the diadem on the head of his benefactor. The royal unction of the kings of Israel was dexterously applied,<sup>k</sup> the successor of St Peter assumed the character of a divine ambassador. A German chieftain was transformed into the Lord's anointed, and this Jewish rite has been diffused and maintained by the superstition and vanity of modern Europe. The Franks were absolved from their ancient oath, but a dire anathema was thundered against them and their posterity, if they should dare to renew the same freedom of choice, or to elect a king, except in the holy and meritorious race of the Carolingian princes. Without apprehending the future danger, these princes gloried in their present security. The secretary of Charlemagne affirms, that the French sceptre was transferred by the authority of the popes,<sup>l</sup> and, in their boldest enterprises, they insist, with confidence, on this signal and successful act of temporal jurisdiction.

II. In the change of manners and language, the patricians of Rome<sup>m</sup> were far removed from the senate of Romulus, or the palace of Constantine, from the free nobles of the republic, or the fictitious parents of the emperor. After the recovery of Italy and Africa by the arms of Justinian, the importance and danger of those remote provinces required the presence of a supreme magistrate, he was indifferently styled the exarch or the patrician, and these governors of Ravenna, who fill their place in the chronology of princes, extended their jurisdiction over the Roman city. Since the revolt of Italy and the loss of the exarchate, the distress of the Romans had excited

<sup>6</sup> Except in the divorce of the daughter of Desiderius whom Charlemagne repudiated sine aliquo crimine. Pope Stephen IV. had most successfully opposed the alliance of a noble Frank—cum perfidis: horrida, nec dicenda: fulgentissima natio. Longobardorum—to whom he imputes the first stain of leprosy (Cod Carolin. epist. 45 p. 178 179.) Another reason against the marriage was the existence of a first wife (Muratori Annali d'Italia tom. vi. p. 232 233 236 237.) But Charlemagne united himself in the freedom of polygamy or concubinage.

<sup>h</sup> See the Annali d'Italia of Muratori tom. vi. and the three first Dissertations of his Antiquitates Italice Medii ævi, tom. i. Besides the common historians three French critics, Launoj (Opera tom. i. pars ii. lib. viii. epist. 9 p. 477 487) Pagi (Critica A. D. 51 No. 1 & A. D. 732 No. 1—10) and Natalis Alexander (Hist. Novæ Testamenti dissertat. ii. p. 67—107) have treated this subject of the deposition of Childeric with levity and attention but with a view to save the independence of the crown. Yet they are hard pressed by the texts which they produce of Lombard. Three

<sup>k</sup> Not absolutely for the first time. On a less conspicuous theatre it had been used, in the sixth and seventh centuries, by the provincial bishops of Britain and Spain. The royal unction of Constantinople was borrowed from the Latins in the last age of the empire. Cosmas the Monachus mentions that of Charlemagne as a foreign Jewish incomprehensible ceremony. See Selden's Titles of Honour in his Works, vol. iii. part. i. p. 234—249.

<sup>l</sup> See E. mirail, in Vit. Caroli Magni c. i. p. 9 & c. li. p. 24. Childeric was deposed—jussu the Carolingians were established—quodlibet, Pontifex Romanus Launoj, &c. pretend that these strong words are susceptible of a very soft interpretation. Be it so, yet Childeric under took the world the crown and the Latin language.

<sup>m</sup> For the title and powers of patrician of Rome see Ducacæ (Gloss. Latin. tom. v. p. 110—111) Pagi (Critica A. D. 749 No. 6—11) Muratori (Annali d'Italia tom. vi. p. 308—329) and St Mart (Abrégé Chronologique d'Italie tom. i. p. 379—382.) Of these the Franciscan Pagi is the most disposed to make the patrician a lieutenant of the church, rather than of the empire.

some sacrifice of their independence. Yet, even in this act, they exercised the right of disposing of themselves, and the decrees of the senate and people successively invested Charles Martel and his posterity with the honours of patrician of Rome. The leaders of a powerful nation would have disdained a servile title and subordinate office, but the reign of the Greek emperors was suspended, and, in the vacancy of the empire, they derived a more glorious commission from the pope and the republic. The Roman ambassadors presented these patricians with the keys of the shrine of St. Peter, as a pledge and symbol of sovereignty, with a holy banner, which it was their right and duty to unfurl in the defence of the church and city. In the time of Charles Martel and of Pepin, the interposition of the Lombard kingdom covered the freedom, while it threatened the safety, of Rome, and the patriciate represented only the title, the service, the alliance, of these distant protectors. The power and policy of Charlemagne annihilated an enemy, and imposed a master. In his first visit to the capital, he was received with all the honours which had formerly been paid to the exarch, the representative of the emperor, and these honours obtained some new decorations from the joy and gratitude of pope Adrian the first. No sooner was he informed of the sudden approach of the monarch, than he despatched the magistrates and nobles of Rome to meet him, with the banner, about thirty miles from the city. At the distance of one mile, the Flaminian way was lined with the schools, or national communities, of Greeks, Lombards, Saxons, &c. the Roman youth were under arms, and the children of a more tender age, with palms and olive branches in their hands, chanted the praises of their great deliverer. At the aspect of the holy crosses, and ensigns of the saints, he dismounted from his horse, led the procession of the nobles to the Vatican, and, as he ascended the stairs, devoutly kissed each step of the threshold of the apostles. In the portico, Adrian expected him at the head of his clergy. They embraced, as friends and equals, but in their march to the altar, the king or patrician assumed the right hand of the pope. Nor was the Frank content with these vain and empty demonstrations of respect. In the twenty-six years that elapsed between the conquest of Lombardy and his imperial coronation, Rome, which had been delivered by the sword, was subject, as his own, to the sceptre of Charlemagne. The people swore allegiance to his person and family in his name money was coined, and justice was administered, and the election of the popes was examined and confirmed by his authority. Except an original and self-inherent claim of sovereignty, there was not any prerogative remaining, which the title of emperor could add to the patrician of Rome.

The gratitude of the Carolingians was adequate to these obligations, and their names are consecrated, as the saviours and benefactors of the Roman church. Her ancient patrimony of farms and houses was transformed by their bounty into the temporal dominion of cities and provinces, and the donation of the exarchate was the first-fruits of the conquests of Pepin. Astolphus with a sigh relinquished his prey, the keys and the hostages of the principal cities were delivered to the French ambassador, and, in his master's name, he presented them before the tomb of St. Peter. The ample measure of the exarchate might comprise all the provinces of Italy which had obeyed the emperor and his vicergerent, but its strict and proper limits were included in the territories of Ravenna, Bologna, and Ferrara. Its inseparable dependency was the Pentapolis, which stretched along the Adriatic from Rimini to Ancona, and advanced into the midland country as far as the ridges of the Apennine. In this transaction, the ambition and avarice of the popes had been severely condemned. Perhaps the humility of a christian priest should have rejected an earthly kingdom, which it was not easy for him to govern without renouncing the virtues of his profession. Perhaps a faithful subject, or even a generous enemy, would have been less impatient to divide the spoils of the barbarian, and if the emperor had intrusted Stephen to solicit in his name the restitution of the exarchate, I will not absolve the pope from the reproach of treachery and falsehood. But in the rigid interpretation of the laws, every one may accept, without injury, whatever his benefactor can bestow without injustice. The Greek emperor had abdicated, or forfeited, his right to the exarchate, and the sword of Astolphus was broken by the stronger sword of the Carolingian. It was not in the cause of the Iconoclast that Pepin had exposed his person and army in a double expedition beyond the Alps. He possessed, and might lawfully alienate, his conquests, and to the importunities of the Greeks he piously replied, that no human consideration should tempt him to resume the gift which he had conferred on the Roman pontiff for the remission of his sins and the salvation of his soul. The splendid donation was granted in supreme and absolute dominion, and the world beheld for the first time a christian bishop invested with the pren The papal advocates can soften the symbolic meaning of the banner and the keys, but the style of ad regnum dominum et directum (Codex Carolin. epist. 1 tom. iii. pars ii. p. 61) seems to allow of no palliation or escape. In the MS. of the Vienna library they read instead of regnum regnum prayer or request (see D'ange) and the royalty of Charles Martel is ascribed to this important ceremony (Catalini, in his Critical Prefaces Annali d'Italia tom. xvi. p. 62-63). In the authentic narrative of this receipt, the Liber Pontificalis observes—Christum illi ejus sanctitas dignis venerabilibus crucis et signis, acut mox est ex archiepiscopi patricium et scipit dum, cum cum inge ita hunc suscepit (tom. iii. pars i. p. 185). p. Paulus Diaconus, who wrote before the empire of Charlemagne, describes Rome as his capital city—vestra civitate ad Prosperi (Festum) suis adhibet scriptis (de Metens. Letter. c. 1. p. 101). Some Carolingian medals struck at Rome have engaged Le Blanc to write an elaborate though partial dissertation on their authenticity at Rome both as patricians and emperors (Amsterdam 1792 in 4to). q. Musheim (Institution. Hist. Eccles. p. 241) weighs this coin with fair and deliberate preference. The coin is not a true copy, but produced by the Liber Pontificalis (see esp. 171) and the Codex Carolin. it supports this ample gift. It is a coin of pure silver, and the letter is the same as the other, since it has been preserved not in the public but in the imperial library. r. Between the exarchate claim and the more common interest and prejudice from which even Marini (Antiqu. del. tom. i. p. 63) is not exempt, I have been guided in this history of the exarchate and Pentapolis by the Dissertation on the Geography of Italy by M. de la Harpe (p. 100-101).

rogatives of a temporal prince, the choice of magistrates, the exercise of justice, the imposition of taxes, and the wealth of the palace of Ravenna. In the dissolution of the Lombard kingdom, the inhabitants of the duchy of Spoleto<sup>a</sup> sought a refuge from the storm, shaved their heads after the Roman fashion, declared themselves the servants and subjects of St Peter, and completed, by this voluntary surrender, the present circle of the ecclesiastical state. That mysterious circle was enlarged to an indefinite extent, by the verbal or written donation of Charlemagne,<sup>b</sup> who, in the first transports of his victory, despoiled himself and the Greek emperor of the cities and islands which had formerly been annexed to the exarchate. But, in the cooler moments of absence and reflection, he viewed, with an eye of jealousy and envy, the recent greatness of his ecclesiastical ally. The execution of his own and his father's promises was respectfully eluded. The king of the Franks and Lombards asserted the inalienable rights of the empire, and, in his life and death, Ravenna,<sup>c</sup> as well as Rome, was numbered in the list of his metropolitan cities. The sovereignty of the exarchate melted away in the hands of the popes: they found in the archbishops of Ravenna a dangerous and domestic rival; the nobles and people disdained the yoke of a priest, and, in the disorders of the times, they could only retain the memory of an ancient claim, which, in a more prosperous age, they have revived and realized.

Forgery of the donation of Constantine

Fraud is the resource of weakness and cunning, and the strong though ignorant, barbarian, was often entangled in the net of sacerdotal policy. The Vatican and Lateran were an arsenal and manufacture, which, according to the occasion, have produced or concealed a various collection of false or genuine, of corrupt or suspicious, acts, as they tended to promote the interest of the Roman church. Before the end of the eighth century, some apostolical scribe, perhaps the notorious Isidore, composed the decretals, and the donation of Constantine, the two magic pillars of the spiritual and temporal monarchy of the popes. This memorable donation was introduced to the world by an epistle of Adrian the first, who exhorts Charlemagne to imitate the liberality, and revive the name, of the great Constantine.<sup>d</sup> According to the legend, the first of the christian emperors was healed of the leprosy, and purified in the waters of baptism, by St Silvester, the Roman bishop, and never was physician more gloriously recompensed. His royal proselyte withdrew from the seat and patrimony of St Peter, declared his resolution of founding a new capital in the east, and resigned to the popes the free and perpetual sovereignty of Rome, Italy, and the provinces of the west.<sup>e</sup> This fiction was productive of the most beneficial effects. The Greek princes were convicted of the guilt of usurpation, and the revolt of Gregory was the claim of his lawful inheritance. The popes were delivered from their debt of gratitude, and the nominal gifts of the Carolingians were no more than the just and irrevocable restitution of a scanty portion of the ecclesiastical state. The sovereignty of Rome no longer depended on the choice of a sickle people, and the successors of St Peter and Constantine were invested with the purple and prerogatives of the Cæsars. So deep was the ignorance and credulity of the times, that the most absurd of fables was received, with equal reverence, in Greece and in France, and is still enrolled among the decrees of the canon law.<sup>f</sup> The emperors, and the Romans, were incapable of discerning a forgery that subverted their rights and freedom, and the only opposition proceeded from a Sabine monastery, which, in the beginning of the twelfth century, disputed the truth and validity of the donation of Constantine.<sup>g</sup> In the revival of letters and liberty this fictitious deed was transpierced by the pen of Laurentius Valla, the pen of an eloquent critic and a Roman patriot.<sup>h</sup> His contemporaries of the fifteenth century were astonished at his sacrilegious boldness, yet such is the silent and irresistible progress of reason, that before the end of the next age, the fable was rejected by the contempt of historians.<sup>i</sup>

Spoletiini deprecari sunt, ut eos in scriptis B. Petri recipere et more Romanorum insinuari faceret (Anastasius, p. 183.) Yet it may be a question whether they gave their own persons or their country.

<sup>a</sup> The policy and donations of Charlemagne are carefully examined by St Marc (Abregé, tom. I. p. 390—408) who has well studied the Codex Carolinus. I believe, with him that they were only verbal. The most ancient act of donation that pretends to be extant, is that of the emperor Lewis the Pious. (Sicconius de Regno Ital. l. i. Opera tom. ii. p. 267—270.) Its authenticity or at least its integrity are much questioned (Pagn. A. D. 817, no. 7, &c Muratori Annali tom. vi. p. 45) &c Dissertat. Chorographica p. 33. 31) but I see no reasonable objection to these princes so freely disposing of what was not their own.

<sup>b</sup> Charlemagne solicited and obtained from the proprietor, Adrian I. the mosaic of the palace of Ravenna, for the decoration of Aix la Chapelle (Cod. Carolin. epist. 67. p. 223.)

<sup>c</sup> The popes often complain of the usurpations of Leo of Ravenna (Codex Carolin. epist. 81—83. p. 200—203.) Si corpus St. Andreæ fratris primarii St. Petri hic humis est, nequaquam nos Romanis pontificibus neque obsequant (Agnellus Liber Pontificalis in Scriptores Rerum Ital. tom. ii. pars i. p. 107.)

<sup>d</sup> Iustinus Constantinus maxime per ejus hystoriam S. R. Ecclesie elevata et exaltata est, et potestatem in his Imperiis partim largiri dixit. Hist. eccl. que erit novus Constantinus his temporibus, &c (Codex Carolin. epist. 4.) in tom. II. pars ii. p. 195.) Pagn. (Critica A. D. 721. no. 16) ascribes it to an impostor of the eighth century. He is crowned the name of St. Isidore; his humble title of Pectorator was ignorantly but aptly turned into Creator: his merchandise was a few sheets of paper were sold for much wealth and power.

<sup>e</sup> Fabricius (Biblot. Græc. tom. xi. p. 4—7) has enumerated the several editions of this Act, in Greek and Latin. The copy which Laurentius Valla recites and refutes, appears to be taken either from the spurious Acts of St. Silvester or from Gratian's Decree, to which according to him and others, it has been surreptitiously lacked.

<sup>f</sup> In the year 1050 it was believed (was it believed?) by pope Leo IX., Cardinal Peter Damiani, &c Muratori places (Annali d'Italia, tom. ix. p. 23. 24) the fictitious donations of Lewis the Pious, the Otines, &c de Donatione Constantini. See a Dissertation of Natalis Alexander seculum ix. diss. 25. p. 335—350.

<sup>g</sup> See a large account of the controversy (A. D. 1105) which arose from a private law suit, in the Chronicon Farfense, (Script. Rerum Italianarum tom. i. pars ii. p. 637, &c.) a copious extract from the archives of that Benedictine abbey. They were formerly accessible to curious foreigners (Le Blanc and Mabillon,) and would have enriched the first volume of the Historia Monasterii Italici of Quirini. But they are now imprisoned (Muratori, Scriptores II. tom. ii. pars ii. p. 267) by the timid policy of the court of Rome; and the future cardinal yielded to the voice of authority and the whisper of ambition (Quirini, Comment. pars ii. p. 123—136.)

<sup>h</sup> I have read in the collection of Schardius, (de Polestata Imperialis Ecclesiæ p. 731—780) this animated discourse which was composed by the author A. D. 1440 six years after the flight of pope Eugenius IV. It is a most vehement party pamphlet. Valla justifies and animates the revolt of the Romans and would even approve the use of a dagger against their sacerdotal tyrant. Such a crime might expect the persecution of the clergy; yet he made his peace, and is buried in the Lateran (Bayle Dictionnaire Critique, VALLA. Volumes de Historiens Latins, p. 540.)

<sup>i</sup> See Guicciardini, a servant of the popes, in that long and valuable and poets,<sup>c</sup> and the tacit or modest censure of the advocates of the Roman church.<sup>f</sup> The popes themselves have indulged a smile at the credulity of the vulgar,<sup>g</sup> but a false and obsolete title still sanctifies their reign, and, by the same fortune which has attended the decretals and the Sibylline oracles, the edifice has subsisted after the foundations have been undermined.

Restoration of images in the east by the empress Irene,
A. D. 780, &c

While the popes established in Italy their freedom and dominion, the images, the first cause of their revolt, were restored in the eastern empire.<sup>h</sup> Under the reign of Constantine the fifth, the union of civil and ecclesiastical power had overthrown the tree, without extirpating the root, of superstition. The idols, for such they were now held, were secretly cherished by the order and the sex most prone to devotion, and the fond alliance of the monks and females obtained a final victory over the reason and authority of man. Leo the fourth maintained with less rigour the religion of his father and grandfather, but his wife, the fair and ambitious Irene, had imbibed the zeal of the Athenians, the heirs of the idolatry, rather than the philosophy, of their ancestors. During the life of her husband, these sentiments were inflamed by danger and dissimulation, and she could only labour to protect and promote some favourite monks whom she drew from their caverns, and seated on the metropolitan thrones of the east. But as soon as she reigned in her own name and that of her son, Irene more seriously undertook the ruin of the Iconoclasts, and the first step of her future persecution was a general edict for liberty of conscience. In the restoration of the monks, a thousand images were exposed to the public veneration, a thousand legends were invented of their sufferings and miracles. By the opportunities of death or removal, the episcopal seats were judiciously filled, the most eager competitors for earthly or celestial favour anticipated and flattered the judgment of their sovereign, and the promotion of her secretary Tarasius gave Irene the patriarch of Constantinople, and the command of the oriental church. But the decrees of a general council could only be repealed by a similar assembly: the Iconoclasts whom she convened, were bold in possession, and averse to debate, and the feeble voice of the bishops was re-echoed by the more formidable clamour of the soldiers and people of Constantinople. The delay and intrigues of a year, the separation of the disaffected troops, and the choice of Nice for a second orthodox synod, removed these obstacles, and the episcopal conscience was again, after the Greek fashion, in the hands of the prince. No more than eighteen days were allowed for the consummation of this important work. The Iconoclasts appeared, not as judges, but as criminals or penitents, the scene was decorated by the legates of pope Adrian and the eastern patriarch,<sup>i</sup> the decrees were framed by the president Tarasius, and ratified by the acclamations and subscriptions of three hundred and fifty bishops. They unanimously pronounced, that the worship of images is agreeable to Scripture and reason, to the fathers and councils of the church: but they hesitate whether that worship be relative or direct, whether the Godhead, and the figure of Christ, be entitled to the same mode of adoration. Of this second Nicene council, the acts are still extant, a curious monument of superstition and ignorance, of falsehood and folly. I shall only notice the judgment of the bishops, on the comparative merit of image worship and morality. A monk had concluded a truce with the demon of fornication, on condition of interrupting his daily prayers to a picture that hung in his cell. His scruples prompted him to consult the abbot: "Rather than abstain from adoring Christ and his mother in their holy images, it would be better for you," replied the casuist, "to enter every brothel, and visit every prostitute, in the city."<sup>j</sup>

For the honour of orthodoxy, at least the orthodoxy of the Roman church, it is somewhat unfortunate, that the two princes who convened the two councils of Nice are both stained with the blood of their sons. The second of these assemblies was approved and rigorously executed by the despotism of Irene, and she refused her adversaries the toleration which at first she had granted to her friends. During the five succeeding reigns, a period of thirty-eight years, the contest was maintained, with unabated rage and various success, between the worshippers and the breakers of the

VIIIth General council, III of Nice,
A. D. 787
Sept. 24—
Oct. 23

Final establishment of images
by the empress Theodora,
A. D. 842

discrepancy, which has resumed its place in the last edition, correctly published from the author's MS. and printed in four volumes in quarto under the name of Frutkin, 1775. (Historia d'Italia, tom. i. p. 380—395.)
<sup>c</sup> The Palatinus Astolphus found it in the moon, among the things that were lost upon earth. (Orlando Furioso, xxxix. 80.)

Di vari fiori al mi grand monte prava, Ch'ebbe già l'uno odore o puzza forte
Questi era il nono (se però dir lece)
Che Constantino al buon Silvestro fece.

Yet this incomparable poem has been approved by a bull of Leo X. See Baronius A. D. 324 No. 11—123. A. D. 1191, No. 51 &c. The cardinal wishes to suppose that Rome was offered by Constantine, and refused by Silvestre. The act of donation he considers, strangely enough, as a surgery of the Greeks.

<sup>g</sup> Baronius non dei guerres contre encore en a li trop dit et lon voutoit aus nui, (Cardinal de Perron) qui l'impechoit censurer cette partie de son histoire. J'en devisai un jour avec le Pape, et il ne me repoutint autre chose: "che valte!" Canonici la tengono: "il le diuon en ruit" (Perronin, p. 77.)

<sup>h</sup> The remaining history of images from Irene to Theodora is not fitted for the Catholics by Baronius and Pagi, (A. D. 780—810) N. tale Alexander (Hist. N. T. Decembris viii. Iacoplia adversus Hæreticos, p. 115—121) and Dupin (Biblioth. Ecclæ, tom. vi. p. 13—141)

for the protestants by Spanheim (Hist. Imag. p. 207—622) Basnage, (Hist. de l'Eglise, tom. i. p. 537—572, tom. ii. p. 172—1345), and Newburn (Institut. Hist. Ecclæ, sec. viii. c. ix.) The protestants except Dupin are influenced by the fury and superstition of the monks, and even Le Beau (Hist. du Bas Empire) a gentle man and a scholar, is infected by the odious contagion.

<sup>i</sup> See the Acts, in Greek and Latin, of the second Council of Nice with a number of relative pieces in the seventh volume of the Councils, p. 610—1660. A faithful version with some critical notes would prove to be in different readers a cheerful smile.

<sup>j</sup> The pope's legates were casual messengers sent for the occasion, special commissioners, and who were stationed on their return. Some scandalous monks were persuaded by the Catholics to represent the oriental patriarchs. The emperor's anecdote is revealed by Theodoret's Synodicon (sep. et. 38 in 8mo) and Olyp. tom. v. p. 1319. See of the emperor's Iconoclasts of the age.

<sup>k</sup> Συμμετρεῖς δὲ οὐ μὴ ἀταλάειν ἐν τοῖς ὁμοῖς τῶν ἁγίων εἰκόλεσσιν, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν αὐτοῖς τὸ θεῖον, ἀλλὰ τὸ εἰκονοματικόν. Τῶν οὖν εἰκόλεσσιν ἡ ψυχὴ ἐστὶν ἀνοήτου, οὐκ ἔστιν ἡ ψυχὴ ὡς ὁ θεός, ἀλλὰ ὡς ὁ ἄνθρωπος. ἐκ τούτου δὲ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐκείνους ἀποδοῦναι τὴν τιμὴν τοῦ θεοῦ, ἀλλὰ τὴν τοῦ ἀνθρώπου. (Act. ii. p. 201. Act. v. p. 1031.)

images, but I am not inclined to pursue with minute diligence the repetition of the same events. Nicephorus allowed a general liberty of speech and practice, and the only virtue of his reign is accused by the monks as the cause of his temporal and eternal perdition. Superstition and weakness formed the character of Michael the first, but the saints and images were incapable of supporting their vatory on the throne. In the purple, Leo the fifth asserted the name and religion of an Armenian, and the idols, with their seditious adherents, were condemned to a second exile. Their applause would have sanctified the murder of an impious tyrant, but his assassin and successor, the second Michael, was tainted from his birth with the Phrygian heresies. He attempted to mediate between the contending parties, and the intractable spirit of the catholics insensibly cast him into the opposite scale. His moderation was guarded by timidity, but his son Theophilus, alike ignorant of fear and pity, was the last and most cruel of the Iconoclasts. The enthusiasm of the times ran strongly against them, and the emperors, who stemmed the torrent, were exasperated and punished by the public hatred. After the death of Theophilus, the final victory of the images was achieved by a second female, his widow Theodora, whom he left the guardian of the empire. Her measures were bold and decisive. The fiction of a tardy repentance absolved the fame and the soul of her deceased husband. The sentence of the Iconoclast patriarch was commuted from the loss of his eyes to a whipping of two hundred lashes, the bishops trembled, the monks shouted, and the festival of orthodoxy preserves the annual memory of the triumph of the images. A single question yet remained, whether they are endowed with any proper and inherent sanctity. It was agitated by the Greeks of the eleventh century,<sup>m</sup> and as this opinion has the strongest recommendation of absurdity, I am surprised that it was not more explicitly decided in the affirmative. In the west pope Adrian the first accepted and announced the decrees of the Nicene assembly which is now revered by the catholics as the seventh in rank of the general councils. Rome and Italy were docile to the voice of their father, but the greatest part of the Latin christians were far behind in the race of superstition. The churches of France, Germany, England, and Spain, steered a middle course between the adoration and the destruction of images, which they admitted into their temples, not as objects of worship, but as lively and useful memorials of faith and history. An angry book of controversy was composed and published in the name of Charlemagne,<sup>n</sup> under his authority a synod of three hundred bishops was assembled at Frankfort,<sup>o</sup> they blamed the fury of the Iconoclasts, but they pronounced a more severe censure against the superstition of the Greeks, and the decrees of their pretended council, which was long despised by the barbarians of the west.<sup>p</sup> Among them the worship of images advanced with silent and insensible progress, but a large atonement is made for their hesitation and delay, by the gross idolatry of the ages which precede the reformation, and of the countries, both in Europe and America, which are still immersed in the gloom of superstition.

It was after the Nicene synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the popes consummated the separation of Rome and Italy, by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. They were compelled to choose between the rival nations: religion was not the sole motive of their choice, and while they dissembled the failings of their friends, they beheld, with reluctance and suspicion, the catholic virtues of their foes. The difference of language and manners had perpetuated the enmity of the two capitals, and they were alienated from each other by the hostile opposition of seventy years. In that schism the Romans had tasted of freedom, and the popes of sovereignty: their submission would have exposed them to the revenge of a jealous tyrant, and the revolution of Italy had betrayed the impotence, as well as the tyranny, of the Byzantine court. The Greek emperors had restored the images, but they had not restored the Calabrian estates<sup>q</sup> and the Illyrian diocese,<sup>r</sup> which the Iconoclasts had torn away from the successors of St. Peter, and pope Adrian threatens them with a sentence of excommunication unless they speedily abjure this practical heresy.<sup>s</sup> The Greeks were now orthodox, but their religion

Reluctance of the Franks, and of Charlemagne, A. D. 794, &c.

Final separation of the popes from the Eastern empire, A. D. 774-800

<sup>m</sup> See an account of this controversy in the Alexias of Anna Comnena, (l. v. p. 129) and Mosheim, (Institut. Hist. Eccl. p. 371, 372.)

<sup>n</sup> The Libri Carolini (Spinheim, p. 443-529) composed in the palace or winter quarters of Charlemagne, at Worms, A. D. 790 and sent by Eugebert to pope Hadrian I. who answered them by a grandis et verborum epistola (Concil. tom. viii. p. 15-3.) The Carolines propose 120 objections against the Nicene synod and such words as these are the flowers of their rhetoric—dementiam, prava, contumacia, obsequium, errorum, argumenta insensu et absurdissima, derisive digna nanias, &c. &c.

<sup>o</sup> The assemblies of Charlemagne were political as well as ecclesiastical, and the three hundred members (Nal. Alexander, see viii. p. 53) who sat and voted at Frankfort must include not only the bishops, but the abbots, and even the principal laymen.

<sup>p</sup> Qui supra sanctissimos patres nostros (episcopos et sacerdotes) omni modis servilium et aliorumque imaginum reventes contempserunt atque contumaciter contemniverunt (Concil. tom. ix. p. 101 Canon ii. Frankford.) A polemic must be hard hearted indeed who does not pity the efforts of Barinus, Pagi, Alexander, Maimbourg, &c. to elude this unlucky sentence.

<sup>q</sup> Theophanes (p. 743) specifies those of Sicily and Calabria which yielded an annual rent of three talents and a half of gold, (perhaps 7000/

sterling.) Liutprand more pompously enumerates the patrimones of the Roman church in Greece, Judea, Persia, Mesopotamia, Babylonia, Egypt, and Libya which were delivered by the injustice of the Greek emperor (Legat. ad Nicephorum, in Script. Rerum Italicarum, tom. ii. pars i. p. 481.)

<sup>r</sup> The great diocese of the eastern Illyriem with Apulia, Calabria and Sicily, (Thomassin Discipline de l'Eglise tom. i. p. 145) by the confession of the Greeks: the patriarch of Constantinople had detached from Rome the metropolitanates of Thessalonica, Athens, Corinth, Nicopolis, and Patrae (Iue Holsten Geograph. Sacra p. 22) and his spiritual conquests extended to Naples and Amalfi (Grumone, Storia Civile di Napoli, tom. i. p. 517-224 Pagi, A. D. 730 No. 11.)

<sup>s</sup> In line ostenditur, quia ex uno capitulo ab errore reversus in alium duobus in eodem (was it the same?) permanens errore de diocesi S. R. I. seu de patrimonis sterrum thesauris commonebris, ut si ea restituere voluerit heretium cum pro iniquis modi errore perseverantia, &c. (Epist. Hadrian. Pape ad Carolum Magnum in Concil. tom. viii. p. 1094) to which he adds a reason, most directly opposite to his conduct, that he preferred the salvation of souls and rule of faith to the goods of this transitory world.

might be tainted by the breath of the reigning monarch the Franks were now contumacious, but a discerning eye might discern their approaching conversion from the use, to the adoration, of images. The name of Charlemagne was stained by the polemic acrimony of his scribes, but the conqueror himself conformed, with the temper of a statesman, to the various practice of France and Italy. In his four pilgrimages or visits to the Vatican, he embraced the popes in the communion of friendship and piety, knelt before the tomb, and consequently before the image, of the apostle, and joined, without scruple, in all the prayers and processions of the Roman liturgy. Would prudence or gratitude allow the pontiffs to renounce their benefactor? Had they a right to alienate his gift of the exarchate? Had they power to abolish his government of Rome? The title of patrician was below the merit and greatness of Charlemagne, and it was only by reviving the western empire that they could pay their obligations or secure their establishment. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks from the debasement of a provincial town, the majesty of Rome would be restored, the Latin christians would be united, under a supreme head, in their ancient metropolis, and the conquerors of the west would receive their crown from the successors of St Peter. The Roman church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate, and, under the shadow of the Carolingian power, the bishop might exercise, with honour and safety, the government of the city.

Coronation of Charlemagne as emperor of Rome and of the west.

A. D. 800
Dec 2.

Before the ruin of paganism in Rome, the competition for a wealthy bishopric had often been productive of tumult and bloodshed. The people were less numerous, but the times were more savage, the prize more important, and the chair of St Peter was fiercely disputed by the leading ecclesiastics who aspired to the rank of sovereign. The reign of Adrian the first<sup>a</sup> surpasses the measure of past or succeeding ages,<sup>b</sup> the walls of Rome, the sacred patrimony, the ruin of the Lombards, and the friendship of Charlemagne, were the trophies of his fame. He secretly edified the throne of his successors, and displayed in a narrow space the virtues of a great prince. His memory was revered, but in the next election, a priest of the L-teran, Leo the third, was preferred to the nephew and the favourite of Adrian, whom he had promoted to the first dignities of the church. Their acquiescence or repentance disguised, above four years, the blackest intention of revenge, till the day of a procession, when a furious band of conspirators dispersed the unarmed multitude, and assaulted with blows and wounds the sacred person of the pope. But their enterprise on his life or liberty was disappointed, perhaps by their own confusion and remorse. Leo was left for dead on the ground, on his revival from the swoon, the effect of his loss of blood, he recovered his speech and sight, and this natural event was improved to the miraculous restoration of his eyes and tongue, of which he had been deprived, twice deprived, by the knife of the assassins.<sup>c</sup> From his prison he escaped to the Vatican, the duke of Spoleto hastened to his rescue, Charlemagne sympathized in his injury, and in his camp of Paderborn in Westphalia accepted, or solicited, a visit from the Roman pontiff. Leo repassed the Alps with a commission of counts and bishops, the guards of his safety and the judges of his innocence, and it was not without reluctance, that the conqueror of the Saxons delayed till the ensuing year the personal discharge of this pious office. In his fourth and last pilgrimage, he was received at Rome with the due honours of king and patrician. Leo was permitted to purge himself by oath of the crimes imputed to his charge. His enemies were silenced, and the sacrilegious attempt against his life was punished by the mild and insufficient penalty of exile. On the festival of Christmas, the last year of the eighth century, Charlemagne appeared in the church of St Peter, and, to gratify the vanity of Rome, he had exchanged the simple dress of his country for the habit of a patrician.<sup>d</sup> After the celebration of the holy mysteries, Leo suddenly placed a precious crown on his head,<sup>e</sup> and the dome resounded with the acclamations of the people, "Long life and victory to Charles, the most pious Augustus, crowned by God the great and pacific emperor of the Romans!" The head and body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the royal unction after the example of the Cæsars, he was saluted or adored by the pontiff, his coronation oath represents a promise to maintain the faith and privileges of the church, and the first-fruits were paid in his rich offerings to the shrine of the apostle. In his familiar conversation, the emperor protested ported by the credulity of some French annalists. but I gildard and other writers of the same age are more natural and sincere. "I us centus paululum est la" says John the deacon of Napol. (Vil) I pncip Napol in scriptis Muratori tom i pars ii p 312. Thedolphus a contemporary biogr of Orleans observes with pride et (1 in card 3).

Reddita sunt? mltum et mltum et a if re require Est tamen in dulo huc inter aut u de magis
a Twice, at the request of Hadrian and Leo, he appeared at Rome—longa tunica et chlamys arctus et extrinsecus, sine ulla more sumat. Ezardus (le xxiii p 101—112) does not see Leo's the simplicity of his dress was, also in the east. Had Leo Charles the Bald returned to France in a few years? the poet had de, as marked at the apostle. Caillard, Vie de Charlemagne p 101 p 101.

a See Anastasius (p 177) and Caillard (le xxiii p 121—122)
The one is mentioned by Theophanes (p 272) the other by Leo mon (in the O. R. Roman) and the other is mentioned by Leo quorum principum, by the 4 rules Historia Script. Muratori tom i pars ii p 312.

<sup>a</sup> Fontanini considers the emperors as no more than the advocates of the church (advocatus et defensor S. R. I. See Ducange (Glo. Lat. tom i p 297). His antagonist Muratori reduces the popes to be no more than the exarchs of the emperor. In the more equitable view of Mosheim (Institut. Hist. Eccles. p 261 262) they held Rome under the empire, as the most honourable species of gift or benefice—preminetur in the east, mo. c.

<sup>b</sup> His merits and hopes are summed up in an epitaph of thirty eight verses of which Charlemagne declares himself the author, (Concil. tom viii p 520).

Post patrem laetissime Caroli sine carmina scripsi
Tu mihi dulcis amor te mod. phago pater
Admirans Caroli rex ego tuque pater

The poetry might be supplied by Alcuin. I at the tears, the most glorious tribute canonically belong to Charlemagne.

<sup>c</sup> Every new page is adorned—Sancte Pater non stesbis an nos? I. i. twenty five years. On the whole, the average is about eight years—a sh. hope for an ambitious cardinal.

<sup>d</sup> The assurance of Anastasius (tom iii pars i p 107 108) is sup-

his ignorance of the intentions of Leo, which he would have disappointed by his absence on that memorable day. But the preparations of the ceremony must have disclosed the secret, and the journey of Charlemagne reveals his knowledge and expectation. He had acknowledged that the imperial title was the object of his ambition, and a Roman synod had pronounced, that it was the only adequate reward of his merit and service.<sup>b</sup>

The appellation of great has been often bestowed, and sometimes deserved, but CHARLEMAGNE is the only prince in whose favour the title has been indissolubly blended with the name. That name, with the addition of saint, is inserted in the Roman calendar, and the saint, by a rare felicity, is crowned with the praises of the historians and philosophers of an enlightened age.<sup>c</sup> His real merit is doubtless enhanced by the barbarism of the nation and the times from which he emerged. But the apparent magnitude of an object is likewise enlarged by an unequal comparison, and the ruins of Palmyra derive a casual splendour from the nakedness of the surrounding desert. Without injustice to his fame, I may discern some blemishes in the sanctity and greatness of the restorer of the western empire. Of his moral virtues, chastity is not the most conspicuous,<sup>d</sup> but the public happiness could not be materially injured by his nine wives or concubines, the various indulgence of meaner or more transient amours, the multitude of his bastards whom he bestowed on the church, and the long celibacy and licentious manners of his daughters,<sup>e</sup> whom the father was suspected of loving with too fond a passion. I shall be scarcely permitted to accense the ambition of a conqueror, but in a day of equal retribution, the sons of his brother Carloman, the Merovingian princes of Aquitaine, and the four thousand five hundred Saxons who were beheaded on the same spot, would have something to allege against the justice and humanity of Charlemagne. His treatment of the vanquished Saxons<sup>f</sup> was an abuse of the right of conquest, his laws were not less sanguinary than his arms, and in the discussion of his motives, whatever is subtracted from his glory must be imputed to temper. The sedentary reader is amazed by his incessant activity of mind and body, and his subjects and enemies were not less astounded at his sudden presence, at the moment when they believed him at the most distant extremity of the empire, neither peace nor war, nor summer nor winter, were a season of repose, and our fancy cannot easily reconcile the annals of his reign with the geography of his expeditions. But this activity was a national, rather than a personal, virtue, the vagrant life of a Frank was spent in the chase, in pilgrimage, in military adventures, and the journeys of Charlemagne were distinguished only by a more numerous train and a more important purpose. His military renown must be tried by the scrutiny of his troops, his enemies, and his actions. Alexander conquered with the arms of Philip, but the two heroes who preceded Charlemagne, bequeathed him their name, their examples, and the companions of their victories. At the head of his veteran and superior armies, he oppressed the savage or degenerate nations, who were incapable of confederating for their common safety: nor did he ever encounter an equal antagonist in numbers, in discipline, or in arms. The science of war has been lost and revived with the arts of peace, but his campaigns are not illustrated by any siege or battle of singular difficulty and success, and he might behold, with envy, the Saracen trophies of his grandfather. After his Spanish expedition, his rear-guard was defeated in the Pyrenean mountains, and the soldiers, whose situation was irretrievable, and whose valour was useless, might accense, with their last breath, the want of skill or caution of their general.<sup>g</sup> I touch with reverence the laws of Charlemagne, so highly applauded by a respectable judge. They compose not a system, but a series of occasional and minute edicts, for the correction of abuses, the reformation of manners, the economy of his farms, the care of his poultry, and even the sale of his eggs. He wished to improve the laws and the character of the Franks, and his attempts, however feeble and imperfect, are deserving of praise. The inveterate evils of the times were suspended or mollified by his government,<sup>h</sup> but in his institutions I can seldom discover the general views and the immortal spirit of a legislator, who survives himself for the benefit of posterity. The union and stability of his empire depended on the life of a single man. He imitated the dangerous practice of dividing his kingdoms among his sons,

<sup>b</sup> This great event of the translation or restoration of the empire is related and discussed by Natalis Alexander, (secul ix disert i p 290—297) Pagi (tom vi p 418.) Muratori, (Annali d'Italia, tom vi p 331—332) Guizot, (de l'Etat de l'Europe i p 247—251) Spanheim (de facta Translatione Imperii) Guarnier (tom i p 395—405) M. Hare (Abrégé Chronologique tom i p 439—450) Gaillard (Hist de Charlemagne tom ii p 386—440) Almost all these moderns have some religious or national bias.

<sup>c</sup> By Vabbe, (Observations sur l'Histoire de France) Voltaire (Histoire générale) Robertson, (History of Charles I) and Montesquieu (l'Esprit des Loix, l. xxxi c 18.) In the year 1782 M. Gaillard published his Histoire de Charlemagne, (in 4 vols 12mo) which I have freely and profitably used. The author is a man of sense and humanity, and his work is laboured with industry and elegance. But I have likewise examined the original monuments of the reigns of Pepin and Charlemagne in the 5th volume of the Historians of France.

<sup>d</sup> The vision of William composed by a monk eleven years after the death of Charlemagne shows him in purgatory with a culture who is perpetually gnawing the filthy member, while the real of his body the emblem of his virtues, is sound and perfect (see Gaillard, tom ii p 317—320.)

<sup>e</sup> The marriage of Eginhard with Imma, daughter of Charlemagne, is in my opinion, sufficiently refuted by the probrum and suspicio that sullied these fair damself without excepting his own wife, (c. xix p 99—100 cum Notis Schmidke.) The husband must have been too strong for the historian.

<sup>f</sup> Besides the massacres and transigrations the pain of death was pronounced against the following crimes: 1 The refusal of baptism. 2 The false pretence of baptism. 3 A refusal to submit. 4 The murder of a priest or bishop. 5 Human sacrifices. 6 Lying meal in Lent. But every crime might be expiated by baptism or penance (Gaillard, tom ii p 241—247) and the Christian Saxons became the friends and equals of the Franks (Striv Corpus Hist Germanicæ, p 133.)

<sup>g</sup> In this action the famous Rutland Rolando Orlando was slain—cum pluribus suis. See the truth in Gaillard (c. 8 p 51—56) and the fable in an ingenious Supplement of M. Gaillard (tom iii p 473.) The Spaniards are too proud of a victory, which history ascribes to the Greeks and Romans to the Saxons.

<sup>h</sup> Yet Schmidl from the best authorities, represents the interior disorders and oppression of his reign (Hist. des Allemands, tom ii p 42—43.)

and, after his numerous diets, the whole constitution was left to fluctuate between the disorders of anarchy and despotism. His esteem for the piety and knowledge of the clergy tempted him to intrust that aspiring order with temporal dominion and civil jurisdiction, and his son Lewis, when he was stripped and degraded by the bishops, might accuse, in some measure, the imprudence of his father. His laws enforced the imposition of tithes, because the dæmons had proclaimed in the air that the default of payment had been the cause of the last scarcity.<sup>1</sup> The literary merits of Charlemagne are attested by the foundation of schools, the introduction of arts, the works which were published in his name, and his familiar connexion with the subjects and strangers whom he invited to his court to educate both the prince and people. His own studies were tardy, laborious, and imperfect, if he spoke Latin, and understood Greek, he derived the rudiments of knowledge from conversation, rather than from books, and, in his mature age, the emperor strove to acquire the practice of writing, which every peasant now learns in his infancy.<sup>2</sup> The grammar and logic, the music and astronomy, of the times, were only cultivated as the handmaids of superstition, but the curiosity of the human mind must ultimately tend to its improvement, and the encouragement of learning reflects the purest and most pleasing lustre on the character of Charlemagne.<sup>3</sup> The dignity of his person,<sup>4</sup> the length of his reign, the prosperity of his arms, the vigour of his government, and the reverence of distant nations, distinguished him from the royal crowd, and Europe dates a new æra from his restoration of the western empire.

<sup>1</sup> Extent of his empire in France, title " and some of the fairest kingdoms of Europe were the patrimony or conquest of a prince, who reigned at the same time in France, Spain, Italy, Germany, and Hungary. I The Roman province of Gaul had been transformed into the name and monarchy of FRANCE, but, in the decay of the Merovingian line, its limits were contracted by the independence of the Britons and the revolt of Aquitaine. Charlemagne pursued, and confined, the Britons on the shores of the ocean,

<sup>1</sup> Omnis homo ex sua proprietate legitimam decimam ad ecclesiam conferat. Experimentum enim dilectissimi, in anno quo illa valida famis frepuit, ebullire vixit annonas a demonibus devoratas, et voces expulsi latinitus auditis. Such is the decree and assertion of the great Council of Frankfort (canon xcv tom ix p 165.) Both Selden, (Hist. of Tithes Works vol iii. part ii p 1146) and Montesquieu (Esprit des Loix l xxxi c 12.) represent Charlemagne as the first legal author of tithes. Such obligations have country gentlemen to his memory! I k Lumbard (c 25 p 119) clearly asserts, tentabal et scribere sed parum prospere successit labor pro posteris et sero linquo. The moderns have perverted and corrected this obvious meaning and the title of M Gaillard's Dissertation (tom iii p 217-269) betrays his partiality.

<sup>2</sup> See Gaillard tom iii p 139-176 and Schmidt, tom ii p 121-122. m M Gaillard (tom iii p 72) fixes the true stature of Charlemagne (see a Dissertation of Marquard Freher ad calcem Eginhardi p 229 &c.) at five feet nine inches of French, about six feet one inch and a fourth in English measure. The romance writers have increased it to six feet, and the giant was endowed with matchless strength and appetite: at a single stroke of his good sword Sigraze he cut a horse and his horse, at a single repast he devoured a goose two fowls, a quarter of mutton &c.

<sup>3</sup> See the concise but correct and original, work of D Anville (États successeurs en Europe après la chute de l'Empire Romain en Occident, Paris 1771 in 4to) whose map includes the empire of Charlemagne.

and that ferocious tribe, whose origin and language are so different from the French, was chastised by the imposition of tribute, hostages, and peace. After a long and evasive contest, the rebellion of the dukes of Aquitaine was punished by the forfeiture of their province, their liberty, and their lives. Harsh and rigorous would have been such treatment of ambitious governors, who had too faithfully copied the mayors of the palace. But a recent discovery<sup>5</sup> has proved that these unhappy princes were the last and lawful heirs of the blood and sceptre of Clovis, a younger branch, from the brother of Dagobert, of the Merovingian house. Their ancient kingdom was reduced to the duchy of Gasconne, to the counties of Fesenzac and Armagnac, at the foot of the Pyrenees. Their race was propagated till the beginning of the sixteenth century, and, after surviving their Carolingian tyrants, they were reserved to feel the injustice, or the favours, of a third dynasty. By the re-union of Aquitaine, France was enlarged to its present boundaries, with the addition of the Netherlands and Spain, as far as the Rhine. II The Saracens had been expelled from France by the grandfather and father of Charlemagne, but they still possessed the greatest part of SPAIN, from the rock of Gibraltar to the Pyrenees. Amidst their civil divisions, an Arabian emir of Saragossa implored his protection in the diet of Paderborn. Charlemagne undertook the expedition, restored the emir, and, without distinction of faith, impartially crushed the resistance of the Christians, and rewarded the obedience and service of the Mahometans. In his absence he instituted the Spanish march,<sup>6</sup> which extended from the Pyrenees to the river Ebro. Barcelona was the residence of the French governor: he possessed the counties of Ronsillon and Catalonia, and the infant kingdoms of Navarre and Aragon were subject to his jurisdiction. III As king of the Lombards, and patrician of Rome, he reigned over the greatest part of ITALY,<sup>7</sup> a tract of a thousand miles from the Alps to the borders of Calabria. The duchy of Beneventum, a Lombard fief, had spread, at the expense of the Greeks, over the modern kingdom of Naples. But Arrechin, the

the different parts are illustrated by Valesius (Nobilita Galliarum) for France. Beretti (Dissertatione Chirographica) for Italy. De Marca (Marca Hispanica) for Spain. For the middle geography of Germany, I confess myself poor and destitute.

<sup>5</sup> After a brief relation of his wars and conquests (Vit Carol c 2-14) Eginhard recapitulates, in a few words (c 15) the countries subject to his empire. Struvius (Corpus Hist Germani p 116-143) has inserted in his Notes the texts of the old Chronicles. p Of a charter granted to the masters of Alam (A D 815) by Charles the Bald which deduces this royal pedigree. I doubt whether some subsequent links of the ninth and tenth centuries are equally firm. Yet the whole is approved and defended by M Gaillard (tom ii p 69-81 203-206) who affirms that the family of Montesquieu (not of the President de Montesquieu) is descended, in the female line, from Clovis and Clovis—an interesting pedigree.

<sup>6</sup> The governors or counts of the Spanish march resided at Charles the Simple about the year 900, and a poor picture of the P sillon has been recovered in 1842 by the king of France. (See Description de la France tom i p 230-232.) Yet the king of Spain (ains 158 200 subjects and annually pays 200,000 livres (See Administration des Finances tom i p 230-231) more money, perhaps a doubtless more money than the march of Charlemagne. Schmidt, Hist. des Allemands tom i p 200, &c.

reigning duke, refused to be included in the slavery of his country, assumed the independent title of prince, and opposed his sword to the Carlovingian monarchy. His defence was firm, his submission was not inglorious, and the emperor was content with an easy tribute, the demolition of his fortresses, and the acknowledgment, on his coins, of a supreme lord. The artful flattery of his son Grimoald added the appellation of father, but he asserted his dignity with prudence, and Beneventum insensibly escaped from the French yoke. IV Charlemagne was the first who united GERMAN<sup>y</sup> under the same sceptre. The name of Oriental France is preserved in the circle of Franconia, and the people of Hesse and Thuringia were recently incorporated with the victors, by the conformity of religion and government. The Alemanni, so formidable to the Romans, were the faithful vassals and confederates of the Franks, and their country was inscribed within the modern limits of Alsace, Swabia, and Switzerland. The Bavarians, with a similar indulgence of their laws and manners, were less patient of a master: the repeated treasons of Tasilo justified the abolition of their hereditary dukes, and their power was shared among the counts, who judged and guarded that important frontier. But the north of Germany, from the Rhine and beyond the Elbe, was still hostile and pagan, nor was it till after a war of thirty-three years that the Saxons bowed under the yoke of Christ and of Charlemagne. The idols and their votaries were extirpated: the foundation of eight bishoprics, of Munster, Osnaburgh, Paderborn, and Minden, of Bremen, Verden, Hildesheim, and Halberstadt, define, on either side of the Weser, the bounds of ancient Saxony: these episcopal seats were the first schools and cities of that savage land, and the religion and humanity of the children atoned, in some degree, for the massacre of the parents. Beyond the Elbe, the Slavi, or Sclavonians, of similar manners and various denominations, overspread the modern dominions of Prussia, Poland, and Bohemia, and some transient marks of obedience have tempted the French historian to extend the empire to the Baltic and the Vistula. The conquest or conversion of those countries is of a more recent age, but the first union of Bohemia with the Germanic body may be justly ascribed to the arms of Charlemagne.

Germany,

Hungary

V He retaliated on the Avars, or Huns of Pannonia, the same calamities which they had inflicted on the nations. Their rings, the wooden fortifications which encircled their districts and villages, were broken down by the triple effort of a French army, that was poured into their country by land and water, through the Carpathian mountains and along the plain of the Danube. After a bloody conflict of eight years, the loss of some French generals was avenged by the slaughter of the most noble Huns: the relics of the nation submitted: the royal residence of the chagan was left desolate and unknown, and the treasures, the rapine of two hundred and fifty years, enriched the victorious troops, or decorated the churches of Italy and Gaul. After the reduction of Pannonia, the empire of Charlemagne was bounded only by the conflux of the Danube with the Teys and the Save: the provinces of Istria, Liburnia, and Dalmatia, were an easy, though unprofitable, accession, and it was an effect of his moderation, that he left the maritime cities under the real or nominal sovereignty of the Greeks. But these distant possessions added more to the reputation, than to the power, of the Latin emperor, nor did he risk any ecclesiastical foundations to reclaim the barbarians from their vagrant life and idolatrous worship. Some canals of communication between the rivers, the Saône and the Meuse, the Rhine and the Danube, were faintly attempted. Their execution would have vivified the empire, and more cost and labour were often wasted in the structure of a cathedral.

If we retrace the outlines of this <sup>His neighbours</sup> geographical picture, it will be seen <sup>and enemies</sup>

that the empire of the Franks extended, between east and west, from the Ebro to the Elbe or Vistula, between the north and south, from the duchy of Beneventum to the river Eyder, the perpetual boundary of Germany and Denmark. The personal and political importance of Charlemagne was magnified by the distress and division of the rest of Europe. The islands of Great Britain and Ireland were disputed by a crowd of princes of Saxon or Scottish origin, and, after the loss of Spain, the christian and Gothic kingdom of Alphonso the Chaste was confined to the narrow range of the Asturian mountains. These petty sovereigns revered the power or virtue of the Carlovingian monarch, implored the honour and support of his alliance, and styled him their common parent, the sole and supreme emperor of the west. He maintained a more equal intercourse with the caliph Harun al Rashid, whose dominion stretched from Africa to India, and accepted from his ambassadors a tent, a water-clock, an elephant, and the keys of the holy sepulchre. It is not easy to conceive the private friendship of a Frank and an Arab, who were strangers to each other's person, and language, and religion: but their public correspondence was

* See Giannone tom i p. 374-375 and the Annals of Muratori.

† Quot pro lia in eo gesta: quantum sanguinis effusum sit: Testatur vacua omni habitatione Pannonia et locus in quo regia Cagani fuit ita deserta ut ne vestigium quidem humanæ habitationis appareat. Tota in hoc bello Hunnorum in solitas perit: tunc gloria decidit, omnis pecunia et cuncti ex longo tempore thesauri direpti sunt.

‡ The junction of the Rhine and Danube was undertaken only for the service of the Pannonian war (Gaillard Vie de Charlemagne tom ii p. 312-315). The canal, which would have been only two leagues in length and of which some traces are still extant in Swabia was interrupted by excessive rains, military avocations, and superstitious fears. (Schæpflin Hist. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom xviii p. 256. Molmima fluviorum, &c. Jungendorum, p. 59-62.)

§ See Eginhard c. 16 and Gaillard tom ii p. 361-385 who mentions with a loose reference the intercourse of Charlemagne and Harun, the emperor's gift of his own sword, and the modest answer of his Saxon disciple. The anecdote, if genuine, would have adorned our English histories.

¶ The correspondence is mentioned only in the French annals and the orientals are ignorant of the caliph's friendship for the christian dog—a polite appellation which Harun bestows on the emperor of the Greeks.

founded on vanity, and their remote situation left no room for a competition of interest. Two thirds of the western empire of Rome were subject to Charlemagne, and the deficiency was amply supplied by his command of the inaccessible or invincible nations of Germany. But in the choice of his enemies, we may be reasonably surprised that he so often preferred the poverty of the north to the riches of the south. The three and thirty campaigns laboriously consumed in the woods and morasses of Germany, would have sufficed to assert the amplitude of his title by the expulsion of the Greeks from Italy and the Saracens from Spain. The weakness of the Greeks would have ensured an easy victory, and the holy crusade against the Saracens would have been prompted by glory and revenge, and loudly justified by religion and policy. Perhaps, in his expeditions beyond the Rhine and the Elbe, he aspired to save his monarchy from the fate of the Roman empire, to disarm the enemies of civilized society, and to eradicate the seed of future emigrations. But it has been wisely observed, that in a light of precaution, all conquest must be ineffectual, unless it could be universal, since the increasing circle must be involved in a larger sphere of hostility.* The subjugation of Germany withdrew the veil which had so long concealed the continent or islands of Scandinavia from the knowledge of Europe, and awakened the torpid courage of their barbarous natives. The fiercest of the Saxon idolaters escaped from the christian tyrant to their brethren of the north, the ocean and Mediterranean were covered with their piratical fleets, and Charlemagne beheld with a sigh the distinctive progress of the Normans, who, in less than seventy years, precipitated the fall of his race and monarchy.

Had the pope and the Romans revived the primitive constitution, the titles of emperor and Augustus were conferred on Charlemagne for the term of his life, and his successors, on each vacancy, must have ascended the throne by a formal or tacit election. But the association of his son Lewis the Pious asserts the independent right of monarchy by and conquest, and the emperor seems on this occasion to have foreseen and prevented the latent claims of the clergy. The royal youth was commanded to take the crown from the altar, and with his own hands to place it on his head, as a gift which he held from God, his father, and the nation.† The same ceremony was repeated, though with less energy, in the subsequent associations of Lothaire and Lewis the second. The Carlovingian sceptre was transmitted from father to son in a lineal descent of four generations, and the ambition of the popes was reduced to the empty honour of crowning and anointing these hereditary princes who were already invested with their power and dominions. The Lewis the Pious, pious Lewis survived his brothers A D 814-840 and embraced the whole empire of Charlemagne, but the nations and the nobles, his bishops and his children, quickly discerned that this mighty mass was no longer inspired by the same soul, and the foundations were undermined to the centre, while the external surface was yet fair and entire. After a war, or battle, which consumed one hundred thousand Franks, the empire was divided by treaty between his three sons, who had violated every filial and fraternal duty. The kingdoms of Lothaire I Germany and France were for ever A D 840-856 separated, the provinces of Gaul, between the Rhone and the Alps, the Meuse and the Rhine, were assigned, with Italy, to the imperial dignity of Lothaire. In the partition of his share, Lorraine and Arles, two recent and transitory kingdoms, were bestowed on the younger children, and Lewis the second, his eldest son, was content Lewis II with the realm of Italy, the proper A D 856-875 and sufficient patrimony of a Roman emperor. On his death without any male issue, the vacant throne was disputed by his uncles and cousins, and the popes most dexterously seized the occasion of judging the claims and merits of the candidates, and of bestowing on the most obsequious, or most liberal, the imperial office of advocate of the Roman church. The dregs of the Carlovingian race no longer exhibited any symptoms of virtue or power, and the ridiculous epithets of the balb, the stammerer, the fat, and the simple, distinguished the tame and uniform features of a crowd of kings alike deserving of oblivion. By the failure of the collateral branches, the whole inheritance devolved to Charles the Fat, the last emperor of his family. his insanity authorized the desertion of Germany, Italy, and France. he was deposed Division of the empire A D 888. in a diet, and solicited his daily bread from the rebels by whose contempt his life and liberty had been spared. According to the measure of their force, the governors, the bishops, and the lords, usurped the fragments of the falling empire, and some preference was shown to the female or illegitimate blood of Charlemagne. Of the greater part, the title and possession were alike doubtful, and the merit was adequate to the contracted scale of their dominions. Those who could appear with an army at the gates of Rome were crowned emperors in the Vatican, but their modesty was more frequently satisfied with the appellation of kings of Italy, and the whole term of seventy-four years may be deemed a vacancy, from the abdication of Charles the Fat to the establishment of Otto the first.

* Gaillard tom ii p 301-302-471-472. I have borrowed his judicious remarks on Charlemagne's plan of conquest and the judicious distinction of his enemies of the first and second circle (tom ii p 154 309 &c.)

† Tegan the biographer of Lewis relates this coronation and Barons has honestly transcribed it (A D 813 No 13, &c. See

Gaillard, tom ii p 306 307, 308. I however adhere to the claim of the popes. For the series of the Carlovingians see the history of France Italy and Germany. Pl 21 51 52 53 54 55 56 57 58 59 60 61 62 63 64 65 66 67 68 69 70 71 72 73 74 75 76 77 78 79 80 81 82 83 84 85 86 87 88 89 90 91 92 93 94 95 96 97 98 99 100 101 102 103 104 105 106 107 108 109 110 111 112 113 114 115 116 117 118 119 120 121 122 123 124 125 126 127 128 129 130 131 132 133 134 135 136 137 138 139 140 141 142 143 144 145 146 147 148 149 150 151 152 153 154 155 156 157 158 159 160 161 162 163 164 165 166 167 168 169 170 171 172 173 174 175 176 177 178 179 180 181 182 183 184 185 186 187 188 189 190 191 192 193 194 195 196 197 198 199 200 201 202 203 204 205 206 207 208 209 210 211 212 213 214 215 216 217 218 219 220 221 222 223 224 225 226 227 228 229 230 231 232 233 234 235 236 237 238 239 240 241 242 243 244 245 246 247 248 249 250 251 252 253 254 255 256 257 258 259 260 261 262 263 264 265 266 267 268 269 270 271 272 273 274 275 276 277 278 279 280 281 282 283 284 285 286 287 288 289 290 291 292 293 294 295 296 297 298 299 300 301 302 303 304 305 306 307 308 309 310 311 312 313 314 315 316 317 318 319 320 321 322 323 324 325 326 327 328 329 330 331 332 333 334 335 336 337 338 339 340 341 342 343 344 345 346 347 348 349 350 351 352 353 354 355 356 357 358 359 360 361 362 363 364 365 366 367 368 369 370 371 372 373 374 375 376 377 378 379 380 381 382 383 384 385 386 387 388 389 390 391 392 393 394 395 396 397 398 399 400 401 402 403 404 405 406 407 408 409 410 411 412 413 414 415 416 417 418 419 420 421 422 423 424 425 426 427 428 429 430 431 432 433 434 435 436 437 438 439 440 441 442 443 444 445 446 447 448 449 450 451 452 453 454 455 456 457 458 459 460 461 462 463 464 465 466 467 468 469 470 471 472 473 474 475 476 477 478 479 480 481 482 483 484 485 486 487 488 489 490 491 492 493 494 495 496 497 498 499 500 501 502 503 504 505 506 507 508 509 510 511 512 513 514 515 516 517 518 519 520 521 522 523 524 525 526 527 528 529 530 531 532 533 534 535 536 537 538 539 540 541 542 543 544 545 546 547 548 549 550 551 552 553 554 555 556 557 558 559 560 561 562 563 564 565 566 567 568 569 570 571 572 573 574 575 576 577 578 579 580 581 582 583 584 585 586 587 588 589 590 591 592 593 594 595 596 597 598 599 600 601 602 603 604 605 606 607 608 609 610 611 612 613 614 615 616 617 618 619 620 621 622 623 624 625 626 627 628 629 630 631 632 633 634 635 636 637 638 639 640 641 642 643 644 645 646 647 648 649 650 651 652 653 654 655 656 657 658 659 660 661 662 663 664 665 666 667 668 669 670 671 672 673 674 675 676 677 678 679 680 681 682 683 684 685 686 687 688 689 690 691 692 693 694 695 696 697 698 699 700 701 702 703 704 705 706 707 708 709 710 711 712 713 714 715 716 717 718 719 720 721 722 723 724 725 726 727 728 729 730 731 732 733 734 735 736 737 738 739 740 741 742 743 744 745 746 747 748 749 750 751 752 753 754 755 756 757 758 759 760 761 762 763 764 765 766 767 768 769 770 771 772 773 774 775 776 777 778 779 780 781 782 783 784 785 786 787 788 789 790 791 792 793 794 795 796 797 798 799 800 801 802 803 804 805 806 807 808 809 810 811 812 813 814 815 816 817 818 819 820 821 822 823 824 825 826 827 828 829 830 831 832 833 834 835 836 837 838 839 840 841 842 843 844 845 846 847 848 849 850 851 852 853 854 855 856 857 858 859 860 861 862 863 864 865 866 867 868 869 870 871 872 873 874 875 876 877 878 879 880 881 882 883 884 885 886 887 888 889 890 891 892 893 894 895 896 897 898 899 900 901 902 903 904 905 906 907 908 909 910 911 912 913 914 915 916 917 918 919 920 921 922 923 924 925 926 927 928 929 930 931 932 933 934 935 936 937 938 939 940 941 942 943 944 945 946 947 948 949 950 951 952 953 954 955 956 957 958 959 960 961 962 963 964 965 966 967 968 969 970 971 972 973 974 975 976 977 978 979 980 981 982 983 984 985 986 987 988 989 990 991 992 993 994 995 996 997 998 999 1000

Otho<sup>b</sup> was of the noble race of the dukes of Saxony, and if he truly descended from Witkind, the adversary and proselyte of Charlemagne, the posterity of a vanquished people was exalted to reign over their conquerors. His father Henry the Fowler was elected, by the suffrage of the nation, to save and institute the kingdom of Germany. Its limits were enlarged on every side by his son, the first and greatest of the Othos. A portion of Gaul to the west of the Rhine, along the banks of the Meuse and the Moselle, was assigned to the Germans, by whose blood and language it has been tinged since the time of Cæsar and Trajan. Between the Rhine, the Rhone, and the Alps, the successors of Otho acquired vain supremacy over the broken kingdoms of Burgundy and Arles. In the north, christianity was propagated by the sword of Otho, the conqueror and apostle of the Slavic nations of the Elbe and Oder: the marches of Brandenburg and Sleswick were fortified with German colonies, and the king of Denmark, the dukes of Poland and Bohemia, confessed themselves his tributary vassals. At the head of a victorious army, he passed the Alps, subdued the kingdom of Italy, delivered the pope, and for ever fixed the imperial crown in the name and nation of Germany. From that memorable æra, two maxims of public jurisprudence were introduced by force and ratified by time. I. That the prince, who was elected in the German diet, acquired, from that instant, the subject kingdoms of Italy and Rome. II. But that he might not legally assume the titles of emperor and Augustus, till he had received the crown from the hands of the Roman pontiff.<sup>d</sup>

Transactions of the western and eastern empires

The imperial dignity of Charlemagne was announced to the east by the alteration of his style, and instead of saluting his fathers, the Greek emperors, he presumed to adopt the more equal and familiar appellation of brother.<sup>e</sup> Perhaps in his connexion with Irene he aspired to the name of husband: his embassy to Constantinople spoke the language of peace and friendship, and might conceal a treaty of marriage with that ambitious princess, who had renounced the most sacred duties of a mother. The nature, the duration, the probable consequences of such an union between two distant and dissonant empires, it is impossible to conjecture, but the unanimous silence of the Latins may teach us to suspect, that the report was invented by the enemies of Irene, to charge her with the guilt of betraying the church and state to the strangers of the west.<sup>f</sup> The French ambassadors were the spectators, and had nearly been the victims, of the conspiracy of Nicephorus, and the national hatred Constantinople was exasperated by the treason and sacrilege of ancient Rome. A proverb, "That the Franks were good friends and bad neighbours," was in every one's mouth, but it was dangerous to provoke a neighbour who might be tempted to reiterate, in the church of St Sophia, the ceremony of his imperial coronation. After a tedious journey of circuit and delay, the ambassadors of Nicephorus found him in his camp, on the banks of the river Sala, and Charlemagne affected to confound their vanity by displaying, in a Franconian village, the pomp, or at least the pride, of the Byzantine palace.<sup>g</sup> The Greeks were successively led through four halls of audience: in the first they were ready to fall prostrate before a splendid personage in a chair of state, till he informed them that he was only a servant, the constable, or master of the horse, of the emperor. The same mistake, and the same answer, were repeated in the apartments of the count palatine, the steward, and the chamberlain, and their impatience was gradually heightened, till the doors of the presence-chamber were thrown open, and they beheld the genuine monarch, on his throne, enriched with the foreign luxury which he despised, and encircled with the love and reverence of his victorious chiefs. A treaty of peace and alliance was concluded between the two empires, and the limits of the east and west were defined by the right of present possession. But the Greeks<sup>h</sup> soon forgot this humiliating equality, or remembered it only to hate the barbarians by whom it was extorted. During the short union of virtue and power, they respectfully saluted the august Charlemagne with the acclamations of basileis, and emperor of the Romans. As soon as these qualities were separated in the person of his pious son, the Byzantine letters were inscribed, "To the king, or, as he styles himself, the emperor, of the Franks and Lombards." When both power and virtue were extinct, they despoiled Lewis the second of his hereditary title, and, with the barbarous appellation of rex or regis, degraded him among the crowd of Latin princes. His reply<sup>i</sup> is expressive of his weakness: he proves, with some learning, that both in sacred and profane indignitibus magnâ tulit patientia victique eorum contumaciâ militando ad eos crebras legationes, et in epistolis fratres eos appellando. Einhard, c. 28. p. 129. Perhaps it was on their account that like Augustus, he affected some reluctance to receive the empire.

<sup>f</sup> Theophanes speaks of the coronation and union of Charles, καρολλος, (Chronograph p. 399) and of his treaty of marriage with Irene (p. 402.) which is unknown to the Latins. Gaillard relates his transactions with the Greek empire, (tom. ii. p. 416-468.)

<sup>g</sup> Gaillard very properly observes, that this pageant was a farce suitable to children only: but that it was indeed represented in the presence, and for the benefit of children of a larger growth.

<sup>h</sup> Compare, in the original texts collected by Pagi (tom. iii. A D 812 No 7 A D 821 No 10 &c.) the contract of Charlemagne and his son: to the former the ambassadors of Michael (who were indeed disavowed) more than id est lingua Græcæ laudes dixerunt, imperatorem eum et basileus appellantes: to the latter, Vocato imperatori Francorum &c.

<sup>i</sup> See the epistle, in Paralipomena of the anonymous writer of Saler

<sup>b</sup> He was the son of Otho the son of Iudolph in whose favour the duchy of Saxony had been instituted, A D 848 Runkerus the biographer of St Bruno (Biblioth. Bavaricus Catalog. tom. iii. vol. ii. p. 679) gives a splendid character of his family. Atavorum atavi usque ad hominum memoriam omnes nobilissimi nulli in eorum stirpe ignotus, nulli degener facile reperitur (apud Struvium, Corp. Hist. German. p. 216.) Yet Gundling (in Henrico Ancupæ) is not satisfied of his descent from Witkind.

<sup>c</sup> See the treatise of Coringius (de Finibus Imperii Germanici, Francofurti 1640 in 4to.) he rejects the extravagant and improper scale of the Roman and Carolingian empires and discusses with moderation the rights of Germany, her vassals, and her neighbours.

<sup>d</sup> The power of custom forces me to number Conrad I and Henry I the Fowler in the list of emperors a title which was never assumed by these kings of Germany. The Italians Muratori for instance are more scrupulous and correct, and only reckon the princes who have been crowned at Rome.

<sup>e</sup> Jovialium tamen suscepti dominus, (C. P. imperatoribus super hoc

history, the name of king is synonymous with the Greek word basileus if, at Constantinople, it were assumed in a more exclusive and imperial sense, he claims from his ancestors, and from the pope, a just participation of the honours of the Roman purple. The same controversy was revived in the reign of the Othos, and their ambassador describes, in lively colours, the insolence of the Byzantine court.<sup>1</sup> The Greeks affected to despise the poverty and ignorance of the Franks and Saxons, and in their last decline refused to prostitute to the kings of Germany the title of Roman emperors.

These emperors, in the election of the popes, continued to exercise the powers which had been assumed by the Gothic and Grecian princes, and the importance of this prerogative increased with the temporal estate and spiritual jurisdiction of the Roman church. In the christian aristocracy, the principal members of the clergy still formed a senate to assist the administration, and to supply the vacancy, of the bishop. Rome was divided into twenty-eight parishes, and each parish was governed by a cardinal-priest, or presbyter, a title which, however common and modest in its origin, has aspired to emulate the purple of kings. Their number was enlarged by the association of the seven deacons of the most considerable hospitals, the seven palatine judges of the Lateran, and some dignitaries of the church. The ecclesiastical senate was directed by the seven cardinal-bishops of the Roman province, who were less occupied in the suburb dioceses of Ostia, Porto, Velitræ, Tusculum, Præneste, Tibur, and the Sabines, than by their weekly service in the Lateran, and their superior share in the honours and authority of the apostolic see. On the death of the pope, these bishops recommended a successor to the suffrage of the college of cardinals,<sup>2</sup> and their choice was ratified or rejected by the applause or clamour of the Roman people. But the election was imperfect, nor could the pontiff be legally consecrated till the emperor, the advocate of the church, had graciously signified his approbation and consent. The royal commissioner examined, on the spot, the form and freedom of the proceedings, nor was it till after a previous scrutiny into the qualifications of the candidates, that he accepted an oath of fidelity, and confirmed the donations which had successively enriched the patrimony of St Peter. In the frequent schisms, the rival claims were submitted to the sentence of the emperor, and in a synod of bishops he presumed to judge, to condemn, and to punish, the crimes of a guilty pontiff. Otho the first imposed a treaty on the senate and people, who engaged to prefer the candidate most acceptable to his majesty.<sup>3</sup> His successors anticipated or prevented their choice: they bestowed the Roman benefice, like the bishoprics of Cologne or Bamberg, on the chancellors or preceptors: and whatever might be the merit of a Frank or Saxon, his name sufficiently attests the interposition of foreign power. These acts of prerogative were most speciously excused by the vices of a popular election. The competitor who had been excluded by the cardinals, appealed to the passions or avarice of the multitude: the Vatican and the Lateran were stained with blood, and the most powerful senators, the marquises of Tuscany and the counts of Tusculum, held the apostolic see in a long and disgraceful servitude. The Roman pontiffs, of the ninth and tenth centuries, were insulted, imprisoned, and murdered, by their tyrants, and such was their indigence after the loss and usurpation of the ecclesiastical patrimonies, that they could neither support the state of a prince, nor exercise the charity of a priest.<sup>4</sup> The influence of two sister prostitutes, Marozia and Theodora, was founded on their wealth and beauty, their political and amorous intrigues: the most strenuous of their lovers were rewarded with the Roman mitre, and their reign<sup>5</sup> may have suggested to the darker ages<sup>6</sup> the fable<sup>7</sup> of a female pope.<sup>8</sup> The bastard son, the grandson, and the great-grandson, of Marozia, a rare genealogy, no (Script. Ital. tom. ii. pars. ii. p. 243—244 c. 93—107) whom Baronius (A. D. 871, No. 51—71) mistook for Lrechempert, when he transcribed it in his Annals.

<sup>1</sup> Ipse enim vos non imperatorem id est Basileus sui linguâ, sed ob indignitatem suam, id est regem nostrâ vocabat. (Lutprand, in Legat. in Script. Ital. tom. ii. pars. i. p. 479.) The pope had exhorted Nicephorus, emperor of the Greeks, to make peace with Otho, the ancient emperor of the Romans—quis inscriptio secundum Græcos precatur et teneraria imperatorem inquit, universalem, Romanorum Augustum, magnum adim, Nicephorum (p. 490.)

<sup>2</sup> The origin and progress of the title of cardinal may be found in Thomassin, (Discipline de l'Eglise, tom. i. p. 1291—1294.) Muratori (Antiquitat. Italia Medii Ævi, tom. vi. Dissert. lxi. p. 129—182) and Mosheim, (Institut. Hist. Eccl. p. 315—347) who accurately remarks the forms and changes of the election. The cardinal bishops so highly exalted by Peter Damiani, are sunk to a level with the rest of the sacred college.

<sup>3</sup> Firmiter irantes, nunquam se papam electuros aut ordinatos prorsus conueniunt et electionem Othonis et filii sui (Lutprand, l. vi. c. 16 p. 472.) This important concession may either supply or confirm the decree of the clergy and people of Rome so fiercely rejected by Baronius, Pagi, and Muratori, (A. D. 954) and so well defended and explained by St. Marc (Hist. Eccl. tom. ii. p. 804—816, tom. iv. p. 1167—1185.) Consider all that historical errie and the Annals of Muratori, for the election and confirmation of each pope.

<sup>4</sup> The oppression and vices of the Roman church in the tenth century are fully painted in the first history and location of Lutprand (see p. 440 441 442—446 447 448) and it is whimsical enough to observe Muratori transferring the invectives of Baronius against the popes. But these popes had been chosen not by the cardinals but by lay patrons.

<sup>5</sup> The time of pope Joan (peppissa Joana) is placed & described earlier than Theodora or Marozia: and the two years of her imaginary reign are forcibly inserted between Leo IV and Benedict III. But the contemporary Anonymus indissolubly links the death of Leo and the elevation of Benedict (Anon. mox, p. 247) and the accurate chronology of Pagi, Muratori, and Leibnitz fixes both events to the year 857.

<sup>6</sup> The advocates for pope Joan produce one hundred and fifty witnesses or rather echoes of the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. They bear testimony against themselves and the legend by multiplying the proof that so curious a story must have been repeated by writers of every description to whom it was known. On those of the ninth and tenth centuries the recent event would have fixed with a double force. Would Photinus have spared such a remark? Could Lutprand have missed such scandal? It is scarcely worth while to discuss the various readings of Martinius Polonus & others of the thirteenth or even Mariamini Securus but a most palpable fiction is the passage of pope Joan which has been fixed into some MSS. and editions of the Roman Anals.

<sup>7</sup> As false it deserves that name. But I would not go so far since it is incredible. Suppose a famous French chevalier of our own times to have been born in Italy and educated in the church instead of the army. Per merit or fortune might have raised him to St. Peter's air: his amours would have been natural, his delivery in the streets voluntary, but not improbable.

<sup>8</sup> Till the reformation it was repeated and believed with reverence, and Joan's female statue long occupied her place among the popes in the cathedral of Siena. (Pagi, Critica, tom. iii. p. 234—241.) She has been annihilated by two learned prelates, Pagi and Bayle. (Dictionnaire Critique PAGES, POLOUS, HENRIET.) Let their brethren were scandalized by its disgusting and generous fiction. Spanish and Italian satirists, to give the poor engineers less interest, and even Alaricum considered to church some of the old and were seated in the chair of St Peter, and it was at the age of nineteen years that the second of these became the head of the Latin church. His youth and manhood were of a suitable complexion, and the nations of pilgrims could bear testimony to the charges that were urged against him in a Roman synod, and in the presence of Otho the Great. As John XII had renounced the dress and the decencies of his profession, the soldier may not perhaps be dishonoured by the wine which he drank, the blood that he spilt, the flames that he kindled, or the licentious pursuits of gaming and hunting. His open simony might be the consequence of distress, and his blasphemous invocation of Jupiter and Venus, if it be true, could not possibly be serious. But we read with some surprise, that the worthy grandson of Marozia lived in public adultery with the matrons of Rome; that the Lateran palace was turned into a school for prostitution, and that his rapes of virgins and widows had deterred the female pilgrims from visiting the tomb of St Peter, lest, in the devout act, they should be violated by his successor*. The protestants have dwelt with malicious pleasure on these characters of antichrist, but to a philosophic eye, the vices of the clergy are far less dangerous than their virtues. After a long series of scandal, the apostolic see was reformed and exalted by the austerity

of Gregory VII. That ambitious monk devoted his life to the execution of two projects. I. To fix in the college of cardinals the freedom and independence of election, and for ever to abolish the right or usurpation of the emperors and the Roman people. II. To bestow and resume the western empire as a fief or benefice† of the church, and to extend his temporal dominion over the kings and kingdoms of the earth. After a contest of fifty years, the first of these designs was accomplished by the firm support of the ecclesiastical order, whose liberty was connected with that of their chief. But the second attempt, though it was crowned with some partial and apparent success, has been vigorously resisted by the secular power, and finally extinguished by the improvement of human reason.

Authority of the emperors in Rome.

In the revival of the empire of Rome, neither the bishop nor the people could bestow on Charlemagne or Otho the provinces which were lost, as they had been won, by the chance of arms. But the Romans were free to choose a master for themselves, and the powers which had been delegated to the patrician, were irrevocably granted to the French and Saxon emperors of the west. The broken records of the times preserve some remembrance of their palace, their mint, their tribunal, their edicts, and the sword of justice, which, as late as the thirteenth century, was derived from Cæsar to the præfect of the city*. Between the arts of the popes and the violence of the people, this supremacy was crushed and annihilated. Content with the titles of emperor and Augustus, the successors of Charlemagne neglected to assert this local jurisdiction. In the hour of prosperity, their ambition was diverted by more alluring objects, and in the decay and division of the empire, they were oppressed by the defence of their hereditary provinces. Amidst the ruins of Italy, the famous Marozia invited one of the usurpers to assume the character of her third husband, and Hugh, king of Burgundy, was introduced by her faction into the mole of Hadrian or castle of St Angelo, which commands the principal bridge and entrance of Rome. Her son by the first marriage, Alberic, was compelled to attend at the nuptial banquet, but his reluctant and ungrateful service was chastised with a blow by his new father. The blow was productive of a revolution. "Romans," exclaimed the youth, "once you were the masters of the world, and these Burgundians the most abject of your slaves. They now reign, these voracious and brutal savages, and my injury is the commencement of your servitude." The alarm-bell was rung to arms in every quarter of the city: the Burgundians retreated with haste and shame, Marozia was imprisoned by her victorious son, and his brother, pope John XI, was reduced to the exercise of his spiritual functions. With the title of prince, Alberic possessed above twenty years the government of Rome, and he is said to have gratified the popular prejudice, by restoring the office, or at least the title, of consuls and tribunes. His son and heir Octavian assumed, with the pontificate, the name of John XII. Like his predecessor, he was provoked by the Lombard princes to seek a deliverer for the church and republic, and the services of Otho were rewarded with the imperial dignity. But the Saxon was imperious, the Romans were impatient, the festival of the coronation was disturbed by the secret conflict of prerogative and freedom, and Otho commanded his sword-bearer not to stir from his person, lest he should be assaulted and murdered at the foot of the altar*. Before he repassed the Alps, the emperor chastised the revolt of the people and the ingratitude of John XII. The pope was degraded in a synod, the præfect was mounted on an

Revolt of Alberic, A. D. 932

Of pope John XII, A. D. 967

* Lateranense palatium prostibulum meretricium. Testis omnium gentium, præterquam Romanorum aliena mulierum, quibus sanctorum apostolorum limina orandi gratia timent vivere, cum non nullas ante illas paucas hunc audierint conjugatas, viduas, virgines vi oppressas. (Luitprand Hist. l. vi. c. 6 p. 471. See the whole affair of John XII p. 471-476.)

† A new example of the mischief of equivocation is the beneficium (Ducange tom. i. p. C17, &c.) which the pope conferred on the emperor. The word beneficium in the Latin word may signify either a legal fief or a simple favour, an obligation (we want the word beneficium). See Schmidt, Hist. des Allemands tom. iii. p. 393-408. P. M. de Adrege Chron. de la France tom. i. p. 229-236 317 721 420 430 500 505 609 &c.)

* For the history of the emperors in Rome and Italy, see Sigonius, de Regno Italico, Opp. tom. ii. with the Notes of Saxius, and the Annals of Muratori, who might refer more distinctly to the authors of his great collection.

* See the Dissertation of Le Blanc at the end of his Treatise des Monnoyes de France, in which he produces some Roman coins of the French emperors.

† Romanorum aliquando servi, scilicet Burgundiones Romanis imperent? Romanæ urbis dignitas ad tantam est stultitiam duela ut meretricium etiam imperio pareat? (Luitprand l. iii. c. 12 p. 450.) Sigonius (l. vi. p. 400) positively affirms the renovation of the consularship, but in the old writers Albericus is more frequently styled princeps Romanorum.

* Dittmar, p. 354 apud Schmidt, tom. iii. p. 430 ass, whipped through the city, and cast into a dungeon, thirteen of the most guilty were hanged, others were mutilated or banished, and this severe process was justified by the ancient laws of Theodosius and Justinian. The voice of fame has accused the second Otho of a perfidious and bloody act, the massacre of the senators, whom he had invited to his table under the fair semblance of hospitality and friendship.<sup>a</sup> In the minority of his son Otho the third, Rome made a bold attempt to shake off the Saxon yoke, and the consul Crescentius was the Brutus of the republic. From

Of the consul Crescentius,
A D 998

the condition of a subject and an exile, he twice rose to the command of the city, oppressed, expelled, and created the popes, and formed a conspiracy for restoring the authority of the Greek emperors. In the fortress of St Angelo, he maintained an obstinate siege, till the unfortunate consul was betrayed by a promise of safety. His body was suspended on a gibbet, and his head was exposed on the battlements of the castle. By a reverse of fortune, Otho, after separating his troops, was besieged three days, without food, in his palace, and a disgraceful escape saved him from the justice or fury of the Romans. The senator Ptolemy was the leader of the people, and the widow of Crescentius enjoyed the pleasure or the fame of revenging her husband, by a poison which she administered to her imperial lover. It was the design of Otho the third to abandon the ruder countries of the north, to erect his throne in Italy, and to revive the institutions of the Roman monarchy. But his successors only once in their lives appeared on the banks of the Tiber, to receive their crown in the Vatican.<sup>b</sup> Their absence was contemptible, their presence odious and formidable. They descended from the Alps, at the head of their barbarians, who were strangers and enemies to the country, and their transient visit was a scene of tumult and bloodshed.<sup>c</sup> A faint remembrance of their ancestors still tormented the Romans; and they beheld with pious indignation the succession of Saxons, Franks, Swabians, and Bohemians, who usurped the purple and prerogatives of the Cæsars.

The kingdom of Italy,
A D 774—1240

There is nothing perhaps more adverse to nature and reason than to hold in obedience remote countries and foreign nations, in opposition to their inclination and interest. A torrent of barbarians may pass over the earth, but an extensive empire must be supported by a refined system of policy and oppression in the centre, an absolute power, prompt in action, and rich in resources—a swift and easy communication with the extreme parts—fortifications to check the first effort of rebellion—a regular administration to protect and punish, and a well-disciplined army to inspire fear, without provoking discontent and despair. Far different was the situation of the German Cæsars, who were ambitious to enslave the kingdom of Italy. Their patrimonial estates were stretched along the Rhine, or scattered in the provinces, but this ample domain was alienated by the imprudence or distress of successive princes, and their revenue, from minute and vexatious prerogative, was scarcely sufficient for the maintenance of their household. Their troops were formed by the legal or voluntary service of their feudal vassals, who passed the Alps with reluctance, assumed the licence of rapine and disorder, and capriciously deserted before the end of the campaign. Whole armies were swept away by the pestilential influence of the climate: the survivors brought back the bones of their princes and nobles,<sup>d</sup> and the effects of their own intemperance were often imputed to the treachery and malice of the Italians, who rejoiced at least in the calamities of the barbarians. This irregular tyranny might contend on equal terms with the petty tyrants of Italy, nor can the people, or the reader, be much interested in the event of the quarrel. But in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, the Lombards rekindled the flame of industry and freedom, and the generous example was at length imitated by the republics of Tuscany. In the Italian cities a municipal government had never been totally abolished, and their first privileges were granted by the favour and policy of the emperors, who were desirous of erecting a plebeian barrier against the independence of the nobles. But their rapid progress, the daily extension of their power and pretensions, were founded on the numbers and spirit of these rising communities.<sup>e</sup> Each city filled the measure of her diocese or district: the jurisdiction of the counts and bishops, of the marquises and counts, was banished from the land, and the proudest nobles were persuaded or compelled to desert their solitary castles, and to embrace the more honourable character of freemen and magistrates. The legislative authority was inherent in the general assembly, but the executive powers were intrusted to three consuls, annually chosen from the three orders of captains, valiassors,<sup>f</sup> and commons, into which the republic was divided. Under the protection of

<sup>a</sup> This bloody feast is described in Leonine verse in the Pantheon of Confessors of Viterbo (Script. Ital. tom. vii. p. 436. 437) who flourished towards the end of the twelfth century (Fabricius Bibloth. Latinæ med. et infimæ ævæ tom. iii. p. 69 edit. Mann.) but the evidence which imposed on Sigonius, is reasonably suspected by Muratori (Annali, tom. viii. p. 177).

<sup>b</sup> The coronation of the emperor, and some original ceremonies of the tenth century, are preserved in the Panegyric on Berengar (Script. Ital. tom. ii. pars. i. 40—414) illustrated by the Notes of Hallam, Valentin, and Leibnitz. Sigonius has related the whole process of the Roman expedition in good Latin, but with some errors of time and fact (l. vii. p. 441—446).

<sup>c</sup> In a quarrel at the coronation of Conrad II. Muratori takes leave to observe, dominus tunc exere alloria i disciplinam, Barbari et ceterisq. Teleschi Annal. tom. viii. p. 78.

<sup>d</sup> After boiling away the flesh. The caldrons for that purpose were a necessary piece of travelling furniture: and a German who was writing it for his brother promised it to a friend after it should have been employed for himself (Schmidt tom. iii. p. 423. 424). The same author observes that the whole Saxon line was extinguished in Italy (tom. i. p. 446).

<sup>e</sup> Otho bishop of Frisingen. I have left an important passage on the Italian cities (l. ii. c. 13 in Script. Ital. tom. vi. p. 707—710) and the progress and government of these republics as perfectly illustrated by Muratori (Artiguarial Ital. Me'm. &c. tom. iv. c. 10. c. 11. c. 12. c. 13. c. 14. c. 15. c. 16. c. 17. c. 18. c. 19. c. 20. c. 21. c. 22. c. 23. c. 24. c. 25. c. 26. c. 27. c. 28. c. 29. c. 30. c. 31. c. 32. c. 33. c. 34. c. 35. c. 36. c. 37. c. 38. c. 39. c. 40. c. 41. c. 42. c. 43. c. 44. c. 45. c. 46. c. 47. c. 48. c. 49. c. 50. c. 51. c. 52. c. 53. c. 54. c. 55. c. 56. c. 57. c. 58. c. 59. c. 60. c. 61. c. 62. c. 63. c. 64. c. 65. c. 66. c. 67. c. 68. c. 69. c. 70. c. 71. c. 72. c. 73. c. 74. c. 75. c. 76. c. 77. c. 78. c. 79. c. 80. c. 81. c. 82. c. 83. c. 84. c. 85. c. 86. c. 87. c. 88. c. 89. c. 90. c. 91. c. 92. c. 93. c. 94. c. 95. c. 96. c. 97. c. 98. c. 99. c. 100. c. 101. c. 102. c. 103. c. 104. c. 105. c. 106. c. 107. c. 108. c. 109. c. 110. c. 111. c. 112. c. 113. c. 114. c. 115. c. 116. c. 117. c. 118. c. 119. c. 120. c. 121. c. 122. c. 123. c. 124. c. 125. c. 126. c. 127. c. 128. c. 129. c. 130. c. 131. c. 132. c. 133. c. 134. c. 135. c. 136. c. 137. c. 138. c. 139. c. 140. c. 141. c. 142. c. 143. c. 144. c. 145. c. 146. c. 147. c. 148. c. 149. c. 150. c. 151. c. 152. c. 153. c. 154. c. 155. c. 156. c. 157. c. 158. c. 159. c. 160. c. 161. c. 162. c. 163. c. 164. c. 165. c. 166. c. 167. c. 168. c. 169. c. 170. c. 171. c. 172. c. 173. c. 174. c. 175. c. 176. c. 177. c. 178. c. 179. c. 180. c. 181. c. 182. c. 183. c. 184. c. 185. c. 186. c. 187. c. 188. c. 189. c. 190. c. 191. c. 192. c. 193. c. 194. c. 195. c. 196. c. 197. c. 198. c. 199. c. 200. c. 201. c. 202. c. 203. c. 204. c. 205. c. 206. c. 207. c. 208. c. 209. c. 210. c. 211. c. 212. c. 213. c. 214. c. 215. c. 216. c. 217. c. 218. c. 219. c. 220. c. 221. c. 222. c. 223. c. 224. c. 225. c. 226. c. 227. c. 228. c. 229. c. 230. c. 231. c. 232. c. 233. c. 234. c. 235. c. 236. c. 237. c. 238. c. 239. c. 240. c. 241. c. 242. c. 243. c. 244. c. 245. c. 246. c. 247. c. 248. c. 249. c. 250. c. 251. c. 252. c. 253. c. 254. c. 255. c. 256. c. 257. c. 258. c. 259. c. 260. c. 261. c. 262. c. 263. c. 264. c. 265. c. 266. c. 267. c. 268. c. 269. c. 270. c. 271. c. 272. c. 273. c. 274. c. 275. c. 276. c. 277. c. 278. c. 279. c. 280. c. 281. c. 282. c. 283. c. 284. c. 285. c. 286. c. 287. c. 288. c. 289. c. 290. c. 291. c. 292. c. 293. c. 294. c. 295. c. 296. c. 297. c. 298. c. 299. c. 300. c. 301. c. 302. c. 303. c. 304. c. 305. c. 306. c. 307. c. 308. c. 309. c. 310. c. 311. c. 312. c. 313. c. 314. c. 315. c. 316. c. 317. c. 318. c. 319. c. 320. c. 321. c. 322. c. 323. c. 324. c. 325. c. 326. c. 327. c. 328. c. 329. c. 330. c. 331. c. 332. c. 333. c. 334. c. 335. c. 336. c. 337. c. 338. c. 339. c. 340. c. 341. c. 342. c. 343. c. 344. c. 345. c. 346. c. 347. c. 348. c. 349. c. 350. c. 351. c. 352. c. 353. c. 354. c. 355. c. 356. c. 357. c. 358. c. 359. c. 360. c. 361. c. 362. c. 363. c. 364. c. 365. c. 366. c. 367. c. 368. c. 369. c. 370. c. 371. c. 372. c. 373. c. 374. c. 375. c. 376. c. 377. c. 378. c. 379. c. 380. c. 381. c. 382. c. 383. c. 384. c. 385. c. 386. c. 387. c. 388. c. 389. c. 390. c. 391. c. 392. c. 393. c. 394. c. 395. c. 396. c. 397. c. 398. c. 399. c. 400. c. 401. c. 402. c. 403. c. 404. c. 405. c. 406. c. 407. c. 408. c. 409. c. 410. c. 411. c. 412. c. 413. c. 414. c. 415. c. 416. c. 417. c. 418. c. 419. c. 420. c. 421. c. 422. c. 423. c. 424. c. 425. c. 426. c. 427. c. 428. c. 429. c. 430. c. 431. c. 432. c. 433. c. 434. c. 435. c. 436. c. 437. c. 438. c. 439. c. 440. c. 441. c. 442. c. 443. c. 444. c. 445. c. 446. c. 447. c. 448. c. 449. c. 450. c. 451. c. 452. c. 453. c. 454. c. 455. c. 456. c. 457. c. 458. c. 459. c. 460. c. 461. c. 462. c. 463. c. 464. c. 465. c. 466. c. 467. c. 468. c. 469. c. 470. c. 471. c. 472. c. 473. c. 474. c. 475. c. 476. c. 477. c. 478. c. 479. c. 480. c. 481. c. 482. c. 483. c. 484. c. 485. c. 486. c. 487. c. 488. c. 489. c. 490. c. 491. c. 492. c. 493. c. 494. c. 495. c. 496. c. 497. c. 498. c. 499. c. 500. c. 501. c. 502. c. 503. c. 504. c. 505. c. 506. c. 507. c. 508. c. 509. c. 510. c. 511. c. 512. c. 513. c. 514. c. 515. c. 516. c. 517. c. 518. c. 519. c. 520. c. 521. c. 522. c. 523. c. 524. c. 525. c. 526. c. 527. c. 528. c. 529. c. 530. c. 531. c. 532. c. 533. c. 534. c. 535. c. 536. c. 537. c. 538. c. 539. c. 540. c. 541. c. 542. c. 543. c. 544. c. 545. c. 546. c. 547. c. 548. c. 549. c. 550. c. 551. c. 552. c. 553. c. 554. c. 555. c. 556. c. 557. c. 558. c. 559. c. 560. c. 561. c. 562. c. 563. c. 564. c. 565. c. 566. c. 567. c. 568. c. 569. c. 570. c. 571. c. 572. c. 573. c. 574. c. 575. c. 576. c. 577. c. 578. c. 579. c. 580. c. 581. c. 582. c. 583. c. 584. c. 585. c. 586. c. 587. c. 588. c. 589. c. 590. c. 591. c. 592. c. 593. c. 594. c. 595. c. 596. c. 597. c. 598. c. 599. c. 600. c. 601. c. 602. c. 603. c. 604. c. 605. c. 606. c. 607. c. 608. c. 609. c. 610. c. 611. c. 612. c. 613. c. 614. c. 615. c. 616. c. 617. c. 618. c. 619. c. 620. c. 621. c. 622. c. 623. c. 624. c. 625. c. 626. c. 627. c. 628. c. 629. c. 630. c. 631. c. 632. c. 633. c. 634. c. 635. c. 636. c. 637. c. 638. c. 639. c. 640. c. 641. c. 642. c. 643. c. 644. c. 645. c. 646. c. 647. c. 648. c. 649. c. 650. c. 651. c. 652. c. 653. c. 654. c. 655. c. 656. c. 657. c. 658. c. 659. c. 660. c. 661. c. 662. c. 663. c. 664. c. 665. c. 666. c. 667. c. 668. c. 669. c. 670. c. 671. c. 672. c. 673. c. 674. c. 675. c. 676. c. 677. c. 678. c. 679. c. 680. c. 681. c. 682. c. 683. c. 684. c. 685. c. 686. c. 687. c. 688. c. 689. c. 690. c. 691. c. 692. c. 693. c. 694. c. 695. c. 696. c. 697. c. 698. c. 699. c. 700. c. 701. c. 702. c. 703. c. 704. c. 705. c. 706. c. 707. c. 708. c. 709. c. 710. c. 711. c. 712. c. 713. c. 714. c. 715. c. 716. c. 717. c. 718. c. 719. c. 720. c. 721. c. 722. c. 723. c. 724. c. 725. c. 726. c. 727. c. 728. c. 729. c. 730. c. 731. c. 732. c. 733. c. 734. c. 735. c. 736. c. 737. c. 738. c. 739. c. 740. c. 741. c. 742. c. 743. c. 744. c. 745. c. 746. c. 747. c. 748. c. 749. c. 750. c. 751. c. 752. c. 753. c. 754. c. 755. c. 756. c. 757. c. 758. c. 759. c. 760. c. 761. c. 762. c. 763. c. 764. c. 765. c. 766. c. 767. c. 768. c. 769. c. 770. c. 771. c. 772. c. 773. c. 774. c. 775. c. 776. c. 777. c. 778. c. 779. c. 780. c. 781. c. 782. c. 783. c. 784. c. 785. c. 786. c. 787. c. 788. c. 789. c. 790. c. 791. c. 792. c. 793. c. 794. c. 795. c. 796. c. 797. c. 798. c. 799. c. 800. c. 801. c. 802. c. 803. c. 804. c. 805. c. 806. c. 807. c. 808. c. 809. c. 810. c. 811. c. 812. c. 813. c. 814. c. 815. c. 816. c. 817. c. 818. c. 819. c. 820. c. 821. c. 822. c. 823. c. 824. c. 825. c. 826. c. 827. c. 828. c. 829. c. 830. c. 831. c. 832. c. 833. c. 834. c. 835. c. 836. c. 837. c. 838. c. 839. c. 840. c. 841. c. 842. c. 843. c. 844. c. 845. c. 846. c. 847. c. 848. c. 849. c. 850. c. 851. c. 852. c. 853. c. 854. c. 855. c. 856. c. 857. c. 858. c. 859. c. 860. c. 861. c. 862. c. 863. c. 864. c. 865. c. 866. c. 867. c. 868. c. 869. c. 870. c. 871. c. 872. c. 873. c. 874. c. 875. c. 876. c. 877. c. 878. c. 879. c. 880. c. 881. c. 882. c. 883. c. 884. c. 885. c. 886. c. 887. c. 888. c. 889. c. 890. c. 891. c. 892. c. 893. c. 894. c. 895. c. 896. c. 897. c. 898. c. 899. c. 900. c. 901. c. 902. c. 903. c. 904. c. 905. c. 906. c. 907. c. 908. c. 909. c. 910. c. 911. c. 912. c. 913. c. 914. c. 915. c. 916. c. 917. c. 918. c. 919. c. 920. c. 921. c. 922. c. 923. c. 924. c. 925. c. 926. c. 927. c. 928. c. 929. c. 930. c. 931. c. 932. c. 933. c. 934. c. 935. c. 936. c. 937. c. 938. c. 939. c. 940. c. 941. c. 942. c. 943. c. 944. c. 945. c. 946. c. 947. c. 948. c. 949. c. 950. c. 951. c. 952. c. 953. c. 954. c. 955. c. 956. c. 957. c. 958. c. 959. c. 960. c. 961. c. 962. c. 963. c. 964. c. 965. c. 966. c. 967. c. 968. c. 969. c. 970. c. 971. c. 972. c. 973. c. 974. c. 975. c. 976. c. 977. c. 978. c. 979. c. 980. c. 981. c. 982. c. 983. c. 984. c. 985. c. 986. c. 987. c. 988. c. 989. c. 990. c. 991. c. 992. c. 993. c. 994. c. 995. c. 996. c. 997. c. 998. c. 999. c. 1000. c. 1001. c. 1002. c. 1003. c. 1004. c. 1005. c. 1006. c. 1007. c. 1008. c. 1009. c. 1010. c. 1011. c. 1012. c. 1013. c. 1014. c. 1015. c. 1016. c. 1017. c. 1018. c. 1019. c. 1020. c. 1021. c. 1022. c. 1023. c. 1024. c. 1025. c. 1026. c. 1027. c. 1028. c. 1029. c. 1030. c. 1031. c. 1032. c. 1033. c. 1034. c. 1035. c. 1036. c. 1037. c. 1038. c. 1039. c. 1040. c. 1041. c. 1042. c. 1043. c. 1044. c. 1045. c. 1046. c. 1047. c. 1048. c. 1049. c. 1050. c. 1051. c. 1052. c. 1053. c. 1054. c. 1055. c. 1056. c. 1057. c. 1058. c. 1059. c. 1060. c. 1061. c. 1062. c. 1063. c. 1064. c. 1065. c. 1066. c. 1067. c. 1068. c. 1069. c. 1070. c. 1071. c. 1072. c. 1073. c. 1074. c. 1075. c. 1076. c. 1077. c. 1078. c. 1079. c. 1080. c. 1081. c. 1082. c. 1083. c. 1084. c. 1085. c. 1086. c. 1087. c. 1088. c. 1089. c. 1090. c. 1091. c. 1092. c. 1093. c. 1094. c. 1095. c. 1096. c. 1097. c. 1098. c. 1099. c. 1100. c. 1101. c. 1102. c. 1103. c. 1104. c. 1105. c. 1106. c. 1107. c. 1108. c. 1109. c. 1110. c. 1111. c. 1112. c. 1113. c. 1114. c. 1115. c. 1116. c. 1117. c. 1118. c. 1119. c. 1120. c. 1121. c. 1122. c. 1123. c. 1124. c. 1125. c. 1126. c. 1127. c. 1128. c. 1129. c. 1130. c. 1131. c. 1132. c. 1133. c. 1134. c. 1135. c. 1136. c. 1137. c. 1138. c. 1139. c. 1140. c. 1141. c. 1142. c. 1143. c. 1144. c. 1145. c. 1146. c. 1147. c. 1148. c. 1149. c. 1150. c. 1151. c. 1152. c. 1153. c. 1154. c. 1155. c. 1156. c. 1157. c. 1158. c. 1159. c. 1160. c. 1161. c. 1162. c. 1163. c. 1164. c. 1165. c. 1166. c. 1167. c. 1168. c. 1169. c. 1170. c. 1171. c. 1172. c. 1173. c. 1174. c. 1175. c. 1176. c. 1177. c. 1178. c. 1179. c. 1180. c. 1181. c. 1182. c. 1183. c. 1184. c. 1185. c. 1186. c. 1187. c. 1188. c. 1189. c. 1190. c. 1191. c. 1192. c. 1193. c. 1194. c. 1195. c. 1196. c. 1197. c. 1198. c. 1199. c. 1200. c. 1201. c. 1202. c. 1203. c. 1204. c. 1205. c. 1206. c. 1207. c. 1208. c. 1209. c. 1210. c. 1211. c. 1212. c. 1213. c. 1214. c. 1215. c. 1216. c. 1217. c. 1218. c. 1219. c. 1220. c. 1221. c. 1222. c. 1223. c. 1224. c. 1225. c. 1226. c. 1227. c. 1228. c. 1229. c. 1230. c. 1231. c. 1232. c. 1233. c. 1234. c. 1235. c. 1236. c. 1237. c. 1238. c. 1239. c. 1240. c. 1241. c. 1242. c. 1243. c. 1244. c. 1245. c. 1246. c. 1247. c. 1248. c. 1249. c. 1250. c. 1251. c. 1252. c. 1253. c. 1254. c. 1255. c. 1256. c. 1257. c. 1258. c. 1259. c. 1260. c. 1261. c. 1262. c. 1263. c. 1264. c. 1265. c. 1266. c. 1267. c. 1268. c. 1269. c. 1270. c. 1271. c. 1272. c. 1273. c. 1274. c. 1275. c. 1276. c. 1277. c. 1278. c. 1279. c. 1280. c. 1281. c. 1282. c. 1283. c. 1284. c. 1285. c. 1286. c. 1287. c. 1288. c. 1289. c. 1290. c. 1291. c. 1292. c. 1293. c. 1294. c. 1295. c. 1296. c. 1297. c. 1298. c. 1299. c. 1300. c. 1301. c. 1302. c. 1303. c. 1304. c. 1305. c. 1306. c. 1307. c. 1308. c. 1309. c. 1310. c. 1311. c. 1312. c. 1313. c. 1314. c. 1315. c. 1316. c. 1317. c. 1318. c. 1319. c. 1320. c. 1321. c. 1322. c. 1323. c. 1324. c. 1325. c. 1326. c. 1327. c. 1328. c. 1329. c. 1330. c. 1331. c. 1332. c. 1333. c. 1334. c. 1335. c. 1336. c. 1337. c. 1338. c. 1339. c. 1340. c. 1341. c. 1342. c. 1343. c. 1344. c. 1345. c. 1346. c. 1347. c. 1348. c. 1349. c. 1350. c. 1351. c. 1352. c. 1353. c. 1354. c. 1355. c. 1356. c. 1357. c. 1358. c. 1359. c. 1360. c. 1361. c. 1362. c. 1363. c. 1364. c. 1365. c. 1366. c. 1367. c. 1368. c. 1369. c. 1370. c. 1371. c. 1372. c. 1373. c. 1374. c. 1375. c. 1376. c. 1377. c. 1378. c. 1379. c. 1380. c. 1381. c. 1382. c. 1383. c. 1384. c. 1385. c. 1386. c. 1387. c. 1388. c. 1389. c. 1390. c. 1391. c. 1392. c. 1393. c. 1394. c. 1395. c. 1396. c. 1397. c. 1398. c. 1399. c. 1400. c. 1401. c. 1402. c. 1403. c. 1404. c. 1405. c. 1406. c. 1407. c. 1408. c. 1409. c. 1410. c. 1411. c. 1412. c. 1413. c. 1414. c. 1415. c. 1416. c. 1417. c. 1418. c. 1419. c. 1420. c. 1421. c. 1422. c. 1423. c. 1424. c. 1

equal law, the labours of agriculture and commerce, were gradually revived, but the martial spirit of the Lombards was nourished by the presence of danger, and as often as the bell was rung, or the standards erected, the gates of the city poured forth a numerous and intrepid band, whose zeal in their own cause was soon guided by the use and discipline of arms. At the foot of these popular ramparts, the pride of the Cæsars was overthrown, and the invincible genius of liberty prevailed over the two Frederics, the greatest princes of the middle age: the first, superior perhaps in military prowess, the second, who undoubtedly excelled in the softer accomplishments of peace and learning.

Frederic the first
A D 1152—1199 Ambitious of restoring the splendour of the purple, Frederic the first invaded the republics of Lombardy, with the arts of a statesman, the valour of a soldier, and the cruelty of a tyrant. The recent discovery of the Pandects had renewed a science most favourable to despotism, and his venal advocates proclaimed the emperor the absolute master of the lives and properties of his subjects. His royal prerogatives, in a less odious sense, were acknowledged in the diet of Roncaglia, and the revenue of Italy was fixed at thirty thousand pounds of silver,<sup>b</sup> which were multiplied to an indefinite demand, by the rapine of the fiscal officers. The obstinate cities were reduced by the terror or the force of his arms: his captives were delivered to the executioner, or shot from his military engines, and, after the siege and surrender of Milan, the buildings of that stately capital were razed to the ground, three hundred hostages were sent into Germany, and the inhabitants were dispersed in four villages, under the yoke of the inflexible conqueror. But Milan soon rose from her ashes, and the league of Lombardy was cemented by distress: their cause was espoused by Venice, pope Alexander the third, and the Greek emperor: the fabric of oppression was overturned in a day, and in the treaty of Constantine, Frederic subscribed, with some reservations, the freedom of four and twenty cities. His grand-

Frederic the second,
A D 1194—1250 son contended with their vigour and maturity: but Frederic the second<sup>c</sup> was endowed with some personal and peculiar advantages. His birth and education recommended him to the Italians, and in the implacable discord of the two factions, the Ghibelins were attached to the emperor, while the Guelfs displayed the banner of liberty and the church. The court of Rome had slumbered, when his father Henry the sixth was permitted to unite with the empire the kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and from these hereditary realms, the son derived an ample and ready supply of troops and treasure. Yet Frederic the second was finally oppressed by the arms of the Lombards and the thunders of the Vatican, his kingdom was given to a stranger, and the last of his family was beheaded at Naples on a public scaffold. During sixty years, no emperor appeared in Italy, and the name was remembered only by the ignominious sale of the last relics of sovereignty.

The barbarian conquerors of the west were pleased to decorate their chief with the title of emperor, but it was not their design to invest him with

Independence of the princes of Germany,
A D 814—1250,
&c

the despotism of Constantine and Justinian. The persons of the Germans were free, their conquests were their own, and their national character was animated by a spirit which scorned the servile jurisprudence of the new or the ancient Rome. It would have been a vain and dangerous attempt to impose a monarch on the armed freemen, who were impatient of a magistrate, on the bold, who refused to obey, on the powerful, who aspired to command. The empire of Charlemagne and Otho was distributed among the dukes of the nations or provinces, the counts of the smaller districts, and the margraves of the marches or frontiers, who all united the civil and military authority as it had been delegated to the lieutenants of the first Cæsars. The Roman governors, who, for the most part, were soldiers of fortune, seduced their mercenary legions, assumed the imperial purple, and either failed or succeeded in their revolt, without wounding the power and unity of government. If the dukes, margraves, and counts, of Germany, were less audacious in their claims, the consequences of their success were more lasting and pernicious to the state. Instead of aiming at the supreme rank, they silently laboured to establish and appropriate their provincial independence. Their ambition was seconded by the weight of their estates and vassals, their mutual example and support, the common interest of the subordinate nobility, the change of princes and families, the minorities of Otho the third and Henry the fourth, the ambition of the popes, and the vain pursuit of the fugitive crowns of Italy and Rome. All the attributes of regal and territorial jurisdiction were gradually usurped by the commanders of the provinces, the right of peace and war, of life and death, of coinage and taxation, of foreign alliance and domestic economy. Whatever had been seized by violence, was ratified by favour or distress, was granted as the price of a doubtful vote or a voluntary service, whatever had been granted to one, could not, without injury, be denied to his successor or equal, and every act of local or temporary possession was insensibly moulded into the constitution of the Germanic kingdom. In every province, the visible presence of the duke or count was interposed between the throne and the nobles, the subjects of the law became the vassals of a private chief, and the standard, which he re-

<sup>a</sup> The Lombards invented and used the carrocinum, a standard planted on a car or carro drawn by a team of oxen (Ungar. torn. i. p. 104 105. Minatori, Antiquital tom. ii. diss. xxvii. p. 454—493).

<sup>b</sup> (author ignorant) tom. xxi. el seq. apud Schmidt tom. iii. p. 121.

<sup>c</sup> Siles. imperator faciem suam firmavit ut petram (Barard de

Frederic Monachus Script. Ital. tom. vi. p. 917). This volume of Minatori contains the originals of the history of Frederic the first, which must be compared with due regard to the circumstances and prejudices of each German or Lombard writer.

<sup>d</sup> For the history of Frederic II and the lines of Swabia at Naples, see Grannone Istoria Civile, tom. ii. l. xii—xiv.

ceived from his sovereign, was often raised against him in the field. The temporal power of the clergy was cherished and exalted by the superstition or policy of the Carolingian and Saxon dynasties, who blindly depended on their moderation and fidelity, and the bishoprics of Germany were made equal in extent and privilege, superior in wealth and population, to the most ample states of the military order. As long as the emperors retained the prerogative of bestowing on every vacancy these ecclesiastic and secular benefices, their cause was maintained by the gratitude or ambition of their friends and favourites. But in the quarrel of the investitures, they were deprived of their influence over the episcopal chapters, the freedom of election was restored, and the sovereign was reduced, by a solemn mockery, to his first prayers, the recommendation, once in his reign, to a single prebend in each church. The secular governors, instead of being recalled at the will of a superior, could be degraded only by the sentence of their peers. In the first age of the monarchy, the appointment of the son to the duchy or county of his father, was solicited as a favour, it was gradually obtained as a custom, and extorted as a right: the lineal succession was often extended to the collateral or female branches, the states of the empire (their popular, and at length their legal, appellation) were divided and alienated by testament and sale, and all idea of a public trust was lost in that of a private and perpetual inheritance. The emperor could not even be enriched by the casualties of forfeiture and extinction: within the term of a year, he was obliged to dispose of the vacant fief, and in the choice of the candidate, it was his duty to consult either the general or the provincial diet.

The Germanic constitution,
A D 1200

After the death of Frederic the second, Germany was left a monster with a hundred heads. A crowd of princes and prelates disputed the ruins of the empire: the lords of innumerable castles were less prone to obey, than to imitate, their superiors, and, according to the measure of their strength, their incessant hostilities received the names of conquest or robbery. Such anarchy was the inevitable consequence of the laws and manners of Europe, and the kingdoms of France and Italy were shivered into fragments by the violence of the same tempest. But the Italian cities and the French vassals were divided and destroyed, while the union of the Germans has produced, under the name of an empire, a great system of a federative republic. In the frequent and at last the perpetual institution of diets, a national spirit was kept alive, and the powers of a common legislature are still exercised by the three branches or colleges of the electors, the princes, and the free and imperial cities of Germany. I. Seven of the most powerful feudatories were permitted to assume, with a distinguished name and rank, the exclusive privilege of choosing the Roman emperor, and these electors were the king of Bohemia, the duke of Saxony, the margrave of Brandenburg, the count palatine of the Rhine, and the three archbishops of Mentz, of Treves, and of Cologne. II. The college of princes and prelates purged themselves of a promiscuous multitude: they reduced to four representative votes, the long series of independent counts, and excluded the nobles or equestrian order, sixty thousand of whom, as in the Polish diets, had appeared on horseback in the field of election. III. The pride of birth and dominion, of the sword and the mitre, wisely adopted the commons as the third branch of the legislature, and, in the progress of society, they were introduced about the same æra into the national assemblies of France, England, and Germany. The Hanseatic league commanded the trade and navigation of the north: the confederates of the Rhine secured the peace and intercourse of the inland country: the influence of the cities has been adequate to their wealth and policy, and their negative still invalidates the acts of the two superior colleges of electors and princes.<sup>1</sup>

It is in the fourteenth century that we may view in the strongest light the state and contrast of the Roman empire of Germany, which no longer held, except on the borders of the Rhine and Danube, a single province of Trajan or Constantine. Their unworthy successors were the counts of Hapsburg, of Nassau, of Luxemburg, and of Schwartzburg: the emperor Henry the seventh procured for his son the crown of Bohemia, and his grandson Charles the fourth was born among a people strange and barbarous in the estimation of the Germans themselves.<sup>m</sup> After the excommunication of Lewis of Bavaria, he received the gift or promise of the vacant empire from the Roman pontiffs, who, in the exile and captivity of Avignon, affected the dominion of the earth. The death of his competitors united the electoral college, and Charles was unanimously saluted king of the Romans, and future emperor: a title which, in the same age, was prostituted to the Casars of Germany and Greece. The German emperor was no more than the elective and impotent magistrate of an aristocracy of princes, who had not left him a village that he might call his own. His best prerogative was the right of pre-

Weakness and poverty of the German emperor Charles IV
A D 1317-1378

<sup>1</sup> In the immense labyrinth of the jus publicum of Germany I must either quote one writer or a thousand, and I had rather tra- to one faithful Guide than transcribe on credit, a multitude of names and passages. This Guide is M. Pfeil, the author of the best legal and constitutional history that I know of any country (Nouvel Abrégé Chronologique de l'Histoire et du Droit Public d'Allemagne Paris 1771 2 vols in 4to.) His learning and judgment have discerned the most interesting facts: his simple brevity compresses them in a narrow space: his chronological order distributes them under the proper dates: and an elaborate index collects them under their respective heads. To this work in a less perfect state Dr Robertson was gratefully indebted for that masterly sketch which traces even the modern changes of the Germanic body. The Corpus Historiæ Germanicæ of Struvius has been likewise consulted the more usefully as that huge compilation is cited in every page with the original texts.

<sup>m</sup> Yet, personally Charles IV. must not be considered as a barbarian. After his education at Paris he recovered the use of the German language whom the emperor crowned and we see with equal facility in French Latin Italian and German (Struvius p. 616) Petrarch always represents him as a polite and learned prince.

siding and proposing in the national senate, which was convened at his summons, and his native kingdom of Bohemia, less opulent than the adjacent city of Nuremburgh, was the firmest seat of his power and the richest source of his revenue. The army with which he passed the Alps consisted of three hundred horse. In the cathedral of St. Ambrose, Charles was crowned with the iron crown, which tradition ascribed to the Lombard monarchy, but he was admitted only with a peaceful train, the gates of the city were shut upon him, and the king of Italy was held a captive by the arms of the Visconti, whom he confirmed in the sovereignty of Milan. In the Vatican he was again crowned with the golden crown of the empire, but, in obedience to a secret treaty, the Roman emperor immediately withdrew, without reposing a single night within the walls of Rome. The eloquent Petrarch,<sup>a</sup> whose fancy revived the visionary glories of the capitol, deploras and upbraids the ignominious flight of the Bohemian and even his contemporaries could observe, that the sole exercise of his authority was in the lucrative sale of privileges and titles. The gold of Italy secured the election of his son, but such was the shameful poverty of the Roman emperor, that his person was arrested by a butcher in the streets of Worms, and was detained in the public inn, as a pledge or hostage for the payment of his expenses.

<sup>a</sup> His ostentation,

From this humiliating scene, let us turn to the apparent majesty of the same Charles in the diets of the empire. The golden bull, which fixes the Germanic constitution, is promulgated in the style of a sovereign and legislator. A hundred princes bowed before his throne, and exalted their own dignity by the voluntary honours which they yielded to their chief or minister. At the royal banquet, the hereditary great officers, the seven electors, who in rank and title were equal to kings, performed their solemn and domestic service of the palace. The seals of the triple kingdom were borne in state by the archbishops of Mentz, Cologne, and Treves, the perpetual arch-chancellors of Germany, Italy, and Arles. The great marshal, on horseback, exercised his function with a silver measure of oats, which he emptied on the ground, and immediately dismounted to regulate the order of the guests. The great steward, the count palatine of the Rhine, placed the dishes on the table. The great chamberlain, the margrave of Brandenburg, presented, after the repast, the golden ewer and basin, to wash. The king of Bohemia, as great cup-bearer, was represented by the emperor's brother, the duke of Luxembourg and Brabant, and the procession was closed by the great huntsmen, who introduced a boar and a stag, with a loud chorus of horns and hounds.<sup>b</sup> Nor was the supremacy of the emperor confined to Germany alone: the hereditary monarchs of Europe confessed the pre-eminence of his rank and dignity. He was the first of the christian princes, the temporal head of the great republic of the west.<sup>c</sup> To his person the title of majesty was long appropriated, and he disputed with the pope the sublime prerogative of creating kings and assembling councils. The oracle of the civil law, the learned Bartolus, was a pensioner of Charles the fourth, and his school resounded with the doctrine, that the Roman emperor was the rightful sovereign of the earth, from the rising to the setting sun. The contrary opinion was condemned, not as an error, but as a heresy, since even the gospel had pronounced, "And there went forth a decree from Cæsar Augustus, that all the world should be taxed."<sup>d</sup>

If we annihilate the interval of time and space between Augustus and Charles, strong and striking will be the contrast between the two Cæsars, the Bohemian, who concealed his weakness under the mask of ostentation, and the Roman, who disguised his strength under the semblance of modesty. At the head of his victorious legions, in his reign over the sea and land, from the Nile and Euphrates to the Atlantic ocean, Augustus professed himself the servant of the state and the equal of his fellow-citizens. The conqueror of Rome and her provinces assumed the popular and legal form of a censor, a consul, and a tribune. His will was the law of mankind, but in the declaration of his laws he borrowed the voice of the senate and people, and, from their decrees, their master accepted and renewed his temporary commission to administer the republic. In his dress, his domestics,<sup>e</sup> his titles, in all the offices of social life, Augustus maintained the character of a private Roman, and his most artful flatterers respected the secret of his absolute and perpetual monarchy.

CHAP. L

Description of Arabia and its inhabitants — Birth, character, and doctrine of Mahomet — He preaches at Mecca — Flies to Medina — Propagates his religion by the sword — Voluntary or reluctant submission of the Arabs — His death and successors — The claims and fortunes of Ali and his descendants

AFTER pursuing above six hundred years the fleeting Cæsars of Constantinople and Germany, I now descend, in the reign of Heraclius, on the eastern

<sup>a</sup> Besides the German and Italian historians the expedition of Charles IV. is painted in lively and original colours in the curious Mémoires sur la Vie de Pétrarque, tom. iii. p. 376–430 by the Abbot de Sade, whose prolixity has never been blamed by any reader of taste and curiosity.

<sup>b</sup> See the whole ceremony in Struvius p. 629.

<sup>c</sup> The republic of Europe with the pope and emperor at its head was never represented with more dignity than in the Council of Constance. See L. Infant's History of that assembly.

<sup>d</sup> Grævus Antiquæ Juris Civilis p. 108.

<sup>e</sup> Six thousand urns have been discovered of the slaves and freedmen of Augustus and Livia. So minute was the division of office, that one slave was appointed to wash the wool which was spun by the empress's maids another for the care of her lap dog, &c. (Camere Sepolchrale by Hauchium. Extract of his work, in the Bibliothèque Italique tom. ii. p. 175. His Logos by Fontenelle, tom. ii. p. 356.) But three servants were of the same rank, and possibly not more numerous than those of Pollio or Lælius. They only prove the general riches of the city.

The soil and climate      the epithets of the stony and the sandy Even the wilds of Tartary are decked, by the hand of nature, with lofty trees and luxuriant herbage, and the lonesome traveller derives a sort of comfort and society from the presence of vegetable life. But in the dreary waste of Arabia, a boundless level of sand is intersceted by sharp and naked mountains, and the face of the desert, without shade or shelter, is scorched by the direct and intense rays of a tropical sun. Instead of refreshing breezes, the winds, particularly from the south-west, diffuse a noxious and even deadly vapour, the hillocks of sand which they alternately raise and scatter, are compared to the billows of the ocean, and whole caravans, whole armies, have been lost and buried in the whirlwind. The common benefits of water are an object of desire and contest, and such is the scarcity of wood, that some

art is requisite to preserve and propagate the element of fire. Arabia is destitute of navigable rivers, which fertilize the soil, and convey its produce to the adjacent regions: the torrents that fall from the hills are imbibed by the thirsty earth: the rare and hardy plants, the tamarind or the acacia, that strike their roots into the clefts of the rocks, are nourished by the dews of the night: a scanty supply of rain is collected in cisterns and aqueducts: the wells and springs are the secret treasure of the desert, and the pilgrim of Mecca,* after many a dry and sultry march, is disgusted by the taste of the waters, which have rolled over a bed of sulphur or salt. Such is the general and genuine picture of the climate of Arabia. The experience of evil enhances the value of any local or partial enjoyments. A shady grove, a green pasture, a stream of fresh water, are sufficient to attract a colony of sedentary Arabs to the fortunate spots which can afford food and refreshment to themselves and their cattle, and which encourage their industry in the cultivation of the palm-tree and the vine. The high lands that border on the Indian ocean are distinguished by their superior plenty of wood and water: the air is more temperate, the fruits are more delicious, the animals and the human race more numerous: the fertility of the soil invites and rewards the toil of the husbandman, and the peculiar gifts of frankincense† and coffee have attracted in different ages the merchants of the world. If it be compared with the rest of the peninsula, this sequestered region may truly deserve the appellation of the happy, and the splendid colouring of fancy and fiction has been suggested by contrast, and countenanced by distance. It was for this earthly paradise that nature had reserved her choicest favours and her most curious workmanship: the incompatible blessings of luxury and innocence were ascribed to the natives: the soil was impregnated with gold‡ and gems, and both the land and sea were taught to exhale the odours of aromatic sweets. This division of the sandy, the stony, and the happy, Division of the sandy, the stony, and the happy, is unknown to the Arabians themselves: and it is singular enough, that a country, a As in this and the following chapter I shall display much Arabic learning, I must I profess my total ignorance of the oriental tongues, and my gratitude to the learned interpreter, who have intrusted their science into the Latin French and English languages. Their collections, versions, and histories, I shall occasionally notice.

b The geographers of Arabia may be divided into three classes. 1. The Greeks and Latins, whose progress in knowledge may be traced in Agathangerides (de Mari Rühr) in Hudon, Geograph Minor tom 1) Diodorus Siculus (tom 1 p 111 p 155-167) in p 211-216 edit Weseling) Strabo (l xvi p 1112-1116 from 1400thence p 1122-1172 from Artemidorus) Dionysius, (Periegesis, 92<sup>a</sup>-99<sup>a</sup>) Pliny, (Hist Natur 6 l vi 72) and Ptolemy (Descript et Tabul Urbum, in Hudon, tom ii). 2. The Arabic writers who have treated the subject with the zeal of patriotism or devotion the extracts of Pocock (Specimen Hist Arabum p 125-128) from the Geography of the Sherif al Idrisi render us still more disatisfied with the version or abridgment (p 21-27 44-54 104, & 119 &c) which the Maitonites have published under the absurd title of Geographia Antiqua (Paris 1619) in the Latin and French translation (see in Hudon tom i) and Galland (Voyage de la Pale tine par la Roque p 295-316) have opened to us the Arabic of Abulfeda the most copious and correct account of the peninsula which may be enriched however from the Italian theorie Orientale of D Herbel 1 p 129 et alii 129em. 3. The European travellers among whom Shaw (p 43-45) and Niebuhr (Decription 173. Voyages tom 1 1776) deserve an honourable distinction. Neuchez (Geographic par Bouguer, tom viii p 416-518) has enriched with judgment and D Anville's Maps (O la Orientale Natus and Ire Partie de l'Arie) should lie before the reader, with his

Geographie Ancienne, tom. ii. p. 204—231.

1 Amisid Descript Arabie, p. 1. D Anville li niphate el li Tigre
p. 17 27 It was in this place the paradise or garden of a satrap that Venophon and the Greeks first passed the Euphrate, (Anabasis, l. i. c.
10. p. 22 edit Wells.)

2 A land has proved, with much superfluous learning. 1 That our Red sea (the Arabian gulf) is no more than a part of it. — Vare Nat. hist.
the Leipon Salsum of the ancients, which was extended to the infinite space of the Indus ocean. 2 That the synonym word, gallus, or coluber, allude to the colour of the blacks or negroes. (Dissert. Musci)
tom. i. p. 301—317

3 In the thirty days, or stations between Car and Meera there are fifteen destitute of good water. See the rest of the history, in Indian Travels, p. 477

4 The aromatics especially the stacte — frankincense of Arabia occupy the twelfth book of Pliny. Our great poet (Pars. lib. 1. c. 1. v. 1.) introduces it in a simile the spicy odours that are blown by the northeast wind from the Arabian coast.

—————
Mena a larger

Please with the grateful see it. — Old Ocean son lies.
(Tom. II. Nat. an. 47)

5 Azatharodes affirms, his language is pure and we are forced to take it as an authority to it. It is said that it was written in a silver plate the value of gold (see Mary Robinson, &c.) This is not at all certain because we are not told a longer time we are at present known in Arabia. (See Noble, Desert tom. p. 121.)

whose language and inhabitants have ever been the same, should scarcely retain a vestige of its ancient geography. The maritime districts of Bahrein and Oman are opposite to the realm of Persia. The kingdom of Yemen displays the limits, or at least the situation, of Arabia Felix: the name of Neged is extended over the inland space, and the birth of Mahomet has illustrated the province of Hejaz along the coast of the Red sea.<sup>a</sup>

The measure of population is regulated by the means of subsistence, and the inhabitants of this vast peninsula might be out-numbered by the subjects of a fertile and industrious province. Along the shores of the Persian gulf, of the ocean, and even of the Red sea, the Iethyophagi,<sup>b</sup> or fish-eaters, continued to wander in quest of their precarious food. In this primitive and abject state, which ill deserves the name of society, the human brute, without arts or laws, almost without sense or language, is poorly distinguished from the rest of the animal creation. Generations and ages might roll away in silent oblivion, and the helpless savage was restrained from multiplying his race, by the wants and pursuits which confined his existence to the narrow margin of the sea-coast. But in an early period of antiquity the great body of the Arabs had emerged from this scene of misery, and as the naked wilderness could not maintain a people of hunters, they rose at once to the more secure and plentiful condition of the pastoral life. The same life is uniformly pursued by the roving tribes of the desert, and in the portrait of the modern Bedowees, we may trace the features of their ancestors,<sup>c</sup> who, in the age of Moses or Mahomet, dwelt under similar tents, and conducted their horses, and camels, and sheep, to the same springs and the same pastures. Our toil is lessened, and our wealth is increased, by our dominion over the useful animals: and the Arabian shepherd had acquired the absolute possession of a faithful friend and a laborious slave.<sup>d</sup>

The horse
Arabia, in the opinion of the naturalist, is the genuine and original country of the horse, the climate most propitious, not indeed to the size, but to the spirit and swiftness, of that generous animal. The merit of the Barb, the Spanish, and the English breed, is derived from a mixture of Arabian blood.<sup>e</sup> the Bedowees preserve, with superstitious care, the honours and the memory of the purest race: the males are sold at a high price, but the females are seldom alienated, and the birth of a noble foal was esteemed, among the tribes, as a subject of joy and mutual congratulation. These horses are educated in the tents, among the children of the Arabs, with a tender familiarity, which trains them in the habits of gentleness and attachment. They are accustomed only to walk and to gallop: their sensations are not blunted by the incessant abuse of the spur and the whip: their powers are reserved for the moments of flight and pursuit, but no sooner do they feel the touch of the hand or the stirrup, than they dart away with the swiftness of the wind, and if their friend be dismounted in the rapid career, they instantly stop till he has recovered his seat. In the sands of Africa and Arabia, the camel is a sacred and precious gift.

<sup>a</sup> Consult peruse and study the Specimen Historiæ Arabum of Pocock (Oxon 1690, in 4to.) The thirty pages of text and version are extracted from the Dynasties of Gregory Abulpharagus, which Pocock afterwards translated (Oxon 1663 in 4to.) the three hundred and fifty eight notes form a classic and original work on the Arabian antiquities.

<sup>b</sup> Arias remarks the Iethyophagi of the coast of Hejaz (Periplus Maris Erythræi p. 12) and beyond Ailen (p. 15.) It seems probable that the shores of the Red sea (in the latter sense) were occupied by these savages in the time perhaps of Cyrus: but I can hardly believe that any cannibals were left among the savages in the reign of Justinian (Procop de Bell Persic l. i. c. 19.)

<sup>c</sup> See the Specimen Historiæ Arabum of Pocock p. 25 86 &c. The journey of M. de Arvieux in 1661 to the camp of the emir of Mount Caramel (Voyage de la Palestine Amsterdam, 1718) exhibits a pleasant and original picture of the life of the Bedowees which may be illustrated from Niebuhr (Description de l'Arabie p. 327-341) and

The camel
That strong and patient beast of burden can perform, without eating or drinking, a journey of several days, and a reservoir of fresh water is preserved in a large bag, a fifth stomach of the animal, whose body is imprinted with the marks of servitude: the larger breed is capable of transporting a weight of a thousand pounds, and the dromedary, of a lighter and more active frame, outstrips the fleetest courser in the race. Alive or dead, almost every part of the camel is serviceable to man: her milk is plentiful and nutritious: the younger and tender flesh has the taste of veal: a valuable salt is extracted from the urine: the dung supplies the deficiency of fuel, and the long hair, which falls each year and is renewed, is coarsely manufactured into the garments, the furniture, and the tents of the Bedowees. In the rainy seasons they consume the rare and insufficient herbage of the desert: during the heats of summer and the scarcity of winter, they remove their encampments to the sea-coast, the hills of Yemen, or the neighbourhood of the Euphrates, and have often extorted the dangerous licence of visiting the banks of the Nile, and the villages of Syria and Palestine. The life of a wandering Arab is a life of danger and distress, and though sometimes, by rapine or exchange, he may appropriate the fruits of industry, a private citizen in Europe is in the possession of more solid and pleasing luxury, than the proudest emir, who marches in the field at the head of ten thousand horse.

Yet an essential difference may be found between the hordes of Scythia and the Arabian tribes, since many of the latter were collected into towns, and employed in the labours of trade and agriculture. A part of their time and industry was still devoted to the management

Volney (tom. i. p. 343-385) the first and most judicious of our Syrian travellers.

<sup>d</sup> Reid (it is no unpleasant task) the incomparable articles of the Horse and the Camel, in the Natural History of M. de Buffon.

<sup>e</sup> For the Arabian horses, see D'Arvieux, (p. 159-177) and Niebuhr, (p. 142-144.) At the end of the thirteenth century, the horses of Neged were esteemed sure footed, those of Yemen strong and serviceable: those of Hejaz most noble. The horses of Europe, the tenth and last class, were generally despised as having too much body and too little spirit (D'Herbelot Biblioth. Orient. p. 339) their strength was requisite to bear the weight of the knight and his armour.

<sup>f</sup> Qui carnis camelorum vesci solent odii lenescunt was the opinion of an Arabian physician (Pocock, Specimen, p. 88.) Mahomet himself who was fond of milk preferred the ewe and does not even mention the camel: but the diet of Mecca and Medina was already more luxurious (Gagnier Vie de Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 404.)

of their cattle they mingled, in peace and war, with their brethren of the desert, and the Bedouens derived from their useful intercourse, some supply of their wants, and some rudiments of art and knowledge. Among the forty-two cities of Arabia,<sup>o</sup> enumerated by Abulfeda, the most ancient and populous were situate in the happy Yemen: the towers of Saana,<sup>n</sup> and the marvellous reservoir of Meiab,<sup>n</sup> were constructed by the kings of the Homerites, but their profane lustre was eclipsed by the prophetic glories of MIDDAR<sup>r</sup> and MCCA,<sup>s</sup> near the Red sea, and at the distance from each other of two hundred and seventy miles. The last of these holy places was known to the Greeks under the name of Macoraba, and the termination of the word is expressive of its greatness, which has not indeed, in the most flourishing period, exceeded the size and populousness of Marseilles. Some latent motive, perhaps of superstition, must have impelled the founders, in the choice of a most unpromising situation. They erected their habitations of mud or stone, in a plain about two miles long and one mile broad, at the foot of three barren mountains. the soil is a rock, the water even of the holy well of Zemzem is bitter or brackish, the pastures are remote from the city, and grapes are transported above seventy miles from the gardens of Tayef. The fame and spirit of the Korishites, who reigned in Mecca, were conspicuous among the Arabian tribes, but their ungrateful

Mecca.

her trade

her trade soil refused the labours of agriculture, and their position was favourable to the enterprises of trade. By the sea-port of Gadda, at the distance only of forty miles, they maintained an easy correspondence with Alyssima, and that christian kingdom afforded the first refuge to the disciples of Mahomet. The treasures of Africa were conveyed over the peninsula to Gerrha or Katif, in the province of Bahien, a city built, as it is said, of rock-salt, by the Chaldean exiles; and from thence, with the native pearls of the Persian gulf, they were floated on rafts to the mouth of the Lufhrates. Mecca is placed almost at an equal distance, a month's journey, between Yemen on the right, and Syria on the left hand. The former was the winter, the latter the summer, station of her caravans, and their seasonable arrival relieved the ships of India from the tedious and troublesome navigation of the Red sea. In the markets of Saana and Merab, in the harbours of Oman and Aden, the camels of the Koreishites were laden with a precious cargo of aromatics, a supply of corn and manufactures was purchased in the fairs of Bostra and Damascus, the lucrative exchange diffused plenty and riches in the streets of Mecca, and the noblest of her sons united the love of arms with the profession of merchandize."

The perpetual independence of the Arabs has been the theme of praise among strangers and natives, and the National independence of the Arabs.

National independence of the Arabs

arts of controversy transform this singular event into a prophecy and a miracle, in favour of the posterity of Ismael * Some exceptions, that can neither be dissembled nor eluded, render this mode of reasoning as indiscreet as it is superfluous, the kingdom of Yemen has been successively subdued by the Abyssinians, the Persians, the sultans of Egypt, and the Turks * the holy cities of Mecca and Medina have repeatedly bowed under a Scythian tyrant, and the Roman province of Arabia * embraced the peculiar wilderness in which Ismael and his sons must have pitched their tents in the face of their brethren Yet these exceptions are temporary or local, the body of the nation has escaped the yoke of the most powerful monarchies the arms of Sesostris and Cyrus, of Pompey and Trajan, could never achieve the conquest of Arabia, the present sovereign of the Turks <sup>b</sup> may exercise a shadow of jurisdiction, but his pride is reduced to solicit the friendship of a people, whom it is dangerous to provoke, and fruitless to attack

* Yet Marcellan of Heraclea (in Ptolemy, p. 16 in tom. 1. Hindson Minor Geograph.) reckons one hundred and sixty-four towns in Arabia Felix. The size of the towns might be small—the faith of the writer may not be true.

p. It is compared by Abulfeda (in Hindson tom. iii. p. 54) to Danica, and is still the residence of the Imam of Yemen (Noyse's Niebr tom. i. p. 331—332). Sana is twenty four parangs from Dafir, (Abulfeda, p. 51) and sixty eight from Aden, (p. 53) or Poroch Specimen, p. 37 (Geograph. Antheus, p. 32. Merah, or Merah six milks in circumference, is destroyed by the legions of Augustus, (Plin. Hist. Nat. vi. 32.) and had not revived in the fourteenth century (Alulph. Descript. Arab. p. 58).

The name of early Medina was appropriated, ear'el yar to Ya trach (the Patriarch of the Greeks) the seat of the prophet. The distances from Medina are reckoned by Almuds in stations or days' journey of a caravan (p. 13) to Bahrein Street in Basa a eighteen to English miles; to Dammam or Palermo, twenty to Cairo twenty five, to Mecca ten from Mecca to Sanaa (p. 42); to Aden thirty; to Coora thirty one day or 112 hours (Shau's Travels p. 47) which accord with the estimate of D'Arville (Mémoires Littéraires p. 77), allows about twenty five English miles for a day's journey. From the land of frankincense (Madramant in Yemen, between Aden and Cape Yartach) the way in Syria Phoen (Hist. Nat. xii. 32), computes sixty five mansours of camels. These were used may assist force and elucidate facts.

A Our notions of Mecca must be drawn from the Arabs. (D Herbelot Indisidique Orientale, p 34-37) Plowden, p 12 -128. Al-Mutad p 11-40) As elsewhere it is pointed out, the city, even travellers are silent and the silent hints of Thieriot (Voyage du Levant, part 1, p 451) re taken from the various narratives of the African voyagers. See Plowden, p 128-129
(Thieriot, tom iv p 16)

1. See also, Vol. 10, p. 1110. See one of these with 1 other near base in D. Herbert, D. W. Herbert, p. 6.

In Introcimis legal (Plin Hist Nat v1 72). See Hale & Kr. an. Sisal
 ex p 303. Pocock Specimen, p 2. D. Herbolot Biblioth. Orient p 761. Pridcaux's Life of Malouin p 3. Gagner, Vie de Malouin et thon. p. 72 150 126 &c

so finally demonstrated the truth of Christianity by the conversion of the Arabs. A critic besides the exceptions of last night might quote the meaning of the text, (Genes xvi 12) the extent of the apostasy and the foundation of the pulchre.

y It was established, A D 1173 by a brother of the great S, who also founded a dynasty of Counts of Avoniles (Gonzalez, II, de la Historia, p 42, D Herteld p 47)

See Contarini's list of the Ulluhu in empire, p. 291-292. The public who were ordered at Sana'a commanded twenty-one boys, but because they never remitted to the Ptole (Mazlich Sana'a) in the 911, passed to manna, p. 194 and the Turks were expelled after the year 1070, the ruler, p. 194-195.

[illegible]

b7c - [REDACTED] b7d - [REDACTED]

The obvious causes of their freedom are inscribed on the character and country of the Arabs. Many ages before Mahomet, their intrepid valour had been severely felt by their neighbours in offensive and defensive war. The patient and active virtues of a soldier are insensibly nursed in the habits and discipline of a pastoral life. The care of the sheep and camels is abandoned to the women of the tribe, but the martial youth, under the banner of the emir, is ever on horseback, and in the field, to practise the exercise of the bow, the javelin, and the scymitar. The long memory of their independence is the firmest pledge of its perpetuity, and succeeding generations are animated to prove their descent, and to maintain their inheritance. Their domestic feuds are suspended on the approach of a common enemy, and in their last hostilities against the Turks, the caravan of Mecca was attacked and pillaged by fourscore thousand of the confederates. When they advance to battle, the hope of victory is in the front, in the rear, the assurance of a retreat. Their horses and camels, who in eight or ten days can perform a march of four or five hundred miles, disappear before the conqueror, the secret waters of the desert elude his search, and his victorious troops are consumed with thirst, hunger, and fatigue, in the pursuit of an invisible foe, who scorns his efforts, and safely reposes in the heart of the burning solitude. The arms and deserts of the Bedouens are not only the safeguards of their own freedom, but the barriers also of the Happy Arabia, whose inhabitants, remote from war, are enervated by the luxury of the soil and climate. The legions of Augustus melted away in disease and lassitude,<sup>d</sup> and it is only by a naval power that the reduction of Yemen has been successfully attempted. When Mahomet erected his holy standard,<sup>e</sup> that kingdom was a province of the Persian empire, yet seven princes of the Homerites still reigned in the mountains, and the vicegerent of Chosroes was tempted to forget his distant country and his unfortunate master. The historians of the age of Justinian represent the state of the independent Arabs, who were divided by interest or affection in the long quarrel of the east: the tribe of Gassan was allowed to encamp on the Syrian territory: the princes of Hira were permitted to form a city about forty miles to the southward of the ruins of Babylon. Their service in the field was speedy and vigorous, but their friendship was venal, their faith inconstant, their enmity capricious. It was an easier task to excite than to disarm these roving barbarians, and, in the familiar intercourse of war, they learned to see, and to despise, the splendid weakness both of Rome and of Persia. From Mecca to the Euphrates, the Arabian tribes<sup>f</sup> were confounded by the Greeks and Latins, under the general appellation of SARACENS,<sup>g</sup> a name which every christian mouth has been taught to pronounce with terror and abhorrence.

The slaves of domestic tyranny may vainly exult in their national independence, but the Arab is personally free,<sup>h</sup> and he enjoys, in some degree, the benefits of society, without forfeiting the prerogatives of nature. In every tribe, superstition, or gratitude, or fortune, has exalted a particular family above the heads of their equals. The dignities of sheich and emir invariably descend in this chosen race, but the order of succession is loose and precarious, and the most worthy or aged of the noble kinsmen are preferred to the simple, though important, office of composing disputes by their advice, and guiding valour by their example. Even a female of sense and spirit has been permitted to command the countrymen of Zenobia.<sup>i</sup> The momentary junction of several tribes produces an army, their more lasting union constitutes a nation, and the supreme chief, the emir of emirs, whose banner is displayed at their head, may deserve, in the eyes of strangers, the honours of the kingly name. If the Arabian princes abuse their power, they are quickly punished by the desertion of their subjects, who had been accustomed to a mild and parental jurisdiction. Their spirit is free, their steps are unconfined, the desert is open, and the tribes and families are held together by a mutual and voluntary compact. The softer natives of Yemen supported the pomp and majesty of a monarch, but if he could not leave his palace without endangering his life,<sup>j</sup> the active powers of government must have been devolved on his nobles and magistrates. The cities of Mecca and Medina present, in the heart of Asia, the form, or rather the substance, of a commonwealth. The grandfather of Mahomet, and his lineal ancestors, appear in foreign and domestic transactions as the princes of their country, but they reigned, like Pericles at Athens, or the Medici at Florence, by the opinion of their wisdom and integrity, their influence was divided with their

<sup>d</sup> Diodorus Siculus (tom ii l xiv p 300—303 edit Weseling,) has clearly exposed the freedom of the Nabathian Arabs who resisted the arms of Antigonos and his son.

<sup>e</sup> Strabo, l xvi p 1127—1129. Plin Hist Natur vi 32. Ælius Callis landed near Medina and marched near a thousand miles into the part of Yemen between Mareb and the ocean. The non ante devictis Salor regibus (Od p 1 29) and the Isach Arabum thesauri (Od iii 24) of Horace attest the virgin purity of Arabia.

<sup>f</sup> See the imperfect history of Yemen in Pocock Specimen p 55—66 of Hira, p 61—74 of Gassan, p 75—78 as far as it could be known or preserved in the time of ignorance.

<sup>g</sup> The Σαρακηνά φίλοι μυρίαδες ταύται καὶ τοὶ πλείονες ἀνθρώπων ἐρημότητος καὶ ἀδυστοχίας are described by Menander (Excerpt Iegation p 119) Procopius (de Bell Persic l i c 17 l 9 l ii c 10) and, in the most lively colours by Ammianus Marcellinus, (l xiv c 4) who had spoken of them as early as the reign of Marcus.

<sup>h</sup> The name which used by Ptolemy and Pliny in a more confined, by Ammianus and Procopius in a larger, sense, has been derived, it is said, from Sarah the wife of Abraham obscurely from the village of Saraka (μετὰ Νάβαταροι, Stephan de Urbibus) more plausibly from the Arabic word, which signifies a thievish character or oriental situation (Hollinger, Hist. Oriental l i c 1 p 78 Pocock Specimen p 33 35 Asseman Biblioth Orient tom ii p 567) Yet the last and most popular of these etymologies is refuted by Ptolemy (Arabia p 2 18 in Hudson tom ii) who expressly remarks the western and southern position of the Saraceni, then an obscure tribe on the borders of Egypt. The appellation cannot therefore allude to any national character and since it was imposed by strangers, it must be found, not in the Arabic, but in a foreign language.

<sup>i</sup> Saraceni mulierem in eos regere (Expositio tolmis Mundi, p 3 in Hudson tom ii) The reign of Mavia is famous in ecclesiastical story. Pocock Specimen p 63 83.

<sup>j</sup> Μὴ εἴποιαι ἐκ τῶν βασιλέων, is the report of Agathangides (de Mari Rubro p 63 64 in Hudson tom i) Diodorus Siculus (tom i l i c 47 p 215) and Strabo (l xvi p 1124). But I much suspect that this is one of the popular tales, or extraordinary accidents which the credulity of travellers so often transforms into a fact, a custom and a law.

patrimony, and the sceptre was transferred from the uncles of the prophet to a younger branch of the tribe of Koreish. On solemn occasions they convened the assembly of the people, and since mankind must be either compelled or persuaded to obey, the use and reputation of oratory among the ancient Arabs is the clearest evidence of public freedom.<sup>k</sup> But their simple freedom was of a very different cast from the nice and artificial machinery of the Greek and Roman republics, in which each member possessed an undivided share of the civil and political rights of the community. In the more simple state of the Arabs, the nation is free, because each of her sons disdains a base submission to the will of a master. His breast is fortified with the austere virtues of courage, patience, and sobriety, the love of independence prompts him to exercise the habits of self-command, and the fear of dishonour guards him from the meaner apprehension of pain, of danger, and of death. The gravity and firmness of the mind is conspicuous in his outward demeanour: his speech is slow, weighty, and concise, he is seldom provoked to laughter, his only gesture is that of stroking his beard, the venerable symbol of manhood, and the sense of his own importance teaches him to accost his equals without levity, and his superiors without awe.<sup>l</sup> The liberty of the Saracens survived their conquests: the first caliphs indulged the bold and familiar language of their subjects; they ascended the pulpit to persuade and edify the congregation: nor was it before the seat of empire was removed to the Tigris, that the Abbassides adopted the proud and pompous ceremonial of the Persian and Byzantine courts.

Civil wars and private revenge. In the study of nations and men, we may observe the causes that render them hostile or friendly to each other, that tend to narrow or enlarge, to mollify or exasperate, the social character. The separation of the Arabs from the rest of mankind, has accustomed them to confound the ideas of stranger and enemy, and the poverty of the land has introduced a maxim of jurisprudence, which they believe and practise to the present hour. They pretend, that in the division of the earth, the rich and fertile climates were assigned to the other branches of the human family, and that the posterity of the outlaw Ismael might recover, by fraud or force, the portion of inheritance of which he had been unjustly deprived. According to the remark of Pliny, the Arabian tribes are equally addicted to theft and merchandise: the caravans that traverse the desert are ransomed or pillaged, and their neighbours since the remote times of Job and Sesostrius,<sup>m</sup> have been the victims of their rapa-

<sup>k</sup> Non gloriantur antiquitus Arabes nisi gladio, hospite et eloquentia (Sephadine apud Pocock, Specimen, p. 161, 162.) This gift of speech they shared only with the Persians: and the contentious Arabs would probably have disdained the simple and sublime logic of Demosthenes.

<sup>l</sup> I must remind the reader that D. Arrien, D. Herbelot and Niebuhr, represent, in the most lively colours, the manners and government of the Arabs: which are illustrated by many incidental passages in the life of Mahomet.

<sup>m</sup> Observe the first chapter of Job and the long wall of 1560 stadia which Sesostris built from Pelusium to Heliopolis (Diodor Sicul. tom. i. l. p. 67.) Under the name of Hyacoe, the shepherd king,

cious spirit. If a Bedoween discovers from afar a solitary traveller, he rides furiously against him, crying, with a loud voice, "Undress thyself, thy aunt (my wife) is without a garment." A ready submission entitles him to mercy, resistance will provoke the aggressor, and his own blood must expiate the blood which he presumes to shed in legitimate defence. A single robber, or a few associates, are branded with their genuine name, but the exploits of a numerous band assume the character of a lawful and honourable war. The temper of a people, thus armed against mankind, was doubly inflamed by the domestic licence of rapine, murder, and revenge. In the constitution of Europe, the right of peace and war is now confined to a small, and the actual exercise to a much smaller, list of respectable potentates, but each Arab, with impunity and renown, might point his javelin against the life of his countryman. The union of the nation consisted only in a vague resemblance of language and manners: and in each community, the jurisdiction of the magistrate was mute and impotent. Of the time of ignorance which preceded Mahomet, seventeen hundred battles<sup>n</sup> are recorded by tradition: hostility was imbibed with the rancour of civil faction, and the recital, in prose or verse, of an obsolete feud, was sufficient to rekindle the same passions among the descendants of the hostile tribes. In private life, every man, at least every family, was the judge and avenger of its own cause. The nice sensibility of honour, which weighs the insult rather than the injury, sheds its deadly venom on the quarrels of the Arabs: the honour of their women, and of their beards, is most easily wounded, an indecent action, a contemptuous word, can be expiated only by the blood of the offender, and such is their patient inveteracy, that they expect whole months and years the opportunity of revenge. A fine or compensation for murder is familiar to the barbarians of every age: but in Arabia the kinsmen of the dead are at liberty to accept the atonement, or to exercise with their own hands the law of retaliation. The refined malice of the Arabs refuses even the head of the murderer, substitutes an innocent to the guilty person, and transfers the penalty to the best and most considerable of the race by whom they have been injured. If he falls by their hands, they are exposed in their turn to the danger of reprisals, the interest and principal of the bloody debt are accumulated; the individuals of either family lead a life of malice and suspicion, and fifty years may sometimes elapse before the account of vengeance be finally settled.<sup>o</sup> This sanguinary spirit, ignorant of pity or forgive-

they had formerly subdued Egypt (Marshall, Canon Chron. p. 99—163 &c.)

<sup>n</sup> Or, according to another account 1200 (D. Herbelot, Bibliothèque Orientale p. 75.) the two historians who wrote of the Ayam al Arab the battles of the Arabs, lived in the ninth and tenth century. The famous war of Daher and Gihrah was occasioned by two horses: lasted forty years, and ended in a proverb (Pocock, Specimen, p. 48.)

<sup>o</sup> The modern theory and practice of the Arabs in the revenge of murder are described by Niebuhr (Description, p. 26—31.) The earliest features of antiquity may be traced in the Koran, c. 2 p. 20 c. 17 p. 237 with Sale's Observations.

ness, has been moderated, however, by the maxim of honour, which require in every private encounter some decent equality of age and strength, of numbers and weapons. An annual festival of two, perhaps of four, months, was observed by the Arabs before the time of Mahomet, during which their swords were religiously sheathed both in foreign and domestic hostility, and this partial truce is more strongly expressive of the habits of anarchy and warfare.

But the spirit of rapine and revenge was attempered by the milder influence of trade and literature. The solitary peninsula is encompassed by the most civilized nations of the ancient world: the merchant is the friend of mankind, and the annual caravans imported the first seeds of knowledge and politeness into the cities, and even the camps, of the desert. Whatever may be the pedigree of the Arabs, their language is derived from the same original stock with the Hebrew, the Syriac, and the Chaldean tongues, the independence of the tribes was marked by their peculiar dialects,† but each, after their own, allowed a just preference to the pure and perspicuous idiom of Mecca. In Arabia, as well as in Greece, the perfection of language outstripped the refinement of manners, and her speech could diversify the fourscore names of honey, the two hundred of a serpent, the five hundred of a lion, the thousand of a sword, at a time when this copious dictionary was intrusted to the memory of an illiterate people. The monuments of the Homerites were inscribed with an obsolete and mysterious character, but the Cufic letters, the ground-work of the present alphabet, were invented on the banks of the Euphrates, and the recent invention was taught at Mecca by a stranger who settled in that city after the birth of Mahomet. The arts of grammar, of metre, and of rhetoric, were unknown to the free-born eloquence of the Arabians, but their penetration was sharp, their fancy luxuriant, their wit strong and sententious,‡ and their more elaborate compositions were addressed with energy and effect to the minds of their hearers. The Love of poetry genius and merit of a rising poet was celebrated by the applause of his own and the kindred tribes. A solemn banquet was prepared, and a chorus of women, striking their tymbals, and displaying the pomp of their nuptials, sung in the presence of their sons and husbands the felicity of their native tribe, that a champion had now appeared to vindicate their rights, that a herald had raised his voice to immortalize their renown. The distant or hostile tribes resorted to an annual fair, which was abolished by the fanaticism of the first Moslems, a national assembly that must have contributed to refine and harmonize the barbarians. Thirty days were employed in the exchange, not only of corn and wine, but of eloquence and poetry. The prize was disputed by the generous emulation of the bards, the victorious performance was deposited in the archives of princes and emirs, and we may read in our own language, the seven original poems which were inscribed in letters of gold, and suspended in the temple of Mecca.* The Arabian poets were the historians and moralists of the age, and if they sympathized with the prejudices, they inspired and crowned the virtues, of their countrymen. The indissoluble union of generosity and valour was the darling theme of their song, and when they pointed their keenest satire against a despicable race, they affirmed, in the bitterness of reproach, that the men knew not how to give, nor the women to deny.† The same hospitality, which was practised by Abraham, and celebrated by Homer, is still renewed in the camps of the Arabs. The ferocious Bedouens, the terror of the desert, embrace, without inquiry or hesitation, the stranger who dares to confide in their honour and to enter their tent. His treatment is kind and respectful, he shares the wealth, or the poverty, of his host, and, after a needful repose, he is dismissed on his way, with thanks, with blessings, and perhaps with gifts. The heart and hand are more largely expanded by the wants of a brother or a friend, but the heroic acts that could deserve the public applause, must have surpassed the narrow measure of discretion and experience. A dispute had arisen, who, among the citizens of Mecca, was entitled to the prize of generosity, and a successive application was made to the three who were deemed most worthy of the trial. Abdallah, the son of Abbas, had undertaken a distant journey, and his foot was in the stirrup when he heard the voice of a suppliant, “O son of the uncle of the apostle of God, I am a traveller, and in distress!” He instantly dismounted to present the pilgrim with his camel, her rich caparison, and a purse of four thousand pieces of gold, excepting only the sword, either for its intrinsic value, or as the gift of an honoured kinsman. The servant of Kais informed the second suppliant that his master was asleep, but he immediately added, “Here is a purse of seven thousand pieces of gold, (it is all we have in the house,) and here is an order, that will entitle you to a camel and a slave” the master, as soon as he awoke, praised and enfranchised his faithful steward with a gentle reproof, that by respecting his slumbers he had stinted his bounty. The third of these heroes, the blind Arabah, at the hour of prayer, was supporting his steps on the shoulders of two slaves. "Alas!" he replied, "my coffers are empty! but these you may sell, if you refuse, I renounce them." At these words, pushing away the youths, he groped along the wall with his staff. The character of Hatem is the perfect model of Arabian virtue,* he was brave and liberal, an eloquent poet and a successful robber: forty camels were roasted at his hospitable feast, and at the prayer of a suppliant enemy, he restored both the captives and the spoil. The freedom of his countrymen disdained the laws of justice: they proudly indulged the spontaneous impulse of pity and benevolence.

† Procopius (de Bell. Pers. l. i. c. 16) places the two holy months about the summer solstice. The Arabians consecrate four months of the year—the first seventh, eleventh and twelfth, and pretend that in all the wars of ages the truce was infringed only four or six times. See a Preliminary Discourse, p. 147–150. And see on the ninth chapter of the Koran p. 154 &c. Casiri Biblot. Hispano-Arabica tom. ii. p. 21, 21.

‡ Arabian in the second century, remarks (in Periplo Maris Erythraei p. 12) the partial or total difference of the dialects of the Arabs. Their language and letters are copiously treated by Pocock (Specimen p. 130–134) Casiri, (Biblot. Hispano-Arabica, tom. i. p. 81 seq. in ii. p. 25 &c.) and Niebuhr, (Description de l'Arabie, l. 2. c. 14.) I pass slightly, I am not fond of repeating words like a parrot.

* A familiar tale in Voltaire's Zaïde (le Chien et le Cheval) is related, to prove the natural sagacity of the Arabs. (D. Herbelot, Biblot. Orient. p. 120, 121. Gagner, Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 37–16.) but D. Arrien or rather La Roque (Voyage de Palestine p. 92.) denies the boasted superiority of the Bedouens. The one hundred and sixty nine sentences of Ali (translated by Ockley London, 1718) afford a just and admirable specimen of Arabian wit.

† Pocock (Specimen, p. 129–161) and Casiri (Biblot. Hispano-Arabica, tom. i. p. 48, 84, &c. 119. tom. ii. p. 17 &c.) speak of the Arabian poets before Mahomet, the seven poems of the Caaba have been published in English by sir William Jones, but his innumerable translation to India has deprived us of his own notes, far more interesting than the obscure and obsolete text.

* See a Preliminary Discourse, p. 23, 30.

The religion of the Arabs,* as well as of the Indians, consisted in the worship of the sun, the moon, and the fixed stars, a primitive and specious mode of superstition. The bright luminaries of the sky display the visible image of a Deity: their number and distance convey to a philosophic, or even a vulgar, eye, the idea of boundless space: the character of eternity is marked on these solid globes, that seem incapable of corruption or decay: the regularity of their motions may be ascribed to a principle of reason or instinct, and their real or imaginary influence encourages the vain belief that the earth and its inhabitants are the object of their peculiar care. The science of astronomy was cultivated at Babylon, but the school of the Arabs was a clear firmament and a naked plain. In their nocturnal marches, they steered by the guidance of the stars: their names, and order, and daily station, were familiar to the enthusiasm and devotion of the Bedouen, and he was taught by experience to divide in twenty-eight parts the zodiac of the moon, and to bless the constellations who refreshed, with salutary rains, the thirst of the desert. The reign of the heavenly orbs could not be extended beyond the visible sphere, and some metaphysical powers were necessary to sustain the transmigration of souls and the resurrection of bodies: a camel was left to perish on the grave, that he might serve his master in another life: and the invocation of departed spirits implies that they were still endowed with consciousness and power. I am ignorant, and I am careless, of the blind mythology of the barbarians, of the local deities, of the stars, the air, and the earth, of their sex or titles, their attributes, or subordination. Each tribe, each family, each independent warrior, created and changed the rites and the object of his fantastic worship, but the nation, in every age, has bowed to the religion, as well as to the language, of Mecca. The genuine antiquity of the <sup>The Caaba or</sup> CAABA ascends beyond the christian temple of Mecca. æra in describing the coast of the Red sea, the Greek historian Diodorus† has remarked, between the Thamudites and the Sabæans, a famous temple, whose superior sanctity was revered by all the Arabians: the linen or silken veil, which is annually renewed by the Turkish emperor, was first offered by a pious king of the Homerites, who reigned seven hundred years before the time of Mahomet‡. A tent, or a cavern, might suffice for the worship of the savages, but an edifice of stone and clay has been erected in its place, and the art and power of the monarchs of the east have been confined to the simplicity of the original model§. A spacious portico includes the quadrangle of the Caaba, a square chapel, twenty-four cubits long, twenty-three broad, and twenty-seven high: a door and a window admit the light, the double roof is supported by three pillars of wood, a spout (now of gold) discharges the rain-water, and the well Zemzem is protected by a dome from accidental pollution. The tribe of Koreish, by fraud or force, had acquired the custody of the Caaba: the sacerdotal office devolved through four lineal descents to the grandfather of Mahomet, and the family of the Hashemites, from whence he sprung, was the most respectable and sacred in the eyes of their country||. The precincts of Mecca enjoyed the rights of sanctuary, and, in the last month of each year, the city and temple were crowded with a long train of pilgrims, who presented their vows and offerings in the house of God. The same rites, which are now accomplished by the faithful mussulman, were invented and practised by the superstition of the idolaters. At an awful distance they cast away their garments: seven times, with hasty steps, they encircled the Caaba, and kissed the black stone: seven times they visited and adored the adjacent mountains: seven times they threw stones into the valley of Mina: and the pilgrimage was achieved, as at the present hour, by a sacrifice of sheep and camels, and the burial of their hair and nails in the consecrated ground. Each tribe either found or introduced in the Caaba

* D Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. p. 43. Gagnier, Vie de Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 118. Caab and Hesnus (Pocock, Specimen, p. 43. 46. 48.) were likewise conspicuous for their liberality, and the latter is elegantly praised by an Arabian poet: "Videris cum cum accesseris exilian tem ut si daret illi quod ali illo pelie."

† Whatever can now be known of the idolatry of the ancient Arabians may be found in Pocock (Specimen, p. 89-136. 161, 164). His profound erudition is more clearly and concisely interpreted by Sale, (Preliminary Discourse, p. 11-21) and Assemani (Biblioth. Orient. tom. iv. p. 360-390) has added some valuable remarks.

‡ λεγον ομιματα ιδωται τιμωμενοι το ταριχον γραφον περιπατητορ (Diodor. Sicul. tom. i. lib. p. 211). The character and position are so correctly apposite that I am surprised how this curious passage should have been read without notice or application. Yet this famous temple had been overlooked by Agathangides (de Mari Kibira, p. 54. in Hudson tom. i.) whom Diodorus copies in the rest of the description. Was the Sicilian more knowing, than the Egyptian? Or was the Caaba built between the years of Rome 630 and 730, the dates of their respective histories? (Dodwell, in Dissert. ad tom. i. Hudson, p. 72. Fabricius, Biblioth. Græc. tom. ii. p. 770.)

§ Pocock (Specimen, p. 60, 61) from the death of Mahomet we ascend to 68, from his birth to 120, years, before the christian æra. The veil or curtain which is now of silk and gold was no more than a piece of Egyptian linen (Abulfeda, in Vit. Mohammed, c. 6. p. 14).

|| The original plan of the Caaba (which is very lately copied in Sale, the Universal History &c.) was a Turkish draught, which Richard (de Religi. Mohammedicæ, p. 113-123) has corrected and explained from the best authorities. For the description and legend of the Caaba, consult Pocock, (Specimen p. 115-122.) the Bibliothèque Orientale of D Herbelot (Caaba Hagir, Zemzem, &c.) and Sale (Preliminary Discourse p. 114-122.)

¶ Coe the fifth ancestor of Mahomet must have usurped the Caaba, A. D. 410: but the story is differently told by Jannahi (Gagnier, Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 65-69) and by Abulfeda, (in Vit. Moham. c. 6. p. 12.)

their domestic worship the temple was adorned, or defiled, with three hundred and sixty idols of men, eagles, lions, and antelopes, and most conspicuous was the statue of Hebal, of red agate, holding in his hand seven arrows, without heads or feathers, the instruments and symbols of profane divination. But this statue was a monument of Syrian arts: the devotion of the ruder ages was content with a pillar or a tablet, and the rocks of the desert were hewn into gods or altars, in imitation of the black stone<sup>c</sup> of Mecca, which is deeply tainted with the reproach of an idolatrous origin. From Japan to Peru, the use of sacrifice has universally prevailed, and the votary has expressed his gratitude, or fear, by destroying, or consuming, in honour of the gods, the dearest and most precious of their gifts. The life of a man is the most precious oblation to deprecate a public calamity: the altars of Phœnicia and Egypt, of Rome and Carthage, have been polluted with human gore: the cruel practice was long preserved among the Arabs, in the third century, a boy was annually sacrificed by the tribe of the Dumatians,<sup>e</sup> and a royal captive was piously slaughtered by the prince of the Saracens, the ally and soldier of the emperor Justinian<sup>f</sup>. A parent who drags his son to the altar, exhibits the most painful and sublime effort of fanaticism: the deed, or the intention, was sanctified by the example of saints and heroes, and the father of Mahomet himself was devoted by a rash vow, and hardly ransomed for the equivalent of a hundred camels. In the time of ignorance, the Arabs, like the Jews and Egyptians, abstained from the taste of swine's flesh,<sup>g</sup> they circumcised<sup>h</sup> their children at the age of puberty: the same customs, without the censure or the precept of the Koran, have been silently transmitted to their posterity and proselytes. It has been sagaciously conjectured, that the artful legislator indulged the stubborn prejudices of his countrymen. It is more simple to believe that he adhered to the habits and opinions of his youth, without foreseeing that a practice congenial to the climate of Mecca, might become useless or inconvenient on the banks of the Danube or the Volga.

Arabia was free the adjacent kingdoms were shaken by the storms of conquest and tyranny, and the persecuted sects fled to the happy land where they might profess what they thought, and practise what they professed. The religions of the Sabians and Magians, of the Jews and christians, were disseminated from the Persian gulf to the Red sea. In a remote period of antiquity, Sabianism was diffused over Asia by the science of the Chaldeans<sup>i</sup> and the arms of the Assyrians. From the observations of two thousand years, the priests and astronomers of Babylon<sup>k</sup> deduced the eternal laws of nature and providence. They adored the seven gods, or angels, who directed the course of the seven planets, and shed their irresistible influence on the earth. The attributes of the seven planets, with the twelve signs of the zodiac, and the twenty-four constellations of the northern and southern hemisphere, were represented by images and talismans, the seven days of the week were dedicated to their respective deities, the Sabians prayed three each day, and the temple of the moon at Haran was the term of their pilgrimage<sup>l</sup>. But the flexible genius of their faith was always ready either to teach or to learn: in the tradition of the creation, the deluge, and the patriarchs, they held a singular agreement with their Jewish captives, they appealed to the secret books of Adam, Seth, and Enoch, and a slight infusion of the gospel has transformed the last remnant of the polytheists into the christians of St John, in the territory of Bassora<sup>m</sup>. The altars of Babylon were overturned by the Magians, but the injuries of the Sabians were revenged by the sword of Alexander, Persia groaned above five hundred years under a foreign yoke, and the purest disciples of Zoroaster escaped from the contagion of idolatry, and breathed with their adversaries the freedom of the desert<sup>n</sup>. Seven hundred years before the death of Mahomet, the Jews were settled in Arabia and a far greater mul-

<sup>c</sup> In the second century Maximus of Tyre attributes to the Arabs the worship of a stone—Αραβιοι οεβουσι μεν οντινα δε ουκ οίδα το δε σηνλμα ειπον λιβω εν τετραγωνοις (Disert. viii. tom. i. p. 142 edit. Reiske) and the reproach is furiously reechoed by the christians (Clement Alex. in Protreptico, p. 40. Arnobius contra Gentes l. vi. p. 246). Yet these stones were no other than the baeas of Syria and Greece so renowned in sacred and profane antiquity (Euseb. Prep. l. i. c. 1. p. 37. Marsham, Canon Chron. p. 51. &c.).

<sup>d</sup> The two principal subjects of Αποδοθεια and Προδοθεια are accurately discussed by the learned Sir John Marsham (Canon Chron. p. 76–78. 291–301). Sacellumatio derives the Phœnician sacrifices from the example of Chronus: but we are ignorant whether Chronus lived before or after Abraham or indeed whether he lived at all.

<sup>e</sup> Και εν τωις ισλαμοις ταυτα ειπιοι is the reproach of Porphyry: but he likewise imputes to the Roman the same barbarous custom, which, A. U. C. 657 had been finally abolished. Dumaitha Danonit (at Cendil) is noticed by Ptolemy (Tabul. p. 37. Arab. p. 9–29) and Abulfeda (p. 57) and may be found in D'Anville's maps in the mid desert between Chablar and Admor.

<sup>f</sup> Procopius (de Bell. Persico l. i. c. 28.) Fraguin, (l. vi. c. 21) and Porock (Speemen p. 72. 86.) attest the human sacrifices of the Arab: in the sixth century. The danger and escape of Abdallah is a tradition rather than a fact (Gagner, Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 82–81.).

<sup>g</sup> Switha carnalis abstinent says Solinus (Polyhistor c. 33.) who copies Pliny (l. viii. c. 64.) in the strange supposition that he cannot live in Arabia. The Egyptians were actuated by a natural and superstitious fear for that infernal beast (Marsham, Canon p. 205.) The all Arabians likewise practised post coitum the rite of abortion, (Herodot. l. i. c. 59.) which is sanctified in the Mahometan law (Re-

land p. 75 &c. Chardin, or rather the Mollah of Shah Atlas, tom. iv. p. 71 &c.)

<sup>h</sup> The Mahometan doctors are not fond of the subject: yet they hold circumcision necessary to salvation and even pretend that Mahomet was miraculously born without a foreskin (Porock, Speemen p. 319. 320. Sah's Preliminary Discourse p. 106. 107.)

<sup>i</sup> Diodorus Siculus (tom. i. l. ii. p. 142–145) has cast on their religion the censure of superficial science of a Greek. Their astronomy would be far more valuable: they had looked through the telescope of reason: since they could doubt whether the sun were in the number of the planets or of the fixed stars.

<sup>k</sup> Simplicius (who quotes Porphyry) de Caelo l. ii. com. xlii. p. 123. in 78. apud Marsham Canon Chron. p. 474 who doubts the fact because it is adverse to his system. The earliest date of the Chaldean observations is the year 2251 before Christ. After the conquest of Babylon by Alexander they were communicated at the request of Aristotle to the astronomer Hipparchus. What a moment in the annals of science!

<sup>l</sup> Porock (Speemen p. 138–146.) Holtinger, (Hist. Orient. p. 162–207.) Hyde (de Religione Vet. Persarum p. 124. 128. &c.) D'Herbelot (Sabi p. 725. 726.) and Sale (Preliminary Discourse p. 14. 15.) rather excuse than justify our curiosity and the last of these writers confounds Sabianism with the primitive religion of the Arabs.

<sup>m</sup> D'Anville (l'Empire des le Tigre p. 130–147.) will fix the position of these ambiguous christians. Ascanonius (Biblioth. Oriental. tom. iv. p. 607–614.) may explain their tenets. But it is a slippery task to ascertain the creed of an ignorant people afraid and trained to disclose their secret traditions.

<sup>n</sup> The Magi were fixed in the province of Bahrain, (Gagner, Vie de

titule was expelled from the holy land in the wars of Titus and Hadrian. The industrious exiles aspired to liberty and power: they erected synagogues in the cities, and castles in the wilderness, and their Gentile converts were confounded with the children of Israel, whom they resembled in the outward mark of circumcision. The christian universal reign, the sects whom they oppressed successively retired beyond the limits of the Roman empire, the Marcionites and the Manichæans dispersed their phantastic opinions and apocryphal gospels, the churches of Yemen, and the princes of Hira and Gassan, were instructed in a purer creed by the Jacobite and Nestorian bishops.<sup>a</sup> The liberty of choice was presented to the tribes: each Arab was free to elect or to compose his private religion: and the rude superstition of his house was mingled with the sublime theology of saints and philosophers. A fundamental article of faith was inculcated by the consent of the learned strangers, the existence of one supreme God, who is exalted above the powers of heaven and earth, but who has often revealed himself to mankind by the ministry of his angels and prophets, and whose grace or justice has interrupted, by seasonable miracles, the order of nature. The most rational of the Arabs acknowledged his power, though they neglected his worship,<sup>b</sup> and it was habit rather than conviction that still attached them to the relics of idolatry. The Jews and christians were the people of the book, the Bible was already translated into the Arabic language,<sup>c</sup> and the volume of the Old Testament was accepted by the concord of these implacable enemies. In the story of the Hebrew patriarchs, the Arabs were pleased to discover the fathers of their nation. They applauded the birth and promises of Ismael, revered the faith and virtue of Abraham, traced his pedigree and their own to the creation of the first man, and imbibed with equal credulity the prodigies of the holy text, and the dreams and traditions of the Jewish rabbis.

The christians missionaries were still more active and successful: the catholics asserted their

The base and plebeian origin of Mahomet, Mahomet is an unskilful calumny of the christians,<sup>d</sup> who exalted instead of degrading the merit of their adversary. His descent Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 114) and mingled with the old Arabians (Pocock Specimen p. 146-150).

<sup>a</sup> The state of the Jews and christians in Arabia is described by Pocock from Shiretani &c. (Specimen p. 60, 131, &c.) Hottinger, (Hist. Orient. p. 212-238.) D. Herbelot (Biblioth. Orient. p. 474-476.) Hasnag, (Hist. des Juifs, tom. vii. p. 185, tom. viii. p. 250.) and Salt. (Preliminary Discourse p. 22, &c. 37, &c.)

<sup>b</sup> In their offerings it was a maxim to defraud God for the profit of the idol and a more potent, but a more irritable, patron (Pocock, Specimen p. 108, 109.)

<sup>c</sup> Our versions now extant whether Jewish or christian appear more recent than the Koran: but the existence of a prior translation may be fairly inferred. 1. From the perpetual practice of the synagogues, of expounding the Hebrew lesson by a paraphrase in the vulgar tongue of the country. 2. From the analogy of the Armenian Persian Ethiopic versions expressly quoted by the fathers of the fifth century, who assert that the Scriptures were translated into all the barbaric languages (Wallon Prolegomena ad Biblii Polyglot. p. 34, 63-67. Simon Hist. Critique du V. et du N. Testament tom. i. p. 150, 181, 232-236, 293, 307, 306, tom. ii. p. 296.)

<sup>d</sup> In eo convenient omnes ut plebeio vilique genere ortum &c. (Wallon, &c. Hist. Orient. p. 136.) Yet Theophanes, the most ancient of the Greeks, and the father of many a lie, confesses that Mahomet was of the race of Ismael, εκ γένους ισμαηλινου (Chronographi p. 277.)

from Ismael was a national privilege or fable, but if the first steps of the pedigree<sup>a</sup> are dark and doubtful, he could produce many generations of pure and genuine nobility. He sprung from the tribe of Koreish and the family of Hashem, the most illustrious of the Arabs, the princes of Mecca, and the hereditary guardians of the Caaba. The grandfather of Mahomet was Abdol Motaleb, the son of Hashem, a wealthy and generous citizen, who relieved the distress of famine with the supplies of commerce. Mecca, which had been fed by the liberality of the father, was saved by the courage of the son. The kingdom of Yemen was subject to the christian princes of Abyssinia: their vassal Abrahah was provoked by an insult to avenge the honour of the cross, and the holy city was invested by a train of elephants, and an army of Africans. A treaty was proposed, and, in the first audience, the grandfather of Mahomet demanded the restitution of his cattle. "And why," said Abrahah, "do you not rather implore my clemency in favour of your temple, which I have threatened to destroy?" "Because," replied the intrepid chief, "the cattle is my own, the Caaba belongs to the gods, and they will defend their house from injury and sacrilege." The want of provisions, or the valour of the Koreish, compelled the Abyssinians to a disgraceful retreat. Their discomfiture has been adorned with a miraculous flight of birds, who showered down stones on the heads of the infidels, and the Deliverance of Mecca by the era of the elephant.<sup>b</sup> The glory of Abdol Motaleb was crowned with domestic happiness, his life was prolonged to the age of one hundred and ten years, and he became the father of six daughters and thirteen sons. His best beloved Abdallah was the most beautiful and modest of the Arabian youth, and in the first night, when he consummated his marriage with Amina, of the noble race of the Zahrites, two hundred virgins are said to have expired of jealousy and despair. Mahomet, or more properly Mohammed, the only son of Abdallah and Amina, was born at Mecca, four years after the death of Justinian, and two months after the defeat of the Abyssinians,<sup>c</sup> whose victory would have introduced into the Caaba the religion of the christians. In his early infancy, he was deprived of his father, his mother, and his grandfather, his uncles were strong and numerous, and in the division of the inheritance, the orphan's share was reduced to five camels and an Æthiopian maid-servant. At home and abroad, in peace and war, Abu Taleb, the most respectable of his uncles, was the guide and guardian of his youth, in his twenty-fifth year, he entered into the service of Cadijah, a rich and noble widow of Mecca, who soon rewarded his fidelity with the gift of her hand and fortune. The marriage contract, in the simple style of antiquity, recites the mutual love of Mahomet and Cadijah, describes him as the most accomplished of the tribe of Koreish, and stipulates a dowry of twelve ounces of gold and twenty camels, which was supplied by the liberality of his uncle*. By this alliance the son of Abdallah was restored to the station of his ancestors, and the judicious matron was content with his domestic virtues, till, in the fortieth year of his age,<sup>7</sup> he assumed the title of a prophet, and proclaimed the religion of the Koran.

<sup>a</sup> Abulfeda (in Vit. Mohammed. c. 1, 2.) and Gagnier (Vie de Mahomet, p. 25-27.) describe the popular and approved genealogy of the prophet. At Mecca, I would not dispute its authenticity: at Lausanne, I will venture to observe, 1. That from Ismael to Mahomet, a period of 2500 years they reckon thirty, instead of seventy five, generations. 2. That the modern Bedouens are ignorant of their history and careless of their pedigree. (Voyage de D'Arvieux p. 100, 103.)

<sup>b</sup> The seed of this history, or fable, is contained in the hundred and fifth chapter of the Koran and Gagnier (in Prefat. ad Vit. Moham. p. 18 &c.) has translated the historical narrative of Abulfeda which may be illustrated from D'Herbelot (Biblioth. Orientale, p. 12.) and Pocock (Specimen p. 61.) Pringleaux (Life of Mahomet, p. 48.) calls it a lie of the commerce of Mahomet. But Sale, (Koran, p. 501-507.) who is first a musliman, attacks the inconsistent faith of the doctor for believing the miracles of the Delphic Apollo. Maracci (Alcoran, tom. i. part. ii. p. 14, tom. ii. p. 623.) ascribes the miracle to the devil and extorts from the Mahometans the confession, that God would not have defended against the christians the idols of the Caaba.

<sup>c</sup> The safest eras of Abulfeda (in Vit. c. 1, p. 2.) of Alexander, or the Greeks 682, of Bocht Naser, or Nabonassar, 1316 equally lead us to the year 609. The old Arabian calendar is too dark and uncertain to support the Benedictines (Art. de verifier les Dates, p. 15.) who, from the day of the month and week, deduce a new mode of calculation, and remove the birth of Mahomet to the year of Christ 570, the

Qualifications of the prophet. According to the tradition of his companions, Mahomet* was distinguished by the beauty of his person, an outward gift which is seldom despised, except by those to whom it has been refused. Before he spoke, the orator engaged on his side the affections of a public or private audience. They applauded his commanding presence, his majestic aspect, his piercing eye, his gracious smile, his flowing beard, his countenance that painted every sensation of the soul, and his gestures that enforced each expression of the tongue. In the familiar offices of life he scrupulously adhered to the grave and ceremonious politeness of his country. His respectful attention to the rich and powerful was dignified by his condescension and affability to the poorest citizens of Mecca. The frankness of his manner concealed the artifice of his views, and the habits of courtesy were imputed to personal friendship or universal benevolence. His memory was capacious and retentive, his wit easy and social, his imagination sublime, his judgment clear, rapid, and decisive. He possessed the courage both of thought and action, and, although his designs might gradually expand with his success, the first idea which he entertained of his divine mission bears the stamp of an original and superior genius. The son of Abdallah was educated in the bosom of the noblest race, in the use of the purest dialect of Arabia, and the fluency of his speech was corrected and enhanced by the practice of discreet and seasonable silence. With these powers of eloquence, Mahomet was an illiterate barbarian. His youth had never been instructed in the arts of reading and writing,<sup>a</sup> the common ignorance exempted him from shame or reproach, but he was reduced to a narrow circle of existence, and deprived of those faithful mirrors, which reflect to our mind the minds of sages and heroes. Yet the book of nature and of man was open to his view, and some fancy has been indulged in the political and philosophical observations which are ascribed to the Arabian traveller.<sup>b</sup> He compares the nations and the religions of the earth, discovers the weakness of the Persian and Roman monarchies, beholds, with pity and indignation, the degeneracy of the times, and resolves to unite, under one God and one king, the invincible spirit and primitive virtues of the Arabs. Our more accurate inquiry will suggest, that instead of visiting the courts, the camps, the temples, of the east, the two journeys of Mahomet into Syria were confined to the fairs of Bosra and Damascus: that he was only thirteen years of age when he accompanied the caravan of his uncle, and that his duty compelled him to return as soon as he had disposed of the merchandise of Cadijah. In these hasty and superficial excursions, the eye of genius might discern some objects invisible to his grosser companions, some seeds of knowledge might be cast upon a fruitful soil, but his ignorance of the Syriac language must have checked his curiosity, and I cannot perceive, in the life or writings of Mahomet, that his prospect was far extended beyond the limits of the Arabian world. From every region of that solitary world, the pilgrims of Mecca were annually assembled, by the calls of devotion and commerce. In the free intercourse of multitudes, a simple citizen, in his native tongue, might study the political state and character of the tribes, the theory and practice of the Jews and christians. Some useful strangers might be

10th of November. Yet this date would agree with the year 632 of the Greeks: which is assigned by Elmacin (Hist. Saracen p. 5) and Abulpharagius (Dynast. p. 101 and Errata Pocock's version.) While we refine our chronology, it is possible that the illiterate prophet was ignorant of his own age.

* I copy the honourable testimony of Abu Taleb to his family and nephew. "Ius Dei, qui nos a stirpe Abrahami, et semine Israhel constituit et nobis regionem terrarum dedit, et nos iudices hominum statuit. Porro Muhammadus filius Abdallahi nepos meus (nepos meus) quo enim ex aquo liberabitur e Korashidus quicquam cui non preponeretur et bonitate et excellenti et intellectu et gloria et acumen etiam opum inopis fuerit, (et certe opes umbra transiens sunt et depositum quod reddi debet) deservit Chadijah filiam Chawaileid tenetur, et illa vicem ipsius quicquid autem dedit vix petierit." &c. in the suscipiam (Pocock, Specimen septimæ parte libri Ebn Hisham.)

<sup>7</sup> The private life of Mahomet from his birth to his mission, is preserved by Abulfeda (in Vit. c. 3-7) and the Arabian writers of genuine or apocryphal note who are alleged by Hottinger (Hist. Orient. p. 201-211) Maricel (tom. 1 p. 10-14) and Gagnier (Vie de Mahomet, tom. 1 p. 9-131).

<sup>a</sup> Abulfeda, in Vit. c. lxx lxxi. Gagnier, Vie de Mahomet tom. 1 p. 272-284 the best traditions of the person and conversation of the prophet are derived from Ayesha Ali and Abu Horaira (Gagnier, tom. 1 p. 277 Orkley a list of the Saracens, vol. 1 p. 149) sur-named the Father of a Cat who died in the year 29 of the Hegira.

<sup>a</sup> Those who believe that Mahomet could read or write are incapable of reading what is written, with another pen, in the Surats or Chapters of the Koran in xxix xvi. These texts and the tradition of the Sonns are admitted, without doubt, by Abulfeda, (in Vit. c. vii) Gagnier, (Not. ad Abulfed. p. 15) Pocock, (Specimen p. 151) Reineau, (de Religione Muhammedica, p. 236) and Sale (Preliminary Discourse, p. 42). Mr. White almost alone, denies the ignorance to secure the imposture, of the prophet. His arguments are far from satisfactory. Two short trading journeys to the fairs of Syria, were surely not sufficient to infuse a science so rare among the citizens of Mecca. It was not in the cool deliberate act of a treaty that Mahomet would have dropped the mark nor can any conclusion be drawn from the words of disease and delirium. The lettered youth, before he aspired to the prophetic character, must have often exercised, in private life, the arts of reading and writing: and his first converts of his own family would have been the first to detect and upbraid his seamstress hypocrisy (White's Sermons, p. 203, 204. Notes p. xxxvi-xxxviii).

<sup>b</sup> The Count de Boulainvilliers (Vie de Mahomet, p. 202-228) regards his Arabian pupil like the Telemachus of Fenelon, or the Cyrus of Rameau. His journey to the court of Persia is probably a fiction nor can I trace the origin of his exclamation "Les Grecs sont puerils des hommes." The two Syrian journeys are expressed by almost all the Arabian writers, both Mahometans and christians (Gagnier ad Abulfed. p. 10).

tempted, or forced, to implore the rights of hospitality, and the enemies of Mahomet have named the Jew, the Persian, and the Syrian monk, whom they accuse of lending their secret aid to the composition of the Koran<sup>c</sup>. Conversation enriches the understanding, but solitude is the school of genius, and the uniformity of a work denotes the hand of a single artist. From his earliest youth Mahomet was addicted to religious contemplation each year, during the month of Ramadan, he withdrew from the world, and from the arms of Cadijah in the cave of Hera, three miles from Mecca,<sup>d</sup> he consulted the spirit of fraud or enthusiasm, whose abode is not in the heavens, but in the mind of the prophet. The faith which, under the name of Islam, he preached to his family and nation, is compounded of an eternal truth, and a necessary fiction, THAT THERE IS ONLY ONE GOD, AND THAT MAHOMET IS THE APOSTLE OF GOD.

One God. It is the boast of the Jewish apologists, that while the learned nations of antiquity were deluded by the fables of polytheism, their simple ancestors of Palestine preserved the knowledge and worship of the true God. The moral attributes of Jehovah may not easily be reconciled with the standard of human virtue: his metaphysical qualities are darkly expressed, but each page of the pentateuch and the prophets is an evidence of his power: the unity of his name is inscribed on the first table of the law, and his sanctuary was never defiled by any visible image of the invisible essence. After the ruin of the temple, the faith of the Hebrew exiles was purified, fixed, and enlightened, by the spiritual devotion of the synagogue, and the authority of Mahomet will not justify his perpetual reproach, that the Jews of Mecca or Medina adored Ezra as the son of God<sup>e</sup>. But the children of Israel had ceased to be a people, and the religions of the world were guilty, at least in the eyes of the prophet, of giving sons, or daughters, or companions, to the supreme God. In the rude idolatry of the Arabs, the crime is manifest and audacious: the Sabians are poorly excused by the pre-eminence of the first planet, or intelligence, in their celestial hierarchy, and in the Magian system the conflict of the two principles betrays the imperfection of the conqueror. The christians of the seventh century had insensibly relapsed into a semblance of paganism: their public and private vows were addressed to the relics and images that disgraced the temples of the east: the throne of the Almighty was darkened by a cloud of martyrs, and saints, and angels, the objects of popular veneration, and the Collyridian heretics, who flourished in the fruitful soil of Arabia, invested the Virgin Mary with the name and honours of a goddess<sup>f</sup>. The mysteries of the Trinity and Incarnation appear to contradict the principle of the divine unity. In their obvious sense, they introduce three equal deities, and transform the man Jesus into the substance of the son of God<sup>g</sup>: an orthodox commentary will satisfy only a believing mind: intemperate curiosity and zeal had torn the veil of the sanctuary, and each of the oriental sects was eager to confess that all, except themselves, deserved the reproach of idolatry and polytheism. The creed of Mahomet is free from suspicion or ambiguity, and the Koran is a glorious testimony to the unity of God. The prophet of Mecca rejected the worship of idols and men, of stars and planets, on the rational principle that whatever rises must set, that whatever is born must die, that whatever is corruptible must decay and perish<sup>h</sup>. In the Author of the universe, his rational enthusiasm confessed and adored an infinite and eternal being, without form or place, without issue or similitude, present to our most secret thoughts, existing by the necessity of his own nature, and deriving from himself all moral and intellectual perfection. These sublime truths, thus announced in the language of the prophet,<sup>i</sup> are firmly held by his disciples, and defined with metaphysical precision by the interpreters of the Koran. A philosophic theist might subscribe the popular creed of the Mahometans<sup>k</sup>: a creed too sublime perhaps for our present faculties. What object remains for the fancy, or even the understanding, when we have abstracted from the unknown substance all ideas of time and space, of motion and matter, of sensation and reflection? The first principle of reason and revelation was confirmed by the voice of Mahomet: his proselytes, from India to Morocco, are distinguished by the name of Unitarians, and the danger of idolatry has been prevented by the interdiction of images. The doctrine of eternal decrees and absolute predestination is strictly embraced by the Mahomet-

<sup>c</sup> I am not at leisure to pursue the fables or conjectures which name the strangers accused or suspected by the infidels of Mecca (Koran, c. 16 p. 223 c. 15 p. 227 with Sale's Remarks. Prudentius's Life of Mahomet p. 22-27. Græmer, Not ad Abulph. p. 11 74. Maracci tom. ii. p. 400). L'Évêque Prudentius has observed, that the transaction must have been a creed, and that the scene lay in the heart of Arabia.

<sup>d</sup> Abulph. in Vit. c. 7 p. 15. Gagner, tom. i. p. 133 134. The situation of mount Hera is remarked by Abulph. (Géograph. Arab. p. 4). Yet Mahomet had never read of the cave of Iserit ubi nocturnum Numi consuevit amica, of the Italian mount, where Minos conversed with Jove, &c.

<sup>e</sup> Koran, c. 9 p. 153. Al He dawi, and the other commentators quoted by Sale, adhere to the charge: but I do not understand that it is coloured by the most obscure or absurd tradition of the Talmudists.

<sup>f</sup> Hottinger Hist. Orient. p. 225-228. The Collyridian heresy was carried from Phrygia to Arabia by some woman, and the name was borrowed from the kolayr or cake which they offered to the goddess. This example that of Mary the bishop of Bostra, (Fueh Hist. Eccles. l. vi. c. 33) and several others, may excuse the reproach, Arabia here can scarce directed against our catholic mystery: but the Arabic commentators understand them of the Father, the Son, and the Virgin Mary, an heretical Trinity, mentioned as it is said, by some barbarians at the council of Nice (Lutych Annal. tom. i. p. 410). But the existence of the Muramiles is denied by the candid Beausobre (Hist. de Manichéisme, tom. i. p. 532) and he derives the mistake from the word Rouah the Holy Ghost, which in some oriental tongues is of the feminine gender, and is figuratively styled the mother of Christ in the gospel of the Nazarenes.

<sup>g</sup> The three gods in the Koran (c. 1 p. 81 c. 5 p. 92.) are obviously

<sup>h</sup> This train of thought is philosophically exemplified in the character of Abramam who opposed in Chaldaea the first introduction of idolatry (Koran c. 6 p. 106. D. Herbelot's Biblioth. Orient. p. 13). I see the Koran, particularly the second (p. 10) the fifty-seventh, (p. 437) the fifty-eighth, (p. 441) chapters, which proclaim the omnipotence of the Creator.

<sup>i</sup> The most orthodox creeds are translated by Pocock, (Spécimen p. 274 284-292.) Ockley (Hist. of the Saracens vol. ii. p. lxxxvii-xcvi.) Reland, (de Religion. Moham. l. i. p. 7-13) and Chardin (Voyages en Perse tom. ii. p. 4-28.) The great truth, that God is without similitude is foolishly criticised by Maracci, (Alcoran, tom. i. part. iii. p. 8-91) because he made man after his own image.

ans, and they struggle with the common difficulties, how to reconcile the prescience of God with the freedom and responsibility of man, how to explain the permission of evil under the reign of infinite power and infinite goodness

Mahomet the apostle of God, and the last of the prophets The God of nature has written his existence on all his works, and his law in the heart of man To restore the knowledge of the one, and the practice of the other, has been the real or pretended aim of the prophets of every age the liberality of Mahomet allowed to his predecessors the same credit which he claimed for himself, and the chain of inspiration was prolonged from the fall of Adam to the promulgation of the Koran<sup>1</sup> During that period, some rays of prophetic light had been imparted to one hundred and twenty-four thousand of the elect, discriminated by their respective measure of virtue and grace, three hundred and thirteen apostles were sent with a special commission to recall their country from idolatry and vice, one hundred and four volumes had been dictated by the holy spirit, and six legislators of transcendent brightness have announced to mankind the six successive revelations of various rites, but of one immutable religion The authority and station of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses, Christ, and Mahomet, rise in just gradation above each other, but whosoever hates or rejects any one of the prophets is numbered with the infidels The writings of the patriarchs were extant only in the apocryphal copies of the Greeks and Syrians<sup>2</sup> the conduct of Adam had not entitled him to the gratitude or respect of his children, the seven precepts of Noah were observed by an inferior and imperfect class of the proselytes of the synagogue,<sup>3</sup> and the memory of Abraham was obscurely revered by the Sabians in his native land of Chaldaea of the myriads of prophets, Moses and Christ alone lived and reigned, and the remnant of the inspired writings was comprised in the books of the Old and the New Testament The miraculous story

Moses of Moses is consecrated and embellished in the Koran,<sup>4</sup> and the captive Jews enjoy the secret revenge of imposing their own belief on the nations whose recent creeds they

<sup>1</sup> Reland de Reli. Mosam l. i. p. 17—47 Sale's Preliminary Discourse, p. 73—76 Voyage de Chardin, tom. ii. p. 28—37 and 37—47 for the Persian addition, "Ah is the vice of God" Yet the precise number of prophets is not an article of faith

<sup>2</sup> For the apocryphal books of Adam see Fabricius Codex Pseudepigraphus V. T. p. 27—29 of Sall. p. 151—157 of I. Noeh p. 160—210 But the book of I. Noeh is consecrated, in some measure, by the quotation of the apostle St. Jude, and a long legendary fragment is alleged by Synellus and Scaliger

<sup>3</sup> The seven precepts of Noah are explained by Myrham, (Canon Chronicon p. 154—180) who adopts on this occasion, the learning and credibility of Selden

<sup>4</sup> The articles of Adam, Noah, Abraham, Moses &c in the Bibliotheca of D. Herbelin are fairly bedecked with the fanciful legends of the Mahometans, who have built on the ground work of Scripture and the Talmud

<sup>5</sup> Koran c. 7 p. 123 &c c. 10 p. 171 &c D'Herbelin, p. 647 &c q. Koran c. 3 p. 40 c. 4 p. 80 D'Herbelin, p. 309, &c

<sup>6</sup> See the gospel of St. Thomas or of the infancy in the Codex Apocryphus N. T. of Fabricius who collects the various testimonies concerning it (p. 125—129) It was published in Greek by C. Lelher, and in Arabic by Sike, who thinks our present copy more recent than Mahomet Yet his quotations agree with the original about the speech of Christ in his terrible hissing, words of clay, &c (Sike i. l. p. 165 166 c. 3 p. 107 109 c. 47 p. 206 Catechet. c. 2 p. 161 161)

<sup>7</sup> It is darkly hinted in the Koran (c. 7 p. 9) and more clearly explained by the tradition of the Soumites (Sale's Note, and Maracci,

deride For the author of christianity, the Mahometans are taught by the prophet to entertain a high and mysterious reverence<sup>7</sup> "Verily, Christ Jesus, the son of Mary, is the apostle of God, and his word, which he conveyed into Mary, and a Spirit proceeding from him honourable in this world, and in the world to come, and one of those who approach near to the presence of God"<sup>8</sup> The wonders of the genuine and apocryphal gospels<sup>9</sup> are profusely heaped on his head, and the Latin church has not disdained to borrow from the Koran the immaculate conception<sup>10</sup> of his virgin mother Yet Jesus was a mere mortal, and, at the day of judgment, his testimony will serve to condemn both the Jews, who reject him as a prophet, and the christians, who adore him as the Son of God The malice of his enemies aspersed his reputation, and conspired against his life, but their intention only was guilty, a phantom or a criminal was substituted on the cross, and the innocent saint was translated to the seventh heaven During six hundred years the gospel was the way of truth and salvation, but the christians insensibly forgot both the laws and the example of their founder, and Mahomet was instructed by the Gnostics to accuse the church, as well as the synagogue, of corrupting the integrity of the sacred text<sup>11</sup> The piety of Moses and of Christ rejoiced in the assurance of a future prophet, more illustrious than themselves the evangelic promise of the Paraclete, or Holy Ghost, was prefigured in the name, and accomplished in the person, of Mahomet,<sup>12</sup> the greatest and last of the apostles of God

The communication of ideas requires The Koran a similitude of thought and language the discourse of a philosopher would vibrate without effect on the ear of a peasant, yet how minute is the distance of their understandings, if it be compared with the contact of an infinite and finite mind, with the word of God expressed by the tongue or the pen of a mortal<sup>13</sup> The inspiration of the Hebrew prophets, of the apostles and evangelists of Christ, might not be incompatible with the exercise of their reason and memory, and the diversity of their genius is strongly marked in the style and

tom. ii. p. 112) In the twelfth century, the immaculate conception was condemned by St. Bernard as a presumptuous novelty (Fra Paolo, Istoria del Concilio di Trento l. ii.)

<sup>8</sup> See the Koran c. 3 v. 53 and c. 4 v. 156 of Maracci's edition Deus est presertissimus in se agnitionem (an odd phrase) nec crucifixerunt eum sed obiecta est eis similitudo an expression that may suit with the system of the Docetes but the commentators believe, (Maracci, tom. ii. p. 113—115 173 Sale, p. 42, 43, 79) that another man a friend or an enemy, was crucified in the likeness of Jesus a fable which they had read in the gospel of St. Barnabas and which had been striven as early as the time of Irenaeus by some Ebionite heretics (Beausobre Hist. du Manichisme, tom. ii. p. 21 Mosheim de Reli. Christ. p. 353)

<sup>9</sup> This charge is obscurely urged in the Koran (c. 3 p. 45) but neither Mahomet, nor his followers are sufficiently versed in languages and criticism to give any weight or colour in their suspicion Yet the Ariane and Nestorian could relate some stories and the illiterate priest might listen to the bold assertions of the Manichaeans See Beausobre, tom. i. p. 291—305

<sup>10</sup> Among the prophecies of the Old and New Testament, which are perverted by the fraud or ignorance of the musulmans, they apply to the prophet the promise of the Paraclete or Comforter which had been already usurped by the Montanists and Manichaeans (Beausobre, Hist. Critique du Manichisme tom. i. p. 263 &c) and the easy change of letters παράκλητος for παράκλητος affords the etymology of the name of Mohammed (Maracci, tom. i. part i. p. 15—28)

composition of the books of the Old and New Testament. But Mahomet was content with a character more humble, yet more sublime, of a simple editor the substance of the Koran, according to himself or his disciples, is uncreated and eternal, subsisting in the essence of the Deity, and inscribed with a pen of light on the table of his everlasting decrees. A paper copy, in a volume of silk and gems, was brought down to the lowest heaven by the angel Gabriel, who, under the Jewish economy, had indeed been despatched on the most important errands, and this trusty messenger successively revealed the chapters and verses to the Arabian prophet. Instead of a perpetual and perfect measure of the divine will, the fragments of the Koran were produced at the discretion of Mahomet, each revelation is suited to the emergencies of his policy or passion, and all contradiction is removed by the saving maxim, that any text of scripture is abrogated or modified by any subsequent passage. The word of God, and of the apostle, was diligently recorded by his disciples on palm-leaves and the shoulder-bones of mutton, and the pages, without order or connexion, were cast into a domestic chest in the custody of one of his wives. Two years after the death of Mahomet, the sacred volume was collected and published by his friend and successor Abubeker: the work was revised by the caliph Othman, in the thirtieth year of the Hegira, and the various editions of the Koran assert the same miraculous privilege of a uniform and incorruptible text. In the spirit of enthusiasm or vanity, the prophet rests the truth of his mission on the merit of his book, audaciously challenges both men and angels to imitate the beauties of a single page, and presumes to assert that God alone could dictate this incomparable performance. This argument is most powerfully addressed to a devout Arabian, whose mind is attuned to faith and rapture, whose ear is delighted by the music of sounds, and whose ignorance is incapable of comparing the productions of human genius. The harmony and copiousness of style will not reach, in a version, the European infidel: he will peruse with impatience the endless incoherent rhapsody of fable, and precept, and declamation, which seldom excites a sentiment or an idea, which sometimes crawls in the dust, and is sometimes lost in the clouds. The divine attributes exalt the fancy of the Arabian missionary, but his loftiest strains must yield to the sublime simplicity of the book of Job, composed in a remote age, in the same country, and in the same language. If the composition of the Koran exceed the faculties of a man, to what superior intelligence should we ascribe the Iliad of Homer, or the Philippics of Demosthenes? In all religions, the life of the founder supplies the silence of his written revelation: the sayings of Mahomet were so many lessons of truth, his actions so many examples of virtue, and the public and private memorials were preserved by his wives and companions. At the end of two hundred years, the Sonna, or oral law, was fixed and consecrated by the labours of Al Bochari, who discriminated seven thousand two hundred and seventy-five genuine traditions, from a mass of three hundred thousand reports, of a more doubtful or spurious character. Each day the pious author prayed in the temple of Mecca, and performed his ablutions with the water of Zemzem: the pages were successively deposited on the pulpit, and the sepulchre of the apostle, and the work has been approved by the four orthodox sects of the Sonnites.

The mission of the ancient prophets, Miracles of Moses and of Jesus, had been confirmed by many splendid prodigies, and Mahomet was repeatedly urged, by the inhabitants of Mecca and Medina, to produce a similar evidence of his divine legation, to call down from heaven the angel or the volume of his revelation, to create a garden in the desert, or to kindle a conflagration in the unbelieving city. As often as he is pressed by the demands of the Koreish, he involves himself in the obscure boast of vision and prophecy, appeals to the internal proofs of his doctrine, and shields himself behind the providence of God, who refuses those signs and wonders that would depreciate the merit of faith, and aggravate the guilt of infidelity. But the modest or angry tone of his apologies betrays his weakness and vexation, and these passages of scandal establish, beyond suspicion, the integrity of the Koran. The votaries of Mahomet are more assured than himself of his miraculous gifts, and their confidence and credulity increase as they are further removed from the time and place of his spiritual exploits. They believe or affirm that trees went forth to meet him, that he was saluted by stones, that water gushed from his fingers, that he fed the hungry, cured the sick, and raised the dead, that a beam groaned to him, that a camel complained to him, that a shoulder of mutton informed him of its being poisoned, and that both animate and inanimate nature were equally subject to the apostle of God. His dream of a nocturnal journey

<sup>a</sup> For the Koran, see D Herbelot p 86—88. Maraesi, tom. i in Vit Mohammed p 32—45. Sale Preliminary Discourse p 56—70. Koran, c 17 v 69. In Sale, p 230. 236. In Maraesi, p 410.

<sup>b</sup> Yet a seal of Arabian was persuaded that it might be equalled or surpassed by a human pen, (Pocock Specimen, p 221, &c) and Maraesi (the polemic is too hard for the translator) derives the rhyming ascription of the most applauded passage, (tom. i part ii p 62—70.)

<sup>c</sup> Colloquia (whether real or fabulous) in media Arabia alque ab Arabibus habita (Louth de Poesi Hebraeorum Praefat. xxxii xxxiii xxxiv with the German editor Michaelis Epimetron iv.) Yet Michaelis (p 671—673) has detected many Egyptian images: the elephantiasis, papyrus Nile crocodile, &c. The language is ambiguously styled, Arabico Hebraea. The resemblance of the sister dialects was much more visible in their childhood than in their mature age (Michaelis, p 682. Schultens, in Praefat. Job.)

<sup>d</sup> Al Bochari died A. H. 221. See D Herbelot, p 209. 416. 827. Gagner, Not ad Abulph. c 19 p 33.

<sup>e</sup> See more remarkably, Koran, c 2. 6. 12, 13. 17. Prideaux (Life of Mahomet p 18, 19) has confuted the impostor Maraesi, with a more learned apparatus, has shown that the passages which deny his miracles are clear and positive, (Alcoran, tom. i part ii p 7—12.) and those which seem to assert them are ambiguous and insufficient, (p 12—22.)

<sup>f</sup> See the Specimen Hist. Arabum, the text of Abulpharragus, p 17. the notes of Pocock p 187—190. D Herbelot Bibliotheca Orientalis, p 76. 77. Voyages de Chardin tom. iv p 200—203. Maraesi (Alcoran, tom. i p 22—61) has most laboriously collected and confuted the

is seriously described as a real and corporeal transaction. A mysterious animal, the Borak, conveyed him from the temple of Mecca to that of Jerusalem with his companion Gabriel, he successively ascended the seven heavens, and received and repaid the salutations of the patriarchs, the prophets, and the angels, in their respective mansions. Beyond the seventh heaven, Mahomet alone was permitted to proceed, he passed the veil of unity, approached within two bow-shots of the throne, and felt a cold that pierced him to the heart, when his shoulder was touched by the hand of God. After this familiar though important conversation, he again descended to Jerusalem, remounted the Borak, returned to Mecca, and performed in the tenth part of a night the journey of many thousand years.<sup>f</sup>
According to another legend, the apostle confounded in a national assembly the malicious challenge of the Koreishi. His resistless word split asunder the orb of the moon, the obedient planet stooped from her station in the sky, accomplished the seven revolutions round the Ciabr, saluted Mahomet in the Arabian tongue, and suddenly contracting her dimensions, entered at the collar, and issued forth through the sleeve, of his shirt.<sup>g</sup> The vulgar are amused with the marvellous tales, but the gravest of the mussulman doctors imitate the modesty of their master, and indulge a latitude of faith or interpretation.<sup>h</sup> They might speciously allege, that in preaching the religion, it was needless to violate the harmony, of nature, that a creed unclouded with mystery may be excused from miracles, and that the sword of Mahomet was not less potent than the rod of Moses.

Precepts of Mahomet—prayer, fasting, alms

The polytheist is oppressed and distracted by the variety of superstition a thousand rites of Egyptian origin were interwoven with the essence of the Mosaic law, and the spirit of the gospel had evaporated in the pagantry of the church. The prophet of Mecca was tempted by prejudice, or policy, or patriotism, to sanctify the rites of the Arabians, and the custom of visiting the holy stone of the Caaba. But the precepts of Mahomet himself inculcate a more simple and rational piety: prayer, fasting, and alms, are the religious duties of a mussulman, and he is encouraged to hope, that prayer will carry him half way to God, fasting will bring him to the door miracles and prophecies of Mahomet, which, according to some writers, amount to three thousand

<sup>f</sup> The nocturnal journey is circumstantially related by Abulfeda, (in Vit. Mohammed c. 19 p. 33) who wishes to think it a vision by Prideaux, (p. 31—40) who, gravates the absurdities and by Gagner, (tom. i. p. 352—343) who declares, from the zealous Al Jannabi that to deny this journey is to disbelieve the Koran. Yet the Koran without naming either heaven or Jerusalem or Mecca has only dropt a mysterious hint. Laus illi qui transiit servum suum al oratorio Hiram ad oratorium remotissimum (Koran, c. 17 v. 1 in Varacci, tom. ii. p.
407 for Sale's version is more ridiculous.) A slender basis for the aerial structure of tradition.

<sup>g</sup> In the prophetic style, which uses the present or past for the future Mahomet had said: Appropinquavit hora ei scissa est luna (Koran, c.
54 v. 1 in Maracci tom. ii. p. 688). This figure of rhetoric has been converted into a fact, which is said to be attested by the most respectable eye witnesses (Maracci tom. ii. p. 690). The festival is still celebrated by the Persians (Chardin tom. iv. p. 201) and the legend is tediously spun out by Gagner, (Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 182—234) on the faith, as it should seem, of the credulous Al Jannabi. Yet a Mussulman doctor has arraigned the credit of the principal witness (apud Pocock, Specimen, p. 187) the best interpreters are content with of his palace, and alms will gain him admittance.<sup>i</sup>

According to the tradition of the nocturnal journey, the apostle, in his personal conference with the Deity, was commanded to impose on his disciples the daily obligation of fifty prayers. By the advice of Moses, he applied for an alleviation of this intolerable burthen, the number was gradually reduced to five, without any dispensation of business or pleasure, or time or place, the devotion of the faithful is repeated at day-break, at noon, in the afternoon, in the evening, and at the first watch of the night, and, in the present decay of religious fervour, our travellers are edified by the profound humility and attention of the Turks and Persians.
Cleanliness is the key of prayer: the frequent lusu-tration of the hands, the face, and the body, which was practised of old by the Arabs, is solemnly enjoined by the Koran, and a permission is formally granted to supply with sand the scarcity of water.
The words and attitudes of supplication, as it is performed either sitting, or standing, or prostrate on the ground, are prescribed by custom or authority, but the prayer is poured forth in short and fervent ejaculations, the measure of zeal is not exhausted by a tedious liturgy, and each mussulman, for his own person, is invested with the character of a priest. Among the theists, who reject the use of images, it has been found necessary to restrain the wanderings of the fancy, by directing the eye and the thought towards a libla, or visible point of the horizon. The prophet was at first inclined to gratify the Jews by the choice of Jerusalem, but he soon returned to a more natural partiality, and five times every day the eyes of the nations at Astracan, at Fez, at Delhi, are devoutly turned to the holy temple of Mecca. Yet every spot for the service of God is equally pure: the Mahometans indifferently pray in their chamber or in the street.
As a distinction from the Jews and christians, the Friday in each week is set apart for the useful institution of public worship: the people are assembled in the mosque and the imam, some respectable elder, ascends the pulpit, to begin the prayer and pronounce the sermon. But the Mahometan religion is destitute of priesthood or sacrifice, and the independent spirit of fanaticism looks down with contempt on the ministers and slaves of superstition.

II The voluntary penance of the ascetics, the torture the simple sense of the Koran (Al Beidawi apud Hottinger, Hist.
Orient. | ii. p. 302) and the silence of Abulfeda is worthy of a prince and a philosopher.

<sup>h</sup> Abulfaragius, in Specimen Hist. Arab. p. 17 and his scepticism is justified in the notes of Pocock, p. 190—191 from the purest authorities.

<sup>i</sup> The most authentic account of these precepts: pilgrimage, prayer, fasting, alms and abstinences is extracted from the Persian and Arabian theologians by Maracci (Prodomus part iv. p. 7—24) Reland, (in his excellent treatise de Religione Mohammedica, Utrecht 1717 p. 67—123) and Chardin (Voyages en Perse tom. iv. p. 47—195). Maracci is a partial seer but the jeweller, Chardin, had the eyes of a philosopher and Reland, a judicious student had travelled over the east in his travels at Utrecht. The fourteenth letter of Tournefort (Voyage du Levant, tom. ii. p. 375—360 in octavo) describes what he had seen of the religion of the Turks.

<sup>k</sup> Mahomet (Sale's Koran, c. 9 p. 153) reproaches the christians with taking their priests and monks for their lords: besides God. Yet Mar-racci (Prodomus, part iii. p. 69 70) excuses the worship especially of the pope, and quotes from the Koran itself the case of Iblis, or Satan, who was cast from heaven for refusing to adore Adam.

ment and glory of their lives, was odious to a prophet who censured in his companions a rash vow of abstaining from flesh, and women, and sleep, and firmly declared, that he would suffer no monks in his religion.<sup>1</sup> Yet he instituted, in each year, a fast of thirty days, and strenuously recommended the observance, as a discipline which purifies the soul and subdues the body, as a salutary exercise of obedience to the will of God and his apostle. During the month of Ramadan, from the rising to the setting of the sun, the mussulman abstains from eating, and drinking, and women, and baths, and perfumes, from all nourishment that can restore his strength from all pleasure that can gratify his senses. In the revolution of the lunar year, the Ramadan coincides, by turns, with the winter cold and the summer heat, and the patient martyr, without assuaging his thirst with a drop of water, must expect the close of a tedious and sultry day. The interdiction of wine, peculiar to some orders of priests or hermits, is converted by Mahomet alone into a positive and general law,<sup>2</sup> and a considerable portion of the globe has obeyed, at his command, the use of this salutary, though dangerous, liquor. These painful restraints are, doubtless, infringed by the libertine, and eluded by the hypocrite; but the legislator, by whom they are enacted, cannot surely be accused of alluring his proselytes by the indulgence of their sensual appetites. III. The charity of the Mahometans descends to the animal creation, and the Koran repeatedly inculcates, not as a merit, but as a strict and indispensable duty, the relief of the indigent and unfortunate. Mahomet, perhaps, is the only lawgiver who has defined the precise measure of charity: the standard may vary with the degree and nature of property, as it consists either in money, in corn or cattle, in fruits or merchandise, but the mussulman does not accomplish the law, unless he bestows a tenth of his revenue, and if his conscience accuses him of fraud or extortion, the tenth, under the idea of restitution, is enlarged to a fifth.<sup>3</sup> Benevolence is the foundation of justice, since we are forbid to injure those whom we are bound to assist. A prophet may reveal the secrets of heaven and of futurity, but in his moral precepts he can only repeat the lessons of our own hearts.

Resurrection The two articles of belief, and the four practical duties of Islam, are guarded by rewards and punishments, and the faith of the mussulman is devoutly fixed on the event of the judgment and the last day. The prophet has not presumed to determine the moment of that awful catastrophe, though he darkly announces the signs, both in heaven and earth, which will precede the universal dissolution, when life shall be destroyed, and the order of creation shall be confounded in the primitive chaos. At the blast of the trumpet, new worlds will start into being, angels, genii, and men, will arise from the dead, and the human soul will again be united to the body. The doctrine of the resurrection was first entertained by the Egyptians,<sup>4</sup> and their mummies were embalmed, their pyramids were constructed, to preserve the ancient mansion of the soul, during a period of three thousand years. But the attempt is partial and unavailing, and it is with a more philosophic spirit that Mahomet relies on the omnipotence of the Creator, whose word can re-animate the breathless clay, and collect the innumerable atoms, that no longer retain their form or substance.<sup>5</sup> The intermediate state of the soul it is hard to decide, and those who most firmly believe her immaterial nature, are at a loss to understand how she can think or act without the agency of the organs of sense.

The reunion of the soul and body Hell and paradise will be followed by the final judgment of mankind; and, in his copy of the Magian picture, the prophet has too faithfully represented the forms of proceeding, and even the slow and successive operations, of an earthly tribunal. By his intolerant adversaries he is upbraided for extending, even to themselves, the hope of salvation, for asserting the blackest heresy, that every man who believes in God, and accomplishes good works, may expect in the last day a favourable sentence. Such rational indifference is ill adapted to the character of a fanatic, nor is it probable that a messenger from heaven should deprecate the value and necessity of his own revelation. In the idiom of the Koran,<sup>6</sup> the belief of God is inseparable from that of Mahomet: the good works are those which he had enjoined, and the two qualifications imply the profession of Islam, to which all nations and all sects are equally invited. Their spiritual blindness, though excused by ignorance and crowned with virtue, will be scourged with everlasting torments, and the tears which Mahomet shed over the tomb of his mother, for whom he was forbidden to pray, display a striking contrast of humanity and enthusiasm.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Koran c. 5 p. 94 and Sale's note, which refers to the authority of Jallalodin and Al Firdausi. D. Herbert declares that Mahomet could not have been a monk, and that the first swarms of false deities, &c. did not appear till after the year 700 of the Hegira (Biblioth. Orient. p. 292, 718).

<sup>2</sup> See the double prohibition (Koran, c. 2 p. 25 c. 5 p. 91) the one in the style of a legislator, the other in that of a fanatic. The public and private motives of Mahomet are investigated by Prédreau (Life of Mahomet, p. 62-64) and Sale (Preliminary Discourse, p. 121).

<sup>3</sup> The jealousy of Maracci (Prodromus, part iv. p. 33) prompts him to enumerate the more liberal aims of the catholics of Rome. Fifteen hundred hospitals are open to many thousand patients and pilgrims, fifteen hundred maidens are annually portioned, fifty six charity schools are founded for both sexes, one hundred and twenty confraternities relieve the wants of their brethren, &c. The benevolence of London is still more extensive, but I am afraid that much more is to be ascribed to the humanity than to the religion of the people.

<sup>4</sup> See Herodotus (I. ii. c. 123) and our learned countryman Sir John

Marshall (Caenon Chironicus p. 46). The Adept of the same writer (p. 24-27) is an elaborate sketch of the infernal regions, as they were painted by the fancy of the Egyptians and Greeks, of the poets and philosophers of antiquity.

<sup>5</sup> The Koran (c. 2 p. 293, &c. of Sale, p. 72, of Maracci, p. 97) relates an innumerable miracle, which satisfied the curiosity, and confirmed the faith, of Abraham.

<sup>6</sup> The candid Iteland has demonstrated, that Mahomet damns all unbelievers, (de Religion Moham. p. 128-142) that devils will not be finally saved (p. 168-197) that paradise will not solely consist of corporeal delights, (p. 199-203) and that women's souls are immortal, (p. 205-209).

<sup>7</sup> Al Baidhawi apud Sale Koran, c. 9 p. 164. The refusal to pray for an unbeliever, kindred, is justified, according to Mahomet, by the duty of a prophet, and the example of Abraham, who reproached his own father as an enemy of God. Yet Abraham (he adds, c. 9 v. 110 Maracci, tom. ii. p. 317) still some piety, mitis.

The doom of the infidels is common the measure of their guilt and punishment is determined by the degree of evidence which they have rejected, by the magnitude of the errors which they have entertained the eternal mansions of the christians, the Jews, the Sabians, the Magians, and the idolaters, are sunk below each other in the abyss, and the lowest hell is reserved for the faithless hypocrites who have assumed the mask of religion After the greater part of mankind has been condemned for their opinions, the true believers only will be judged by their actions The good and evil of each mussulman will be accurately weighed in a real or allegorical balance, and a singular mode of compensation will be allowed for the payment of injuries the aggressor will refund an equivalent of his own good actions, for the benefit of the person whom he has wronged, and if he should be destitute of any moral property, the weight of his sins will be loaded with an adequate share of the demerits of the sufferer According as the shares of guilt or virtue shall preponderate, the sentence will be pronounced, and all, without distinction, will pass over the sharp and perilous bridge of the abyss, but the innocent, treading in the footsteps of Mahomet, will gloriously enter the gates of paradise, while the guilty will fall into the first and mildest of the seven hells The term of expiation will vary from nine hundred to seven thousand years, but the prophet has judiciously promised, that all his disciples, whatever may be their sins, shall be saved, by their own faith and his intercession, from eternal damnation It is not surprising that superstition should yet most powerfully on the fears of her votaries, since the human fancy can paint with more energy the misery than the bliss of a future life With the two simple elements of darkness and fire, we create a sensation of pain, which may be aggravated to an infinite degree by the idea of endless duration But the same idea operates with an opposite effect on the continuity of pleasure, and too much of our present enjoyments is obtained from the relief, or the comparison, of evil It is natural enough that an Arabian prophet should dwell with raptures on the groves, the fountains, and the rivers, of paradise, but instead of inspiring the blessed inhabitants with a liberal taste for harmony and science, conversation and friendship, he idly celebrates the pearls and diamonds,

the robes of silk, palaces of marble, dishes of gold, rich wines, artificial dainties, numerous attendants, and the whole train of sensual and costly luxury, which becomes insipid to the owner, even in the short period of this mortal life Seventy-two hours, or black-eyed girls, of resplendent beauty, blooming youth, virgin purity, and exquisite sensibility, will be created for the use of the meanest believer, a moment of pleasure will be prolonged to a thousand years, and his faculties will be increased an hundred-fold, to render him worthy of his felicity Notwithstanding a vulgar prejudice, the gates of heaven will be open to both sexes, but Mahomet has not specified the male companions of the female elect, lest he should either alarm the jealousy of their former husbands, or disturb their felicity, by the suspicion of an everlasting marriage This image of a carnal paradise has provoked the indignation, perhaps the envy, of the monks, they declaim against the impure religion of Mahomet, and his modest apologists are driven to the poor excuse of figures and allegories But the sounder and more consistent party adhere, without shame, to the literal interpretation of the Koran useless would be the resurrection of the body, unless it were restored to the possession and exercise of its worthiest faculties, and the union of sensual and intellectual enjoyment is requisite to complete the happiness of the double animal, the perfect man Yet the joys of the Mahometan paradise will not be confined to the indulgence of luxury and appetite, and the prophet has expressly declared, that all meaner happiness will be forgotten and despised by the saints and martyrs, who shall be admitted to the beatitude of the divine vision*

The first and most arduous conquests of Mahomet<sup>1</sup> were those of his wife, his servant, his pupil, and his friend,<sup>a</sup> since he presented himself as a prophet to those who were most conversant with his infirmities as a man Yet Cadijah believed the words, and cherished the glory, of her husband, the obsequious and affectionate Zeid was tempted by the prospect of freedom, the illustrious Ali, the son of Abu Taleb, embraced the sentiments of his cousin with the spirit of a youthful hero, and the wealth, the moderation, the veracity of Abubeker, confirmed the religion of the prophet whom he was destined preaches at Mecca

Mahomet
A D 609

* For the div of judgment, hell paradise &c consult the Koran, (c 2 v 20 c 56 78 &c) with Maracci's virulent, but learned refutation (in his notes and in the Proilomus part iv p 78 120 122 &c) D Herbelot (Bibliothèque Orientale p 358, 375) Reland, (p 47-61) and Sale (p 78-103) The original ideas of the Magi are darkly and doubtfully explored by their apologist Dr Hyde (Hist Religions Persarum c 32 p 402-412 Oxon 1760) In the article of Mahomet, Bayle has shown how indifferently wit and philosophy supply the absence of genuine information

<sup>a</sup> Before I enter on the history of the prophet it is incumbent on me to produce my evidence. The Latin French and English versions of the Koran are preceded by historical discourses, and the three translators Maracci (tom i p 10-32) Savary, (tom i p 1-248) and Sale, (Preliminary Discourse p 33-56) had accurately studied the language and character of their author Two professed lives of Mahomet have been composed by Dr Prideaux (Life of Mahomet seventh edition London 1718 in octavo) and the Count de Boulainvilliers (Vie de Mahomet, Londres 1730 in octavo) but the adverse wish of fudging an impostor or a hero has too often corrupted the learning of the doctor and the integrity of the count The article in D Herbelot (Biblot Orient p 598-603) is chiefly drawn from No-

vair and Mircond, but the best and most authentic of our guides is Al Gagnier a Frenchman by birth and professor at Oxford of the oriental tongues In two elaborate works (Ismael Aïoubi de Vité et Rebus gestis Mohammedis &c Lathoe veritit Prefatione et Notis illustravit Johannes Gagnier Oxon 1723 in folio La Vie de Mahomet traduite et complie de l'Alcoran, des Traditions authentiques de la Sonnet et des meilleurs Auteurs Arabes Amsterdam 1748, 3 vols in 12mo) he has interpreted illustrated and supplied the Arabic text of Abul feda and Al Janoubi the first an enlightened prince, who reigned at Hamah in Syria A D 1310-1332 (see Gagnier Prefat ad Abulfed) the second a credulous doctor, who visited Mecca A D 1556 (D'Herbelot p 307 Gagnier tom iii p 209, 210) These are my general vouchers and the inquisitive reader may follow the order of time, and the division of chapters Yet I must observe, that both Abulfeda and Al Janoubi are modern historians, and that they cannot appeal to any writers of the first century of the Hejira

<sup>a</sup> After the Greeks, Prideaux (p 8) discloses the secret double life of the wife of Mahomet. As if he had been a privy councillor of the prophet, Boulainvilliers (p 272 &c) unfolds the sublime and patriotic views of Cadijah and the first disciples to succeed. By his persuasion, ten of the most respectable citizens of Mecca were introduced to the private lessons of Islam, they yielded to the voice of reason and enthusiasm, they repeated the fundamental creed, "there is but one God, and Mahomet is the apostle of God," and their faith, even in this life, was rewarded with riches and honours, with the command of armies and the government of kingdoms. Three years were silently employed in the conversion of fourteen proselytes, the first-fruits of his mission, but in the fourth year he assumed the prophetic office, and resolving to impart to his family the light of divine truth, he prepared a braquet, a lamb, as it is said, and a bowl of milk, for the entertainment of forty guests of the race of Hashem. "Friends and kinsmen" said Mahomet to the assembly, "I offer you, and I alone can offer, the most precious of gifts, the treasures of this world and of the world to come. God has commanded me to call you to his service. Who among you will support my burthen? Who among you will be my companion and my vizir?" No answer was returned, till the silence of astonishment, and doubt, and contempt, was at length broken by the impatient courage of Ali, a youth in the fourteenth year of his age. "O prophet, I am the man, whosoever rises against thee, I will dash out his teeth, tear out his eyes, break his legs, rip up his belly. O prophet, I will be thy vizir over them." Mahomet accepted his offer with transport, and Abu Taleb was ironically exhorted to respect the superior dignity of his son. In a more serious tone, the father of Ali advised his nephew to relinquish his impracticable design. "Spare your remonstrances," replied the intrepid fanatic to his uncle and benefactor, "if they should place the sun on my right-hand, and the moon on my left, they should not divert me from my course." He persevered ten years in the exercise of his mission, and the religion which has overspread the east and west, advanced with a slow and painful progress within the walls of Mecca. Yet Mahomet enjoyed the satisfaction of beholding the increase of his infant congregation of Unitarians, who revered him as a prophet, and to whom he seasonably dispensed the spiritual nourishment of the Koran. The number of proselytes may be estimated by the absence of eighty-three men and eighteen women, who retired to Ethiopia in the seventh year of his mission, and his party was fortified by the timely conversion of his uncle Hamza, and of the fierce and inflexible Omar, who signalized in the cause of Islam the same zeal which he had exerted for its destruction. Nor was the charity of Mahomet confined to the tribe of Koreish, or the precincts of Mecca. On solemn festivals, in the days of pilgrimage, he frequented the Caaba, accosted the strangers of every tribe, and urged, both in private converse and public discourse, the belief and worship of a sole Deity. Conscious of his reason and of his weakness, he asserted the liberty of conscience, and disclaimed the use of religious violence; but he called the Arabs to repentance, and conjured them to remember the ancient idolators of Ad and Thamud, whom the divine justice had swept away from the face of the earth.*

The people of Mecca were hardened in their unbelief by superstition and envy. The chiefs of the city, the uncles of the prophet, affected to despise the presumption of an orphan, the reformer of his country. The pious orations of Mahomet in the Caaba were answered by the clamours of Abu Taleb. "Citizens and pilgrims, listen not to the tempter, hearken not to his impious novelties. Stand fast in the worship of Al Lita and Al Uzza!" Yet the son of Abdallah was ever dear to the aged chief, and he protected the same and person of his nephew against the assaults of the Koreishites, who had long been jealous of the pre-eminence of the family of Hashem. Their malice was coloured with the pretence of religion. In the age of Job, the crime of impiety was punished by the Arabian magistrate,<sup>a</sup> and Mahomet was guilty of deserting and denying the national deities. But so loose was the policy of Mecca, that the leaders of the Koreish, instead of accusing a criminal, were compelled to employ the measures of persuasion or violence. They repeatedly addressed Abu Taleb in the style of reproach and menace. "Thy nephew, reviles our religion, he accuses our wise forefathers of ignorance and folly. Silence him quickly, lest he kindle tumult and discord in the city. If he persevere, we shall draw our swords against him and his adherents, and thou wilt be responsible for the blood of thy fellow-citizens." The weight and moderation of Abu Taleb eluded the violence of religious faction, the most helpless or timid of the disciples retired to Ethiopia, and the prophet withdrew himself to various places of strength in the town and country. As he was still supported by his family, the rest of the tribe of Koreish engaged themselves to renounce all intercourse with the children of Hashem, neither to buy nor sell, neither to marry nor to give in marriage, but to pursue them with implacable enmity, till they should deliver the person of Mahomet to the justice of the gods. The decree was suspended in the Caaba before the eyes of the nation, the

Is opposed by the Koreish
A. D. 613-622

* Yezirah portitor, bofulus, onus ferens, and this plebeian name was transferred by an apt metaphor to the pillars of the state (Gloss. not ad Abuifed p. 10) I endeavour to preserve the Arabian idiom, as far as I can feel it myself, in a Latin or French translation.
† The passages of the Koran in behalf of toleration are strong, and numerous. c. 2 v. 257 c. 16 129 c. 17 64 c. 4, 15 c. 50 39 c. 48 21, &c. with the notes of Maracci and Sale. This character alone may generally decide the doubts of the learned, whether a chapter was revealed at Mecca or Medina.
‡ See the Koran, (passim and especially c. 7 p. 123, 124 &c.) and the tradition of the Arabs (Pocock, Specimen, p. 3-37) The caveins of the tribe of Thamud, fit for men of the ordinary stature, were shown in the midway between Medina and Damascus (Abuifed Arabia Descript. p. 47, 14) and may be probably ascribed in the Egyptian dykes of the primitive world (Michaëlis, ad Lowth de Poët. Hebræorum p. 111-114 Recherches sur les Egyptiens, tom. ii. p. 38, &c.)

§ In the time of Job, the crime of impiety was punished by the Arabian magistrate, (c. 17 v. 20-24) I blush for a respectable priest, (de Poët. Hebræorum, p. 650, 61) edit. Michaëlis; and bitter of a late professor in the university of Oxford, (p. 15-53) who justifies and applauds this patriarchal inquisition.

messengers of the Koreish pursued the mussulman exiles in the heart of Africa they besieged the prophet and his most faithful followers, intercepted their water, and inflamed their mutual animosity by the retaliation of injuries and insults. A doubtful truce restored the appearances of concord, till the death of Abu Taleb abandoned Mahomet to the power of his enemies, at the moment when he was deprived of his domestic comforts by the loss of his faithful and generous Cadijah. Abu Sophian, the chief of the branch of Ommiyah, succeeded to the principality of the republic of Mecca. A zealous votary of the idols, a mortal foe of the line of Hashem, he convened an assembly of the Koreishites and their allies, to decide the fate of the apostle. His imprisonment might provoke the despair of his enthusiasm, and the exile of an eloquent and popular fanatic would diffuse the mischief through the provinces of Arabia. His death was resolved, and they agreed that a sword from each tribe should be buried in his heart, to divide the guilt of his blood, and baffle the vengeance of the Hashemites. An angel or a spy revealed their conspiracy, and flight was the only resource of Mahomet.<sup>b</sup> At the dead of night, accompanied by his friend Abubeker, he silently escaped from his house. The assassins watched at the door, but they were deceived by the figure of Ali, who reposed on the bed, and was covered with the green vestment of the apostle. The Koreish respected the piety of the heroic youth, but some verses of Ali, which are still extant, exhibit an interesting picture of his anxiety, his tenderness, and his religious confidence. Three days Mahomet and his companion were concealed in the cave of Thor, at the distance of a league from Mecca, and in the close of each evening, they received, from the son and daughter of Abubeker, a secret supply of intelligence and food. The diligence of the Koreish explored every haunt in the neighbourhood of the city, they arrived at the entrance of the cavern, but the providential deceit of a spider's web and a pigeon's nest, is supposed to convince them that the place was solitary and inviolate. "We are only two," said the trembling Abubeker. "There is a third," replied the prophet, "it is God himself." No sooner was the pursuit abated, than the two fugitives issued from the rock, and mounted their camels on the road to Medina, they were overtaken by the emissaries of the Koreish, they redeemed themselves with prayers and promises from their hands. In this eventful moment, the lance of an Arab might have changed the history of the world. The flight of the prophet from Mecca to Medina has fixed the memorable era of the Hegira,<sup>c</sup> which, at the end of twelve centuries, still discriminates the lunar years of the Mahometan nations.<sup>d</sup>

The religion of the Koran might have perished in its cradle, had not Medina embraced with faith and reverence the holy outcasts of Mecca. Medina, or the city, known under the name of Yathreb, before it was sanctified by the throne of the prophet, was divided between the tribes of the Charegites and the Awsites, whose hereditary feud was rekindled by the slightest provocations. Two colonies of Jews, who boasted a sacerdotal race, were their humble allies, and without converting the Arabs, they introduced the taste of science and religion, which distinguished Medina as the city of the book. Some of her noblest citizens, in a pilgrimage to the Caaba, were converted by the preaching of Mahomet. On their return they diffused the belief of God and his prophet, and the new alliance was ratified by their deputies in two secret and nocturnal interviews on a hill in the suburbs of Mecca. In the first, ten Charegites and two Awsites united in faith and love, protested in the name of their wives, their children, and their absent brethren, that they would for ever profess the creed, and observe the precepts, of the Koran. The second was a political association, the first vital spark of the empire of the Saracens. Seventy-three men and two women of Medina held a solemn conference with Mahomet, his kinsmen, and his disciples, and pledged themselves to each other by a mutual oath of fidelity. They promised in the name of the city, that if he should be banished, they would receive him as a confederate, obey him as a leader, and defend him to the last extremity, like their wives and children. "But if you are recalled by your country," they asked with a flattering anxiety, "will you not abandon your new allies?" "All things," replied Mahomet with a smile, "are now common between us: your blood is as my blood, your ruin as my ruin. We are bound to each other by the ties of honour and interest. I am your friend, and the enemy of your foes." "But if we are killed in your service, what," exclaimed the deputies of Medina, "will be our reward?" "PARADISE," replied the prophet. "Stretch forth thy hand." He stretched it forth, and they reiterated the oath of allegiance and fidelity. Their treaty was ratified by the people, who unanimously embraced the profession of Islam, they rejoiced in the exile of the apostle, but they trembled for his safety, and impatiently expected his arrival. After a perilous and rapid journey along the sea-coast, he halted at Koba, two miles from the city, and made his public entry into Medina, sixteen days after his flight from Mecca. Five hundred of the citizens advanced to meet him,

<sup>b</sup> D Herbelot Biblioth. Orient. p. 445. He quotes a particular history of the flight of Mahomet.

<sup>c</sup> The Hegira was instituted by Omar, the second caliph, in imitation of the era of the martyrs of the Christians, (D Herbelot p. 444) and properly commenced sixty-eight days before the flight of Mahomet, with the first of Moharrem, or first day of that Arabian year, which coincides with Friday July 16th, A. D. 622. (Abulfeda, Vi. Moham. c. 22, 23 p. 45-50, and Greaves's edition of Ulug Beig's Epochæ Arabum, &c. l. p. 8, 10, &c.)

<sup>d</sup> Mahomet's life, from his mission to the Hegira, may be found in Abulfeda (p. 11-45) and Gagner, (tom. i. p. 134-251, 342-393). The legend from p. 187-234 is vouched by Al Jaunibi, and disavowed by Abulfeda.

<sup>e</sup> The triple inauguration of Mahomet is described by Abulfeda (p. 30, 33, 40, 86) and Gagner, (tom. i. p. 342, &c. 349, &c. tom. ii. p. 223, &c.)

he was hailed with acclamations of loyalty and devotion, Mahomet was mounted on a she-camel, an umbrella shaded his head, and a turban was unfurled before him to supply the deficiency of a standard. His bravest disciples, who had been scattered by the storm, assembled round his person and the equal though various merit of the Moslems was distinguished by the names of Mohaqerians and Ansars, the fugitives of Mecca, and the auxiliaries of Medina. To eradicate the seeds of jealousy, Mahomet judiciously coupled his principal followers with the rights and obligations of brethren, and when Ali found himself without a peer, the prophet tenderly declared, that he would be the companion and brother of the noble youth. The expedient was crowned with success, the holy fraternity was respected in peace and war, and the two parties vied with each other in a generous emulation of courage and fidelity. Once only the concord was slightly ruffled by an accidental quarrel, a patriot of Medina arraigned the insolence of the strangers, but the hint of their expulsion was heard with abhorrence, and his own son most eagerly offered to lay at the apostle's feet the head of his father.

From his establishment at Medina, Mahomet assumed the exercise of the regal and sacerdotal office, and it was impious to appeal from a judge whose decrees were inspired by the divine wisdom. A small portion of ground, the patrimony of two orphans, was acquired by gift or purchase; on that chosen spot, he built a house and a mosque more venerable in their rude simplicity than the palaces and temples of the Assyrian caliphs. His seal of gold, or silver, was inscribed with the apostolic title, when he prayed and preached in the weekly assembly, he leaned against the trunk of a palm-tree, and it was long before he indulged himself in the use of a chair or pulpit of rough timber. After a reign of six years, fifteen hundred Moslems, in arms and in the field, renewed their oath of allegiance, and their chief repeated the assurance of protection till the death of the last member, or the final dissolution of the party. It was in the same camp that the deputy of Mecca was astonished by the attention of the faithful to the words and looks of the prophet, by the eagerness with which they collected his spittle, a hair that dropt on the ground, the refuse water of his instructions, as if they participated in some degree of the prophetic virtue. "I have seen," said he, "the Chosroes of Persia and the Cæsar of Rome, but never did I behold a king among his subjects like Mahomet among his companions." The devout fervour of enthusiasm acts with more energy and truth than the cold and formal servility of courts.

In the state of nature every man has a right to defend, by force of arms, his person and his possessions, to repel, or even to prevent, the violence of his enemies, and to extend his hostilities to a reasonable measure of satisfaction and retaliation. In the free society of the Arabs, the duties of subject and citizen imposed a feeble restraint, and Mahomet, in the exercise of a peaceful and benevolent mission, had been despoiled and banished by the injustice of his countrymen. The choice of an independent people had exalted the fugitive of Mecca to the rank of a sovereign, and he was invested with the just prerogative of forming alliances, and of waging offensive or defensive war. The imperfection of human rights was supplied and armed by the plenitude of divine power: the prophet of Medina assumed, in his new revelations, a fiercer and more sanguinary tone, which proves that his former moderation was the effect of weakness; the means of persuasion had been tried, the season of forbearance was elapsed, and he was now commanded to propagate his religion by the sword, to destroy the monuments of idolatry, and, without regarding the sanctity of days or months, to pursue the unbelieving nations of the earth. The same bloody precepts, so repeatedly intimated in the Koran, are ascribed by the author to the Pentateuch and the Gospel. But the mild tenor of the evangelic style may explain an ambiguous text, that Jesus did not bring peace on the earth, but a sword. His patient and humble virtues should not be confounded with the intolerant zeal of princes and bishops, who have disgraced the name of his disciples. In the prosecution of religious war, Mahomet might appeal with more propriety to the example of Moses, of the judges and the kings of Israel. The military laws of the Hebrews are still more rigid than those of the Arabian legislator. The Lord of hosts marched in person before the Jews: if a city resisted their summons, the males, without distinction, were put to the sword: the seven nations of Canaan were devoted to destruction, and neither repentance nor conversion could shield them from the inevitable doom, that no creature within their precincts should be left alive. The fair option of friendship, or submission, or battle, was proposed to the enemies of Mahomet. If they professed the creed of Islam, they were admitted to all the temporal and spiritual benefits of his primitive disciples, and marched under the same banner to extend the religion which they had embraced. The clemency of the prophet was decided by his and pulpit as two venerable relics of the apostle of God: and the portrait of his countenance taken from Abulfeda, (c. 41 p. 8.)

The eighth and ninth chapters of the Koran are the foudest and most violent, and Miracri (Hermippus part iv. p. 69-64) has imaged with more justice than discretion against the double dealing of the impostor.

The tenth and twelfth chapters of Deuteronomy, with the practical comments of Joshua David, &c. are read with more awe than satisfaction by the pious christians of the present age. But the bishops, as well as the rabbis, of former times, have lost the drum ecclesiastic with pleasure and success. (Sale's Preliminary Discourse, p. 142, 143.)

f Prideaux (Life of Mahomet, p. 44) reviles the wickedness of the impostor, who despoiled two poor orphans the sons of a carpenter, a reproach which he drew from the Disputatio contra Saracenos, composed in Arabia before the year 1170. But the honest Gazier (ad Abulfeda p. 63) has shown that they were deceived by the word Al Naggar, which signifies, in this place, not an obscure trade but a noble tribe of Arabs. The desolate state of the ground is described by Abulfeda and his worthy interpreter has proved from Al Bochari the offer of a price, from Al Jannabi the fair purchase, and from Ahmed Ben Joseph, the payment of the money by the generous Abubeker. On these grounds the prophet must be honourably acquitted.

g Al Jannabi (apud Gazier, tom. ii. p. 216-324) describes the seal

interest, yet he seldom trampled on a prostrate enemy, and he seems to promise, that, on the payment of a tribute, the least guilty of his unbelieving subjects might be indulged in their worship, or at least in their imperfect faith. In the first months of his reign, he practised the lessons of holy warfare, and displayed his white banner before the gates of Medina the martial apostle fought in person at nine battles or sieges,* and fifty enterprises of war were achieved in ten years by himself or his lieutenants. The Arab continued to unite the professions of a merchant and a robber, and his petty excursions for the defence or the attack of a caravan insensibly prepared his troops for the conquest of Arabia. The distribution of the spoil was regulated by a divine law: the whole was faithfully collected in one common mass: a fifth of the gold and silver, the prisoners and cattle, the movables and immovables, was reserved by the prophet for pious and charitable uses, the remainder was shared in adequate portions by the soldiers who had obtained the victory or guarded the camp: the rewards of the slain devolved to their widows and orphans, and the increase of cavalry was encouraged by the allotment of a double share to the horse and to the man. From all sides the roving Arabs were allured to the standard of religion and plunder: the apostle sanctified the licence of embracing the female captives as their wives or concubines, and the enjoyment of wealth and beauty was a feeble type of the joys of paradise prepared for the valiant martyrs of the faith. "The sword," says Mahomet, "is the key of heaven and of hell: a drop of blood shed in the cause of God, a night spent in arms, is of more avail than two months of fasting or prayer: whosoever falls in battle, his sins are forgiven: at the day of judgment his wounds shall be resplendent as vermilion, and odoriferous as musk, and the loss of his limbs shall be supplied by the wings of angels and cherubim." The intrepid souls of the Arabs were fired with enthusiasm: the picture of the invisible world was strongly painted on their imagination, and the death which they had always despised became an object of hope and desire. The Koran inculcates, in the most absolute sense, the tenets of fate and predestination, which would extinguish both industry and virtue, if the actions of man were governed by his speculative belief. Yet their influence in every age has exalted the courage of the Saracens and Turks. The first companions of Mahomet advanced to battle with a fearless confidence: there is no danger where there is no chance: they were ordained to perish in their beds; or they were safe and invulnerable amidst the darts of the enemy.<sup>m</sup>

Perhaps the Koreish would have been content with the flight of Mahomet, had they not been provoked and alarmed by the vengeance of an enemy, who could intercept their Syrian trade as it passed and repassed through the territory of Medina. Abu Sophian himself, with only thirty or forty followers, conducted a wealthy caravan of a thousand camels: the fortune or dexterity of his march escaped the vigilance of Mahomet, but the chief of the Koreish was informed that the holy robbers were placed in ambush to await his return. He despatched a messenger to his brethren of Mecca, and they were roused, by the fear of losing their merchandise and their provisions, unless they hastened to his relief with the military force of the city. The sacred band of Mahomet was formed of three hundred and thirteen Moslems, of whom seventy-seven were fugitives, and the rest auxiliaries: they mounted by turns a train of seventy camels (the camels of Yathreb were formidable in war), but such was the poverty of his first disciples, that only two could appear on horseback in the field.<sup>n</sup> In the fertile and famous vale of Beder,<sup>o</sup> three stations from Medina, he was informed by his scouts of the caravan that approached on one side, of the Koreish, one hundred horse, eight hundred and fifty foot, who advanced on the other. After a short debate, he sacrificed the prospect of wealth to the pursuit of glory and revenge, and a slight intrenchment was formed, to cover his troops, and a stream of fresh water that glided through the valley. "O God," he exclaimed, as the numbers of the Koreish descended from the hills, "O God, if these are destroyed, by whom wilt thou be worshipped on the earth?—Courage, my children, close your ranks, discharge your arrows, and the day is your own." At these words he placed himself, with Abubeker, on a throne or pulpit,<sup>p</sup> and instantly demanded the succour of Gabriel and three thousand angels. His eye was fixed on the field of battle: the mussulmans fainted and were pressed in that decisive moment: the prophet started from his throne, mounted his horse, and cast a handful of sand into the air, * Abulfeda in Vit. Moham. p. 156. The private arsenal of the apostle consisted of nine swords, three lances, seven pikes or half pikes, a quiver, and three bows, seven cuirasses, three shields, and two helmets (Gagner tom. iii. p. 328–334) with a large white standard, a black banner, (p. 335) twenty horses, (p. 322) &c. Two of his martial sayings are recorded by tradition (Gagner, tom. ii. p. 88–337).

<sup>l</sup> The whole subject de jure belli Mohammedanorum is exhausted in a separate dissertation by the learned Reland (Dissertationes Miscellaneæ, tom. iii. Dissert. x. p. 3–53).

<sup>m</sup> The doctrine of absolute predestination, on which few religions can reproach each other, is sternly exposed in the Koran (c. 3 p. 52–53 c. 4 p. 70 &c. with the notes of Sale and c. 17 p. 413 with those of Mr. de Saussure) Reland (de Relig. Mohamm. p. 61–64) and Sale (Prælim. Discours. p. 103) represent the opinions of the doctors, and our modern travellers the confidence, the fading confidence, of the Turks.

<sup>n</sup> Al Jannabi (apud Gagner tom. ii. p. 9) allows him seventy or eighty horse, and on two other occasions prior to the battle of Ohud, he enlists a body of thirty (p. 10) and of 500 (p. 66) troops. Yet the mussulmans, in the field of Ohud, had no more than two horses, according to the better sense of Abulfeda, (in Vit. Moham. c. xxxi. p. 65.) In the Story province, the camels were numerous: but the horse appears to have been less common than in the Happy or the Desert Arabia.

<sup>o</sup> Beder Houeneene twenty miles from Medina, and forty from Mecca is on the high road of the caravan of Egypt: and the pilgrims annually commemorate the prophet's victory by illuminations, rockets, &c. Shaw's Travels p. 477.

<sup>p</sup> The place to which Mahomet retired during the action is styled by Gagner (in Abulfeda, c. 27 p. 58. Vie de Mahomet, tom. ii. p. 30–33) Umbraculum, une loge de bois avec une porte. The same Arabic word is rendered by Reiske (Annuaire Moslemique Abulfeda, p. 23) luy Solium Suggestus editor and the difference is of the utmost moment for the honour both of the interpreter and of the hero. I am sorry to observe the pride and acrimony with which the Reiske characterizes his fellow labourer. Serpe sine virili, ut integræ pagine nequeunt nisi una littera corrigi. Arabice non salsus esse debet et cetera judicio critici J. J. Reiske. Prodromus ad Hagii Chahre Tabulas, p. 228 ad calcem Abulfeda Syriae Tabulae, Lepsius, 1766, in 4to.

"Let their faces be covered with confusion" Both armies heard the thunder of his voice their fancy beheld the angelic warriors & the Koreish trembled and fled seventy of the bravest were slain, and seventy captives adorned the first victory of the faithful The dead bodies of the Koreish were despoiled and insulted two of the most obnoxious prisoners were punished with death, and the ransom of the others, four thousand drams of silver, compensated in some degree the escape of the caravan But it was in vain that the camels of Abu Sophian explored a new road through the desert and along the Euphrates they were overtaken by the diligence of the mussulmans, and wealthy must have been the prize, if twenty thousand drams could be set apart for the fifth of the apostle The resentment of the public and private loss stimulated Abu Sophian to collect a body of three thousand men, seven hundred of whom were armed with cuirasses, and two hundred were mounted on horseback three thousand camels attended his march, and his wife Henila, with fifteen matrons of Mecca, incessantly sounded their timbrels to animate the troops, and to magnify the greatness, of Hobal, the most popular deity of the Carha The standard of Goli and Mahomet was upheld by nine hundred and fifty believers the disproportion of numbers was not more alarming than in the field of Beder, and their presumption of victory prevailed against the divine and human sense of the apostle The second battle was fought on mount Ohud, six miles to the north of Medina the Koreish advanced in the form of a crescent, and the right wing of cavalry was led by Caled, the fiercest and most successful of the Arabian warriors The troops of Mahomet were skilfully posted on the declivity of a hill, and their rear was guarded by a detachment of fifty archers The weight of their charge impelled and broke the centre of the idolaters, but in the pursuit they lost the advantage of their ground the archers deserted their station the mussulmans were tempted by the spoil, disobeyed their general, and disordered their ranks The intrepid Caled, wheeling his cavalry on their flank and rear, exclaimed, with a loud voice, that Mahomet was slain He was indeed wounded in the face with a javelin two of his teeth were shattered with a stone, yet, in the midst of tumult and dismay, he reproached the infidels with the murder of a prophet, and blessed the friendly hand that stanch'd his blood, and conveyed him to a place of safety Seventy martyrs died for the sins of the people they fell, said the apostle, in pairs, each brother embracing his lifeless companion & their bodies were mangled by the inhuman

<sup>a</sup> The loose expressions of the Koran (c 3 p 124, 125 c 8 p 6) allow the commentators to fluctuate between the numbers of 1000, 3000 or 6000 angels, and the smallest of these might suffice for the slaughter of seventy of the Koreish (Warren, Alcoran, tom ii p 171) Yet the same scholars confess, that this angelic host was not visible to any mortal eye (Muracci, p 297) They refine on the words (c 8 p 6) "not thou, but God, &c" (D'Herbelot, Bibliot Orientale, p 600, 601)

<sup>b</sup> In the third chapter of the Koran, (p 66-67 with Sale's notes) the prophet alleges some poor excuses for the defeat of Ohud

females of Mecca, and the wife of Abu Sophian tasted the entrails of Hamza, the uncle of Mahomet. They might applaud their superstition, and satiate their fury, but the mussulmans soon rallied in the field, and the Koreish wanted strength or courage to undertake the siege of Medina It was attacked the ensuing year by an army of ten thousand enemies, and this third expedition is variously named from the nations, which marched under the banner of Abu Sophian, from the ditch which was drawn before the city, and a camp of three thousand mussulmans The prudence of Mahomet declined a general engagement the valour of Ali was signalized in single combat, and the war was protracted twenty days, till the final separation of the confederates A tempest of wind, rain, and hail, overturned their tents their private quarrels were fomented by an insidious adversary, and the Koreish, deserted by their allies, no longer hoped to subvert the throne, or to check the conquests, of their invincible exile

The nations, or the ditch, A D 625

The choice of Jerusalem for the first kehla of prayer discovers the early propensity of Mahomet in favour of the Jews, and happy would it have been for their temporal interest, had they recognized, in the Arabian prophet, the hope of Israel and the promised Messiah Their obstinacy converted his friendship into implacable hatred, with which he pursued that unfortunate people to the last moment of his life and in the double character of an apostle and a conqueror, his persecution was extended to both worlds The Kaimoka dwelt at Medina under the protection of the city he seized the occasion of an accidental tumult, and summoned them to embrace his religion, or contend with him in battle "Alas," replied the trembling Jews, "we are ignorant of the use of arms, but we persevere in the faith and worship of our fathers, why wilt thou reduce us to the necessity of a just defence?" The unequal conflict was terminated in fifteen days, and it was with extreme reluctance that Mahomet yielded to the importunity of his allies, and consented to spare the lives of the captives But their riches were confiscated, their arms became more effectual in the hands of the mussulmans, and a wretched colony of seven hundred exiles was driven with their wives and children to implore a refuge on the confines of Syria The Nadharites were more guilty, since they conspired in a friendly interview to assassinate the prophet He besieged their castle three miles from Medina, but their resolute defence obtained an honourable capitulation, and the garrison, sounding their trumpets and beating their drums, was permitted to depart with the honours of war

<sup>a</sup> For the detail of the three Koreish wars, of Beder, of Ohud, and of the ditch, peruse Abulfeda, (p 56-61 61-69 73-77) Gagnier, (tom ii p 23-4, 70-79 120-179) with the proper articles of D'Herbelot, and the abridgements of Imaein, (Hist Siracen p 6, 7) and Abulpharagius (Hysr p 102)

<sup>b</sup> The wars of Mahomet against the Jewish tribes, of Kaimoka, the Nadharites, Koraidhr, and Chihhar, are related by Abulfeda (p 61 71 77 87, &c) and Gagnier (tom ii p 61-65 107-112 139-148, 209-274)

The Jews had excited and joined the war of the Koreish: no sooner had the nations retired from the ditch, than Mahomet, without laying aside his armour, marched on the same day to extirpate the hostile race of the children of Koraidha. After a resistance of twenty-five days, they surrendered at discretion. They trusted to the intercession of their old allies of Medina: they could not be ignorant that fanaticism obliterates the feelings of humanity. A venerable elder, to whose judgment they appealed, pronounced the sentence of their death: seven hundred Jews were dragged in chains to the market-place of the city: they descended alive into the grave prepared for their execution and burial, and the apostle beheld with an inflexible eye the slaughter of his helpless enemies. Their sheep and camels were inherited by the mussulmans: three hundred cuirasses, five hundred pikes, a thousand lances, composed the most useful portion of the spoil. Six days' journey to the north-east of Medina, the ancient and wealthy town of Chaibar was the seat of the Jewish power in Arabia, the territory, a fertile spot in the desert, was covered with plantations and cattle, and protected by eight castles, some of which were esteemed of impregnable strength. The forces of Mahomet consisted of two hundred horse and fourteen hundred foot: in the succession of eight regular and painful sieges they were exposed to danger, and fatigue, and hunger, and the most undaunted chiefs despaired of the event. The apostle revived their faith and courage by the example of Ali: on whom he bestowed the surname of the Lion of God: perhaps we may believe that a Hebrew champion of gigantic stature was cloven to the chest by his irresistible scymitar, but we cannot praise the modesty of romance, which represents him as tearing from its hinges the gate of a fortress, and wielding the ponderous buckler in his left hand.* After the reduction of the castles, the town of Chaibar submitted to the yoke. The chief of the tribe was tortured, in the presence of Mahomet, to force a confession of his hidden treasure: the industry of the shepherds and husbandmen was rewarded with a precarious toleration: they were permitted, so long as it should please the conqueror, to improve their patrimony, in equal shares, for his emolument and their own. Under the reign of Omar, the Jews of Chaibar were transplanted to Syria, and the caliph alleged the injunction of his dying master, that one and the true religion should be professed in his native land of Arabia.†

Submission of Mecca, A. D. 629. Five times each day the eyes of Mahomet were turned towards Mecca,‡ and he was urged by the most sacred and powerful motives to revisit, as a conqueror, the city and temple from whence he had been driven * Abu Rafe, the servant of Mahomet, is said to affirm that he himself and seven other men afterwards tried, without success, to move the same gate from the ground (Abulfeida, p. 90). Abu Rafe was an eye witness, but who will be witness for Abu Rafe?

† The transmigration of the Jews is attested by Elmacin (Hist. Saracen, p. 9) and the great Al Zuhari (Gagnier, tom. ii. p. 285). Yet Niebuhr (Description de l'Arabie, p. 324) believes that the Jewish as an exile. The Caaba was present to his waking and sleeping fancy: an idle dream was translated into vision and prophecy; he unfurled the holy banner, and a rash promise of success too hastily dropped from the lips of the apostle. His march from Medina to Mecca displayed the peaceful and solemn pomp of a pilgrimage: seventy camels chosen and bedecked for sacrifice, preceded the van; the sacred territory was respected, and the captives were dismissed without ransom to proclaim his clemency and devotion. But no sooner did Mahomet descend into the plain, within a day's journey of the city, than he exclaimed, "they have clothed themselves with the skins of tigers;" the numbers and resolution of the Koreish opposed his progress, and the roving Arabs of the desert might desert or betray a leader whom they had followed for the hopes of spoil. The intrepid fanatic sunk into a cool and cautious politician: he waived in the treaty his title of apostle of God, concluded with the Koreish and their allies a truce of ten years, engaged to restore the fugitives of Mecca who should embrace his religion, and stipulated only, for the ensuing year, the humble privilege of entering the city as a friend, and of remaining three days to accomplish the rites of the pilgrimage. A cloud of shame and sorrow hung on the retreat of the mussulmans, and their disappointment might justly accuse the failure of a prophet who had so often appealed to the evidence of success. The faith and hope of the pilgrims were rekindled by the prospect of Mecca: their swords were sheathed seven times in the footsteps of the apostle: they encompassed the Caaba: the Koreish had retired to the hills, and Mahomet, after the customary sacrifice, evacuated the city on the fourth day. The people was edified by his devotion; the hostile chiefs were awed, or divided, or seduced, and both Calad and Amrou, the future conquerors of Syria and Egypt, most seasonably deserted the sinking cause of idolatry. The power of Mahomet was increased by the submission of the Arabian tribes; ten thousand soldiers were assembled for the conquest of Mecca, and the idolaters, the weaker party, were easily convicted of violating the truce. Enthusiasm and discipline impelled the march, and preserved the secret, till the blaze of ten thousand fires proclaimed to the astonished Koreish the design, the approach, and the irresistible force of the enemy. The haughty Abu Sophian presented the keys of the city, admired the variety of arms and ensigns that passed before him in review, observed that the son of Abdallah had required a mighty kingdom, and confessed, under the scymitar of Omar, that he was the apostle of the true God. The return of Marius and Sylla was stained with the blood of the Romans: the revenge of Mahomet was religion, and Karamite sect, are still professed by the tribe of Chaibar; and that, in the plunder of the caravans, the disciples of Moses are the confederates of those of Mahomet.

‡ The successive steps of the reduction of Mecca are related by Abulfeida (p. 84-87, 97-100, 102-111) and Gagnier, (tom. ii. p. 293-295, 309-322, tom. iii. p. 1-58). Elmacin, (Hist. Saracen, p. 8-10). Abulpharagius (Dynast. p. 103).

stimulated by religious zeal, and his injured followers were eager to execute or to prevent the order of a massacre. Instead of indulging their passions and his own, the victorious exile forgave the guilt, and united the factions, of Mecca. His troops, in three divisions, marched into the city eight and twenty of the inhabitants were slain by the sword of Caled, eleven men and six women were proscribed by the sentence of Mahomet, but he blamed the cruelty of his lieutenant, and several of the most obnoxious victims were indebted for their lives to his clemency or contempt. The chiefs of the Koreish were prostrate at his feet. "What mercy can you expect from the man whom you have wronged?" "We confide in the generosity of our kinsman." "And you shall not confide in vain begone! you are safe, you are free." The people of Mecca deserved their pardon by the profession of Islam, and after an exile of seven years, the fugitive missionary was enthroned as the prince and prophet of his native country. But the three hundred and sixty idols of the Caaba were ignominiously broken, the house of God was purified and adorned as an example to future times, the apostle again fulfilled the duties of a pilgrim, and a perpetual law was enacted that no unbeliever should dare to set his foot on the territory of the holy city.

Conquest of Arabia
A D 629-632.

The conquest of Mecca determined the faith and obedience of the Arabian tribes,<sup>d</sup> who, according to the vicissitudes of fortune, had obeyed, or disregarded, the eloquence or the arms of the prophet. Indifference for rites and opinions still marks the character of the Bedouens, and they might accept, as loosely as they hold, the doctrine of the Koran. Yet an obstinate remnant still adhered to the religion and liberty of their ancestors, and the war of Honain derived a proper appellation from the idols, whom Mahomet had vowed to destroy, and whom the confederates of Tayef had sworn to defend. Four thousand pagans advanced with secrecy and speed to surprise the conqueror: they pitied and despised the supine negligence of the Koreish, but they depended on the wishes, and perhaps the aid, of a people who had so lately renounced their gods, and bowed beneath the yoke of their enemy. The banners of Medina and Mecca were displayed by the prophet, a crowd of Bedouens increased the strength or numbers of the army, and twelve thousand musketeers entertained a rash and sinful presumption of their invincible strength. They descended without precaution into the valley of Honain: the heights had been occupied by the archers and slingers of the confederates, their numbers were oppressed, their discipline was confounded, their courage was appalled, and the Koreish smiled at their impending destruction. The prophet, on his white mule, was encompassed by the enemies: he attempted to rush against their spears in search of a glorious death: ten of his faithful companions interposed their weapons and their breasts, three of these fell dead at his feet. "O my brethren," he repeatedly cried with sorrow and indignation, "I am the son of Abdallah, I am the apostle of truth! O man, stand fast in the faith! O God, send down thy succour!" His uncle Abbas, who, like the heroes of Homer, excelled in the loudness of his voice, made the valley resound with the recital of the gifts and promises of God: the flying Moslems returned from all sides to the holy standard, and Mahomet observed with pleasure, that the furnace was again rekindled: his conduct and example restored the battle, and he animated his victorious troops to inflict a merciless revenge on the authors of their shame. From the field of Honain, he marched without delay to the siege of Tayef, sixty miles to the south-east of Mecca, a fortress of strength, whose fertile lands produce the fruits of Syria in the midst of the Arabian desert. A friendly tribe, instructed (I know not how) in the art of sieges, supplied him with a train of battering rams and military engines, with a body of five hundred artificers. But it was in vain that he offered freedom to the slaves of Tayef, that he violated his own laws by the extirpation of the fruit-trees, that the ground was opened by the miners, that the breach was assaulted by the troops. After a siege of twenty days, the prophet sounded a retreat, but he retreated with a song of devout triumph, and affected to pray for the repentance and safety of the unbelieving city. The spoil of this fortunate expedition amounted to six thousand captives, twenty-four thousand camels, forty thousand sheep, and four thousand ounces of silver: a tribe who had fought at Honain, redeemed their prisoners by the sacrifice of their idols, but Mahomet compensated the loss, by resigning to the soldiers his fifth of the plunder, and wished, for their sake, that he possessed as many head of cattle as there were trees in the province of Tehama. Instead of chastising the disaffection of the Koreish, he endeavoured to cut out their tongues, (his own expression,) and to secure their attach-

<sup>a</sup> After the conquest of Mecca, the Mahomet of Voltaire straggles and perpetrates the most horrid crimes. The poet confesses, that he is not supported by the truth of history, and can only allege, que celui qui fait la guerre à sa patrie au nom de Dieu, est capable de tout (Œuvres de Voltaire, tom. xv. p. 282). The maxim is neither civilisable nor philosophic, and some reverence is surely due to the fame of heroes and the religion of nations. I am informed that a Turkish ambassador at Paris was much scandalized at the representation of this tragedy.

<sup>b</sup> The Mahometan doctors still dispute, whether Mecca was reduced by force or consent; (Abulfedr, p. 107. el Gagnier ad locum,) and this verbal controversy is of as much moment as our own about William the Conqueror.

<sup>c</sup> In excluding the christians from the peninsula of Arabia, the province of Hejaz, or the navigation of the Red sea. Chardin (Voyage en Perse, tom. iv. p. 160) and Reind (Dissert. Miscell. tom. iii. p. 51) are more rigid than the muslimans themselves. The christians are received without scruple into the ports of Mecca, and even of Gedra, and it is only the city and precincts of Mecca that are inaccessible to the profane (Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 308, 309. Voyage en Arabie tom. i. p. 20, 218, &c.)

<sup>d</sup> Abulfedr p. 112-115. Gagnier, tom. ii. p. 67-88. D Herbelot, MOHAMMED.

<sup>e</sup> The size of Tayef division of the spoil &c. are related by Abulfedr (p. 117-121) and Gagnier, (tom. iii. p. 88-111.) It is Al Janab who mentions the eagles and eaglets of the tribe of Daws. The fertile spot of Tayef was supposed to be a piece of the land of Syria detached and dropped in the general deluge.

ment by a superior measure of liberality. Abu Sophian alone was presented with three hundred camels and twenty ounces of silver, and Mecca was sincerely converted to the profitable religion of the Koran.

The fugitives and auxiliaries complained, that they who had borne the burthen were neglected in the season of victory. "Alas," replied their artful leader, "suffer me to conciliate these recent enemies, these doubtful proselytes, by the gift of some perishable goods. To your guard I intrust my life and fortunes. You are the companions of my exile, of my kingdom, of my paradise." He was followed by the deputies of Tayef, who dreaded the repetition of a siege. "Grant us, O apostle of God! a truce of three years, with the toleration of our ancient worship." "Not a month, not an hour." "Excuse us at least from the obligation of prayer." "Without prayer religion is of no avail." They submitted in silence: their temples were demolished, and the same sentence of destruction was executed on all the idols of Arabia. His lieutenants, on the shores of the Red sea, the ocean, and the gulf of Persia, were saluted by the acclamations of a faithful people, and the ambassadors who knelt before the throne of Medina, were as numerous (says the Arabian proverb) as the dates that fall from the maturity of a palm-tree. The nation submitted to the God and the sceptre of Mahomet: the opprobrious name of tribute was abolished: the spontaneous or reluctant oblations of alms and tithes were applied to the service of religion: and one hundred and fourteen thousand Moslems accompanied the last pilgrimage of the apostle.<sup>f</sup>

First war of the Heraclians against the Roman empire
A. D. 629, 630

When Heraclius returned in triumph from the Persian war, he entertained, at Emesa, one of the ambassadors of Mahomet, who invited the princes and nations of the earth to the profession of Islam. On this foundation the zeal of the Arabians has supposed the secret conversion of the christian emperor, the vanity of the Greeks has feigned a personal visit to the prince of Medina, who accepted from the royal bounty a rich domain, and a secure retreat, in the province of Syria.<sup>g</sup> But the friendship of Heraclius and Mahomet was of short continuance: the new religion had inflamed rather than assuaged the rapacious spirit of the Saracens, and the murder of an envoy afforded a decent pretence for invading, with three thousand soldiers, the territory of Palestine, that extends to the eastward of the Jordan. The holy banner was intrusted to Zeid, and such was the discipline or enthusiasm of the rising sect, that the noblest chiefs served without reluctance under the slave of the prophet. On the event of his decease, Jaafar and Abdallah were successively substituted to the command, and if the three should perish in the war, the troops were authorized to elect their general. The three leaders were slain in the battle of Muta,<sup>h</sup> the first military action which tried the valour of the Moslems against a foreign enemy. Zeid fell, like a soldier, in the foremost ranks: the death of Jaafar was heroic and memorable: he lost his right-hand: he shifted the standard to his left: the left was severed from his body: he embraced the standard with his bleeding stumps, till he was transfixed to the ground with fifty honourable wounds. "Advance," cried Abdallah, who stepped into the vacant place, "advance with confidence: either victory or paradise is our own." The lance of a Roman decided the alternative, but the falling standard was rescued by Caled, the proselyte of Mecca: nine swords were broken in his hand, and his valour withstood and repulsed the superior numbers of the christians. In the nocturnal council of the camp he was chosen to command: his skilful evolutions of the ensuing day secured either the victory or the retreat of the Saracens, and Caled is renowned among his brethren and his enemies by the glorious appellation of the Sword of God. In the pulpit, Mahomet described, with prophetic rapture, the crowns of the blessed martyrs, but in private he betrayed the feelings of human nature: he was surprised as he wept over the daughter of Zeid. "What do I see?" said the astonished votary. "You see," replied the apostle, "a friend who is deploring the loss of his most faithful friend." After the conquest of Mecca, the sovereign of Arabia affected to prevent the hostile preparations of Heraclius, and solemnly proclaimed war against the Romans, without attempting to disguise the hardships and dangers of the enterprise.<sup>i</sup> The Moslems were discouraged: they alleged the want of money, or horses, or provisions, the season of harvest, and the intolerable heat of the summer. "Hell is much hotter," said the indignant prophet. He disdained to compel their service: but on his return he admonished the most guilty, by an excommunication of fifty days. Their desertion enhanced the merit of Abubeker, Othman, and the faithful companions who devoted their lives and fortunes, and Mahomet displayed the banner at the head of ten thousand horse and twenty thousand foot. Painful indeed was the distress of the march: lassitude and thirst were aggravated by the scorching and pestilential winds of the desert: ten men rode by turns on the same camel, and they were reduced to the shameful necessity of drinking the water from the belly of that useful animal. In the mid-way, ten days' journey from Medina and

<sup>f</sup> The first conquests and pilgrimage of Mahomet are contained in Abulfeda (p. 121—173) Gagnier, (tom. iii. p. 119—219) Elmire, (p. 10, 11) Abulpharagus, (p. 103). The ninth of the Hejira was styled the Year of Embassies (Gagnier Not. ad Abulfeda p. 121).

<sup>g</sup> Compare the bigoted Al Janoribi (apud Gagnier, tom. ii. p. 232—235) with the no less bigoted Greeks, Theophanes, (p. 276—278) Zonaras, (tom. ii. l. xiv. p. 86) and Cedrenus (p. 421).

<sup>h</sup> For the battle of Muta, and its consequences, see Abulfeda (p.

100—102.) and Gagnier (tom. ii. p. 327—343). Καλεδωρ (says Theophanes) ον λεγουσι μαχησαν του Θεου.

<sup>i</sup> The expedition of Tabuc is recorded by our ordinary historians, Abulfeda (Vit. Moham. p. 123—127) and Gagnier (Vie de Mahomet tom. ii. p. 147—163) but we have the advantage of appealing to the original evidence of the Koran, (c. 9. p. 154, 165) with Sale's learned and rational notes.

Damascus, they reposed near the grove and fountain of Tabue. Beyond that place Mahomet declined the prosecution of the war: he declared himself satisfied with the peaceful intentions, he was more probably daunted by the martial array, of the emperor of the east. But the active and intrepid Calid spread around the terror of his name, and the prophet received the submission of the tribes and cities, from the Euphrates to Ailah, at the head of the Red sea. To his christian subjects, Mahomet readily granted the security of their persons, the freedom of their trade, the property of their goods, and the toleration of their worship.<sup>k</sup> The weakness of their Arabian brethren had restrained them from opposing his ambition, the disciples of Jesus were endeared to the enemy of the Jews, and it was the interest of a conqueror to propose a fair capitulation to the most powerful religion of the earth.

Death of Mahomet. A.D. 632. June 7. Till the age of sixty-three years, the strength of Mahomet was equal to the temporal and spiritual fatigues of his mission. His epileptic fits, an absurd calumny of the Greeks, would be an object of pity rather than abhorrence,<sup>l</sup> but he seriously believed that he was poisoned at Chabar by the revenge of a Jewish female.<sup>m</sup> During four years, the health of the prophet declined, his infirmities increased, but his mortal disease was a fever of fourteen days, which deprived him by intervals of the use of reason. As soon as he was conscious of his danger, he edified his brethren by the humility of his virtue or penitence. "If there be any man," said the apostle from the pulpit, "whom I have unjustly scourged, I submit my own back to the lash of retaliation. Have I aspersed the reputation of a mussulman? let him proclaim my faults in the face of the congregation. Has any one been despoiled of his goods? the little that I possess shall compensate the principal and the interest of the debt." "Yes," replied a voice from the crowd, "I am entitled to three drams of silver." Mahomet heard the complaint, satisfied the demand, and thanked his creditor for accusing him in this world rather than at the day of judgment. He beheld with temperate firmness the approach of death, enfranchised his slaves, (seventeen men, as they are named, and eleven women,) minutely directed the order of his funeral, and moderated the lamentations of his weeping friends, on whom he bestowed the benediction of peace. Till the third day before his death, he regularly performed the function of public prayer: the choice of Abubeker to supply his place, appeared to mark that ancient and faithful friend as his successor in the sacerdotal and regal office, but he prudently declined the risk and envy of a more explicit nomination. At a moment when his faculties were visibly impaired, he called for pen and ink to write, or, more properly, to dictate, a divine book, the sum and accomplishment of all his revelations. A dispute arose in the chamber, whether he should be allowed to supersede the authority of the Koran, and the prophet was forced to reprove the indecent vehemence of his disciples. If the slightest credit may be afforded to the traditions of his wives and companions, he maintained, in the bosom of his family, and to the last moments of his life, the dignity of an apostle, and the faith of an enthusiast, described the visits of Gabriel, who bade an everlasting farewell to the earth, and expressed his lively confidence, not only of the mercy, but of the favour, of the Supreme Being. In a familiar discourse he had mentioned his special prerogative, that the angel of death was not allowed to take his soul till he had respectfully asked the permission of the prophet. The request was granted, and Mahomet immediately fell into the agony of his dissolution. His head was reclined on the lap of Ayesha, the best beloved of all his wives, he fainted with the violence of pain, recovering his spirits, he raised his eyes towards the roof of the house, and, with a steady look, though a faltering voice, uttered the last broken, though articulate, words "O God! pardon my sins. Yes, I come, among my fellow-citizens on high" and thus peacefully expired on a carpet spread upon the floor. An expedition for the conquest of Syria was stopped by this mournful event: the army halted at the gates of Medina: the chiefs were assembled round their dying master. The city, more especially the house, of the prophet, was a scene of clamorous sorrow or silent despair. Fanaticism alone could suggest a ray of hope and consolation. "How can he be dead, our witness, our intercessor, our mediator with God? By God he is not dead. Like Moses and Jesus he is wrapt in a holy trance, and speedily will he return to his faithful people." The evidence of sense was disregarded, and Omar, unsheathing his scimitar, threatened to strike off the heads of the infidels, who should dare to affirm that the prophet was no more. The tumult was appeased by the weight and moderation of Abubeker. "Is it Mahomet," said he to Omar and the multitude, "or the God of Mahomet, whom you worship? The

<sup>k</sup> The Diploma securitatis Alenensis, is attested by Ahmed Ben Joseph, and the author Libri Splendorum, (Gagnier Nol. ad Abulfeda p. 125) but Abulfeda himself as well as Elmakin, (Hist. Syracen. p. 11) though he owns Mahomet's regard for the christians, (p. 13) only mentions peace and tribute. In the year 1630 Bionta published at Paris the text and version of Mahomet's patent in favour of the christians which was admitted and reprobated by the opposite taste of Salmasius and Grotius (Bayle, MAHOMET Rem. AA.) Hottinger doubts of its authenticity, (Hist. Orient. p. 237.) Renaudot urges the consent of the Mahometans (Hist. Patriarch. Alex. p. 169) but Ma shem (Hist. Eccles. p. 244) shows the futility of their opinion, and inclines to believe it spurious. Yet Abulpharagius quotes the impostor as a treaty with the Nestorian patriarch, (Asseman Bibl. Orient. tom. ii. p. 418) but Abulpharagius was primate of the Jacobites.

<sup>l</sup> The epilepsy, or falling sickness of Mahomet, is asserted by Theophrastus Zonaras, and the rest of the Greeks, and is greedily swallowed by the gross bigotry of Hottinger, (Hist. Orient. p. 10, 11.) Prideaux, (Life of Mahomet, p. 12.) and Miracci (tom. ii. Alcoran, p. 762, 763.) The titles (the wrapped up, the covered) of two chapters of the Koran (73, 74) can hardly be strained to such an interpretation: the silence, the ignorance of the Mahometan commentators, is more conclusive than the most preemphory denial, and the charitable side is exposed by Ockley (Hist. of the Saracens, tom. i. p. 301.) Gagnier, (ad Abulfeda, p. 9.) Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 118.) and Bile (Koran, p. 469-474.)

<sup>m</sup> This poison (more ignominious since it was offered as a test of his prophetic knowledge) is frankly confessed by his zealous votaries Abulfeda (p. 92) and Al Jannabi (apud Gagnier, tom. ii. p. 280-288.)

God of Mahomet liveth for ever, but the apostle was a mortal like ourselves, and according to his own prediction, he has experienced the common fate of mortality." He was piously interred by the hands of his nearest kinsman, on the same spot on which he expired. Medina has been sanctified by the death and burial of Mahomet, and the innumerable pilgrims of Mecca often turn aside from the way, to bow, in voluntary devotion,<sup>o</sup> before the simple tomb of the prophet.

At the conclusion of the life of Mahomet, it may perhaps be expected, that I should balance his faults and virtues, that I should decide whether the title of enthusiast or impostor more properly belongs to that extraordinary man. Had I been intimately conversant with the son of Abdallah, the task would still be difficult, and the success uncertain. At the distance of twelve centuries, I darkly contemplate his shade through a cloud of religious incense, and could I truly delineate the portrait of an hour, the fleeting resemblance would not equally apply to the solitary of mount Hera, to the preacher of Mecca, and to the conqueror of Arabia. The author of a mighty revolution appears to have been endowed with a pious and contemplative disposition: so soon as marriage had raised him above the pressure of want, he avoided the paths of ambition and avarice, and till the age of forty, he lived with innocence, and would have died without a name. The unity of God is an idea most congenial to nature and reason, and a slight conversation with the Jews and christians would teach him to despise and detest the idolatry of Mecca. It was the duty of a man and a citizen to impart the doctrine of salvation, to rescue his country from the dominion of sin and error. The energy of a mind incessantly bent on the same object, would convert a general obligation into a particular call, the warm suggestions of the understanding or the fancy, would be felt as the inspirations of heaven, the labour of thought would expire in rapture and vision, and the inward sensation, the invisible monitor, would be described with the form and attributes of an angel of God.<sup>a</sup> From enthusiasm to imposture, the step is perilous and slippery: the demon of Socrates affords a memorable instance, how a wise man may deceive himself, how a good man may deceive others, how the conscience may slumber in a mixed and middle state between self-illusion and voluntary fraud. Charity may believe that the original motives of Mahomet were those of pure and genuine benevolence, but a human missionary is incapable of cherishing the obstinate unbelievers who reject his claims, despise his arguments, and persecute his life, he might forgive his personal adversaries, he may lawfully hate the enemies of God, the stern passions of pride and revenge were kindled in the bosom of Mahomet, and he sighed, like the prophet of Nineveh for the destruction of the rebels whom he had condemned. The injustice of Mecca, and the choice of Medina, transformed the citizen into a prince, the humble preacher into the leader of armies, but his sword was consecrated by the example of the saints, and the same God who afflicts a sinful world with pestilence and earthquakes, might inspire for their conversion or chastisement the valour of his servants. In the exercise of political government, he was compelled to abate of the stern rigour of fanaticism, to comply in some measure with the prejudices and passions of his followers, and to employ even the vices of mankind as the instruments of their salvation. The use of fraud and perfidy, of cruelty and injustice, were often subservient to the propagation of the faith, and Mahomet commanded or approved the assassination of the Jews and idolaters who had escaped from the field of battle. By the repetition of such acts, the character of Mahomet must have been gradually stained, and the influence of such pernicious habits would be poorly compensated by the practice of the personal and social virtues which are necessary to maintain the reputation of a prophet among his sectaries and friends. Of his last years, ambition was the ruling passion, and a politician will suspect, that he secretly smiled (the victorious impostor<sup>1</sup>) at the enthusiasm of his youth, and the credulity of his proselytes.<sup>a</sup> A philosopher will observe, that then credulity and his success would tend more strongly to fortify the assurance of his divine mission, that his interest and religion were inseparably connected, and that his conscience would be soothed by the persuasion, that he alone was absolved by the Deity from the obligation of pigeon, that seemed to descend from heaven and whisper in his ear. As this pretended miracle is urged by Grotius (de Veritate Religionis Christiane), his Arabic translator the learned Pocock inquired of him the names of his authors: and Grotius confessed, that it is unknown to the Mahometans themselves. Lest it should provoke their indignation and laughter, the pious lie is suppressed in the Arabic version: but it has maintained an edifying place in the numerous editions of the Latin text (Pocock, Speeimen Hist. Arabum, p. 186, 187. Reland, de Religione Mahometi i. c. 39 p. 269—262.)

τ. Λοιπὸν δὲ τὸντο εἶναι ἐκ παιδὸς ἀρξομένου, φησὶ τις τῇ γνησίᾳ ὅταν γεννῶται αἰεὶ ἀποτρῆται μετὰ τούτων ὁ ἀνὰ μέλλω προτρεῖται, προτρεῖται δὲ οὐκ ὅτι (Plato, in Apolog. Socrati e. 19 p. 121. 122. edit. Friesler). The familiar examples, which Socrates urges in his Dialogue with Theaetetus (Philon Opera tom. i. p. 124. 129. edit. Hen. Stephan.) are beyond the reach of human foresight and the divine inspiration (the Δαίμωνιον) of the philosopher is clearly taught in the Memorabilia of Xenophon. The ideas of the most rational Platonists are expressed by Cicero, (de Divinat. i. 84.) and in the fourteenth and fifteenth Disquisitions of Maximus of Tyre (p. 153—172. edit. Davis).

<sup>a</sup> In some passage of his voluminous writings Voltaire compares the prophet, in his old age to a fakir: "qui détache le chaîne de son cou pour en donner sur les oreilles à ses confrères."

<sup>a</sup> The Greeks and Latins have invented and propagated the vulgar and ridiculous story, that Mahomet's iron tomb is suspended in the air at Mecca (σημα μετεωρίζουσαν). Laonicus Chylaeodoules de Rebus Turcicus i. iii. p. 66) by the action of equal and potent loadstones (Dictionnaire de Bayle MAHOMET, Rem. EE. FF.) Without any philosophical inquiries it may suffice, that, 1. The prophet was not buried at Mecca: and 2. That his tomb at Medina, which has been visited by millions, is placed on the ground (Reland de Relig. Moham. i. ii. c. 19 p. 209—211.) Gagnier, (Vie de Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 263—268.)

<sup>b</sup> Al Jannabi enumerates (Vie de Mahomet tom. iii. p. 372—391) the multifarious duties of a pilgrim who visits the tombs of the prophet and his companions: and the learned casuist decides that this act of devotion is nearest in obligation and merit to a divine precept. The doers are divided which of Mecca and Medina be the most excellent (p. 391—394.)

<sup>c</sup> The last sickness, death and burial of Mahomet, are described by Abulfeda and Gagnier (Vie Mahom. p. 133—142. Vie de Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 220—271.) The most private and interesting circumstances were originally received from Ayesha, Ali the son of Abbas, &c. and as they dwelt at Medina and survived the prophet many years they might repeat the pious tale to a second or third generation of pilgrims.

<sup>q</sup> The christians, rashly enough, have assigned to Mahomet a lame positive and moral laws. If he retained any vestige of his native innocence, the sins of Mahomet may be allowed as an evidence of his sincerity. In the support of truth, the arts of fraud and fiction may be deemed less criminal, and he would have started at the foulness of the means, had he not been satisfied of the importance and justice of the end. Even in a conqueror or a priest, I can surprise a word or action of unaffected humanity, and the decree of Mahomet, that, in the sale of captives, the mothers should never be separated from their children, may suspend, or moderate, the censure of the historian.

Private life of Mahomet The good sense of Mahomet<sup>a</sup> despised the pomp of royalty the apostle of God submitted to the menial offices of the family, he kindled the fire, swept the floor, milked the ewes, and mended with his own hands his shoes and his woollen garment. Disdaining the penance and merit of a hermit, he observed, without effort or vanity, the abstemious diet of an Arab and a soldier. On solemn occasions he feasted his companions with rustic and hospitable plenty, but in his domestic life, many weeks would elapse without a fire being kindled on the hearth of the prophet. The interdiction of wine was confirmed by his example: his hunger was appeased with a sparing allowance of barley-bread: he delighted in the taste of milk and honey, but his ordinary food consisted of dates and water. Perfumes and women were the two sensual enjoyments which his nature required, and his religion did not forbid, and Mahomet affirmed, that the fervour of his devotion was increased by these innocent pleasures. The heat of the climate inflames the blood of the Arabs, and their libidinous complexion has been noticed by the writers of antiquity.<sup>x</sup> Their incontinence was regulated by the civil and religious laws of the Koran: their incestuous alliances were blamed, the boundless licence of polygamy was reduced to four legitimate wives or concubines, their rights both of bed and of dowry were equitably determined, the freedom of divorce was discouraged, adultery was condemned as a capital offence, and fornication, in either sex, was punished with a hundred stripes.<sup>y</sup> Such were the calm and rational precepts of the legislator: but in his private conduct, Mahomet indulged the appetites of a man, and abused the claims of a prophet. A special revelation dispensed him from the laws which he had imposed on his nation, the female sex, without reserve, was abandoned to his desires, and this singular prerogative excited the envy rather than the scandal, the veneration rather than the envy, of the devout mussulmans. If we remember the seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines of the wise Solomon, we shall applaud the modesty of the Arabian, who espoused no more than seventeen or fifteen wives, eleven are enumerated who occupied at Medina their separate apartments round the house of the apostle, and enjoyed in their turns the favour of his conjugal society. What is singular enough, they were all widows, excepting only Ayesha, the daughter of Abubeker. His wives, She was doubtless a virgin, since Mahomet consummated his nuptials (such is the premature ripeness of the climate) when she was only nine years of age. The youth, the beauty, the spirit of Ayesha, gave her a superior ascendant: she was beloved and trusted by the prophet, and, after his death, the daughter of Abubeker was long revered as the mother of the faithful. Her behaviour had been ambiguous and indiscreet: in a nocturnal march she was accidentally left behind, and in the morning Ayesha returned to the camp with a man. The temper of Mahomet was inclined to jealousy, but a divine revelation assured him of her innocence: he chastised her accusers, and published a law of domestic peace, that no woman should be condemned unless four male witnesses had seen her in the act of adultery.<sup>z</sup> In his adventures with Zeineb, the wife of Zeid, and with Mary, an Egyptian captive, the amorous prophet forgot the interest of his reputation. At the house of Zeid, his freedman and adopted son, he beheld, in a loose undress, the beauty of Zeineb, and burst forth into an ejaculation of devotion and desire. The servile, or grateful, freedman understood the hint, and yielded without hesitation to the love of his benefactor. But as the filial relation had excited some doubt and scandal, the angel Gabriel descended from heaven to ratify the deed, annul the adoption, and gently to reprove the apostle for distrusting the indulgence of his God. One of his wives, Hafsa, the daughter of Omar, surprised him on her own bed, in the embraces of his Egyptian captive: she promised secrecy and forgiveness: he swore that he would renounce the possession of Mary. Both parties forgot their engagements: and Gabriel again descended with a chapter of the Koran, to absolve him from his oath, and to exhort him freely to enjoy his captives and concubines, without listening to the clamours of his wives. In a solitary retreat of thirty days, he laboured, alone with Mary, to fulfil the commands of the angel. When his love and revenge were satiated, he summoned to his presence his eleven wives, reproached their disobedience and indiscretion, and threatened them with a sentence of divorce, both in this world and in the next: a drom Alcoran, part iv. p. 49—59) have maliciously exaggerated the frailties of Mahomet.

<sup>a</sup> Gagnier relates, with the same impartial pen, the humane law of the prophet, and the murders of Carib and Sophian which he prompted and approved (Vie de Mahomet, tom. ii. p. 69, 87, 208).

<sup>x</sup> For the domestic life of Mahomet, consult Gagnier, and the corresponding chapters of Abulfeda: for his diet, (tom. iii. p. 283—288) his children (p. 189—289) his wives, (p. 290—307) his marriage with Zeineb, (tom. ii. p. 152—160) his amour with Mary, (p. 303—309) the false accusation of Ayesha (p. 186—199). The most original evidence of the three last transactions is contained in the twenty fourth, thirty third, and sixty-sixth chapters of the Koran, with Sales Commentary. Prideaux (Life of Mahomet, p. 80—90) and Maracci (Pro-

<sup>z</sup> Incredibile est quo ardore apud eos in Venerem uterque solvitur sexus (Ammirani Marcellini l. xiv. c. 4).

<sup>y</sup> Sale (Preliminary Discourse, p. 133—137) has recapitulated the laws of marriage, divorce, &c. and the curious reader of Selden's Uxor Hebraica will recognize many Jewish ordinances.

<sup>z</sup> In a memorable case the Caliph Omar decided that all presumptive evidence was of no avail: and that all the four witnesses must have actually seen stylium in pyxide (Abulfeda Annales Moslemici, p. 71 vers. Reiske).

dreadful sentence, since those who had ascended the bed of the prophet were for ever excluded from the hope of a second marriage. Perhaps the incontinence of Mahomet may be palliated by the tradition of his natural or preternatural gift,<sup>a</sup> he united the manly virtue of thirty of the children of Adam, and the apostle might rival the thirteenth labour<sup>b</sup> of the Grecian Hercules.<sup>c</sup> A more serious and decent excuse may be drawn from his fidelity to Cadijah. During the twenty-four years of their marriage, her youthful husband abstained from the right of polygamy, and the pride or tenderness of the venerable matron was never insulted by the society of a rival. After her death, he placed her in the rank of the four perfect women, with the sister of Moses, the mother of Jesus, and Fatima, the best beloved of his daughters. "Was she not old?" said Ayesha, with the insolence of a blooming beauty, "has not God given you a better in her place?" "No, by God," said Mahomet, with an effusion of honest gratitude, "there never can be a better!" She believed in me, when men despised me: she relieved my wants, when I was poor and persecuted by the world."<sup>d</sup>

In the largest indulgence of polygamy, the founder of a religion and empire might aspire to multiply the chances of a numerous posterity and a lineal succession. The hopes of Mahomet were fatally disappointed. The virgin Ayesha, and his ten widows of mature age and approved fertility, were barren in his potent embraces. The four sons of Cadijah died in their infancy. Mary, his Egyptian concubine, was endeared to him by the birth of Ibrahim. At the end of fifteen months the prophet wept over his grave, but he sustained with firmness the raillery of his enemies, and checked the adulation or credulity of the Moslems, by the assurance that an eclipse of the sun was not occasioned by the death of the infant Cadijah: he had likewise given him four daughters, who were married to the most faithful of his disciples: the three eldest died before their father, but Fatima, who possessed his confidence and love, became the wife of her cousin Ali, and the mother of an illustrious progeny. The merit and misfortunes of Ali and his descendants will lead me to anticipate, in this place, the series of the Saracen caliphs, a title which describes the commanders of the faithful as the vicars and successors of the apostle of God.<sup>e</sup>

The birth, the alliance, the character<sup>f</sup> of Ali, which exalted him above the rest of his countrymen, might justify his claim to the vacant throne of Arabia. The son of Abu Taleb was, in his own right, the chief of the family of Hashem, and the hereditary prince or guardian of the city and temple of Mecca. The light of prophecy was extinct, but the husband of Fatima might expect the inheritance and blessing of her father: the Arabs had sometimes been patient of a female reign, and the two grandsons of the prophet had often been fondled in his lap, and shown in his pulpit, as the hope of his age, and the chief of the youth of paradise. The first of the true believers might aspire to march before them in this world and in the next, and if some were of a graver and more rigid cast, the zeal and virtue of Ali were never outstripped by any recent proselyte. He united the qualifications of a poet, a soldier, and a saint: his wisdom still breathes in a collection of moral and religious sayings,<sup>g</sup> and every antagonist, in the combats of the tongue or of the sword, was subdued by his eloquence and valour. From the first hour of his mission to the last rites of his funeral, the apostle was never forsaken by a generous friend, whom he delighted to name his brother, his viceroy, and the faithful Aaron of a second Moses. The son of Abu Taleb was afterwards reproached for neglecting to secure his interest by a solemn declaration of his right, which would have silenced all competition, and sealed his succession by the decrees of heaven. But the unsuspecting hero confided in himself: the jealousy of empire, and perhaps the fear of opposition, might suspend the resolutions of Mahomet, and the bed of sickness was besieged by the artful Ayesha, the daughter of Abubeker, and the enemy of Ali.

The silence and death of the prophet restored the liberty of the people, and his companions convened an assembly to deliberate on the choice of his successor. The hereditary claim and lofty spirit of Ali, were offensive to an aristocracy of elders, desirous of bestowing and resuming the sceptre by a free and frequent election: the Koreish could never be reconciled to the proud pre-eminence of the line of Hashem, the ancient discord of the tribes was rekindled, the fugitives of Mecca and the auxiliaries of Medina asserted their respective merits, and the rash proposal of choosing two independent caliphs would

Reign of Abu
beker
A. D. 632
June 7

<sup>a</sup> Sibi robur ad generationem quantum triginta viri habent inesse jactaret: ita ut unica hora posset undecim feminis satisfacere ut ex Arabian libris refert Sicut Petrus Paschasius c. 2. (Maracci Prodomus Alcoran p. iv p. 55. See likewise Observations de Belon l. iii c. 10 fol. 179 recto.) Al Jannabi (Gignier tom. iii p. 487) records his own testimony, that he surpassed all men in conjugal vigour, and Abulfeda mentions the exclamation of Ali who washed his body after his death: "O propheta certe penis suus calidus versus erectus est, (in Vit. Mahommed p. 140.)

<sup>b</sup> I borrow the style of a father of the church, εναθλευον Πραξλεος τρισκαίδεκατον αθλοι (Crisostomus Nazianzen Orat. iii p. 108.)

<sup>c</sup> The common and most glorious legend includes in a single night, the fifty victories of Hercules over the virgin daughters of Thestius (Diodor Sicul. tom. i. l. ii. p. 274. Pausanias l. ix p. 763. Statius Sylv. l. i. eleg. iii v. 42.) But Athenaeus allows seven nights, (Dierogaphist l. xiii p. 556) and Apollodorus fifty for this arduous achievement of Hercules who was then no more than eighteen years of age (Biblot. l. ii c. 4 p. 111 cum notis Heyne, part. i. p. 332.)

<sup>d</sup> Abulfeda in Vit. Mahom. p. 12 13 16 17 cum notis Cignier.

<sup>e</sup> This outline of the Arabian history is drawn from the Bibliothèque Orientale of D. Herbelot, (under the names of Aboubeker, Omar, Aliman, Ali, &c.) from the Annals of Abulfeda, Abulpharajus and Elmakin, (under the proper years of the Hegira) and especially from Ockley's History of the Saracens, (vol. i. p. 1—10 115—122. 229 249 367—372 378—391 and almost the whole of the second volume.) Yet we should weigh with caution the traditions of the hostile sects, a stream which becomes still more muddy as it flows further from the source. Sir John Chardin has too faithfully copied the fables and errors of the modern Persians (Voyages, tom. ii p. 235—250 &c.)

<sup>f</sup> Ockley (at the end of his second volume) has given an English version of 169 sentences which he ascribes with some hesitation to Ali the son of Abu Taleb. His preface is coloured by the enthusiasm of a translator, yet these sentences delineate a characteristic, though dark, picture of human life.

have crushed in their infancy the religion and empire of the Saracens. The tumult was appeased by the disinterested resolution of Omar, who, suddenly renouncing his own pretensions, stretched forth his hand, and declared himself the first subject of the mild and venerable Abubeker. The urgency of the moment, and the acquiescence of the people, might excuse this illegal and precipitate measure, but Omar himself confessed from the pulpit, that if any mussulman should hereafter presume to anticipate the suffrage of his brethren, both the elector and the elected would be worthy of death. After the simple inauguration of Abubeker, he was obeyed in Medina, Mecca, and the provinces of Arabia. The Hashemites alone declined the oath of fidelity, and their chief, in his own house, maintained, above six months, a sullen and independent reserve, without listening to the threats of Omar, who attempted to consume with fire the habitation of the daughter of the apostle. The death of Fatima, and the decline of his party, subdued the indignant spirit of Ali. He condescended to salute the commander of the faithful, accepted his excuse of the necessity of preventing their common enemies, and wisely rejected his courteous offer of abdicating the government of the Arabians. After a reign of two years, the aged caliph was summoned by the angel of death. In his testament, with the tacit approbation of his companions, he bequeathed the sceptre to the firm and intrepid virtue of Omar. "I have no occasion," said the modest candidate, "for the place." "But the place has occasion for you," replied

Of Omar
A D 634
July 24

Abubeker, who expired with a fervent prayer, that the God of Mahomet would ratify his choice, and direct the mussulmans in the way of concord and obedience. The prayer was not ineffectual, since Ali himself, in a life of privacy and prayer, professed to revere the superior worth and dignity of his rival, who comforted him for the loss of empire, by the most flattering marks of confidence and esteem. In the twelfth year of his reign, Omar received a mortal wound from the hand of an assassin; he rejected with equal impartiality the names of his son and of Ali, refused to load his conscience with the sins of his successor, and devolved on six of the most respectable companions the arduous task of electing commander of the faithful. On this occasion, Ali was again blamed by his friends for submitting his right to the judgment of men, for recognizing their jurisdiction by accepting a place among the six electors. He might have obtained their suffrage, had he deigned to promise a strict and servile conformity, not only to the Koran and tradition, but likewise to the determinations of two seniors. With these limitations, Othman, the secretary of Mahomet, accepted the government, nor was it till after the third caliph, twenty-four years after the death of the prophet, that Ali was invested, by the popular choice, with the regal and sacerdotal office. The manners of the Arabians retained their primitive simplicity, and the son of Abu Taleb despised the pomp and vanity of this world. At the hour of prayer, he repaired to the mosch of Medina, clothed in a thin cotton gown, a coarse turban on his head, his slippers in one hand, and his bow in the other, instead of a walking-staff. The companions of the prophet and the chiefs of the tribes saluted their new sovereign, and gave him their right hands as a sign of fealty and allegiance.

of Othman,
A D 644
Nov 6

The mischiefs that flow from the contests of ambition are usually confined to the times and countries in which they have been agitated. But the religious discord of the friends and enemies of Ali has been renewed in every age of the Hegira, and is still maintained in the immortal hatred of the Persians and Turks. The former, who are branded with the appellation of Shiites or sectaries, have enriched the Mahometan creed with a new article of faith, and if Mahomet be the apostle, his companion Ali is the vicar, of God. In their private converse, in their public worship, they bitterly execrate the three usurpers who intercepted his indefeasible right to the dignity of imam and caliph, and the name of Omar expresses in their tongue the perfect accomplishment of wickedness and impiety. The Sunnites, who are supported by the general consent and orthodox traditions of the mussulmans, entertain a more impartial, or at least a more decent, opinion. They respect the memory of Abubeker, Omar, Othman, and Ali, the holy and legitimate successors of the prophet. But they assign the last and most humble place to the husband of Fatima, in the persuasion that the order of succession was determined by the degrees of sanctity. An historian who balances the four caliphs with a hand unshaken by superstition, will calmly pronounce, that their manners were alike pure and exemplary, that their zeal was fervent and probably sincere, and that, in the midst of riches and power, their lives were deg Ockley (Hist. of the Saracens, vol. i. p. 5, 6) from an Arabian MS. represents Ayesha as adverse to the substitution of her father in the place of the apostle. This fact, so improbable in itself, is unnoticed by Bulsteda, Al Jannabi, and Al Bochari, the last of whom quotes the tradition of Ayesha herself (Vit. Mohammed p. 136. Vie de Mahomet, tom. iii. p. 236).

Discord of the
Turks and Persians

Particularly by his friend and cousin Abdallah, the son of Abbas who died A D 687 with the title of grand doctor of the Moslems. In Bulsteda he recapitulated the important occasions in which Ali had rejected his salutary advice (p. 76. vers. Reiske.) and concludes (p. 5) O princeps fidelium, abique controversa tu quidem vere fortis es, it inops tamen consiliis, et rerum gerendarum parum ciliens. I suspect that the two seniors (Abulpharagius, p. 115 Ockley, tom. p. 371) may signify not two actual counsellors, but his two predecessors Abubeker and Omar.

The return of the Persians is explained by all our travellers of the 17th century, especially in the second and fourth volumes of their master, Chardin. Niebuhr, though of inferior merit, has the advantage of writing so late as the year 1764 (Voyage en Arabie, &c. tom. ii. p. 208-233) since the intellectual attempt of Nadir Shah to change the religion of the nation, (see his Persian History translated into French by Sir William Jones tom. ii. p. 5, 6 47, 48 144-155).

1 Omar is the name of the devil; his murderer is a saint. When the Persians shoot with the bow, they frequently cry, "May this arrow go to the heart of Omar!" (Voyages de Chardin, tom. ii. p. 239, 240 259, &c.)

2 This gradation of merit is distinctly marked in a creed illustrated by Reind, (de Relig. Mohammedi, p. 37) and a Sunnite argument inserted by Ockley (Hist. of the Saracens, tom. ii. p. 230). The practice of cursing the memory of Ali was abolished, after forty years, by the Ommades themselves, (D Herbelot, p. 690) and thence are few among the Turks who presume to revile him as an infidel (Voyages de Chardin, tom. iv. p. 46.)

voted to the practice of moral and religious duties. But the public virtues of Abubeker and Omar, the prudence of the first, the severity of the second, maintained the peace and prosperity of their reigns. The feeble temper and declining age of Othman were incapable of sustaining the weight of conquest and empire. He chose, and he was deceived, he trusted, and he was betrayed: the most deserving of the faithful became useless or hostile to his government, and his lavish bounty was productive only of ingratitude and discontent. The spirit of discord went forth in the provinces, their deputies assembled at Medina, and the Charegites, the desperate fanatics who disclaimed the yoke of subordination and reason, were confounded among the free-born Arabs, who demanded the redress of their wrongs and the punishment of their oppressors. From Cufa, from Bassora, from Egypt, from the tribes of the desert, they rose in arms, encamped about a league from Medina, and despatched a haughty mandate to their sovereign, requiring him to execute justice, or to descend from the throne. His repentance began to disarm and disperse the insurgents, but their fury was rekindled by the arts of his enemies, and the forgery of a perfidious secretary was contrived to blast his reputation and precipitate his fall. The caliph had lost the only guard of his predecessors, the esteem and confidence of the Moslems, during a siege of six weeks his water and provisions were intercepted, and the feeble gates of the palace were protected only by the scruples of the more timorous rebels. Forsaken by those who had abused his simplicity, the helpless and venerable caliph expected the approach of death, the brother of Ayesha marched at the head of the assassins, and Othman, with the Koran in his lap, was pierced with a multitude of wounds. A tumultuous anarchy of five days was appeased by the inauguration of Ali: his refusal would have provoked a general massacre. In this painful situation he supported the becoming pride of the chief of the Hashemites, declared that he had rather serve than reign, rebuked the presumption of the strangers and required the formal, if not the voluntary, assent of the chiefs of the nation. He has never been accused of promoting the assassin of Omar, though Persia indiscreetly celebrates the festival of that holy martyr. The quarrel between Othman and his subjects was assumed by the early mediation of Ali, and Hassan, the eldest of his sons, was insulted and wounded in the defence of the caliph. Yet it is doubtful whether the father of Hassan was strenuous and sincere in his opposition to the rebels, and it is certain that he enjoyed the benefit of their crime. The temptation was indeed of such magnitude as might stagger and corrupt the most obdurate virtue. The ambitious candidate no longer aspired to the barren sceptre of Arabia: the Saracens had been victorious in the east and west, and the wealthy kingdoms of Persia, Syria, and Egypt, were the patrimony of the commander of the faithful.

A life of prayer and contemplation had not chilled the martial activity of Ali, but in a mature age, after a long experience of mankind, he still betrayed in his conduct the rashness and indiscretion of youth. In the first days of his reign, he neglected to secure, either by gifts or fetters, the doubtful allegiance of Tella and Zobeir, two of the most powerful of the Arabian chiefs. They escaped from Medina to Mecca, and from thence to Bassora, erected the standard of revolt, and usurped the government of Irak, or Assyria, which they had vainly solicited as the reward of their services. The mask of patriotism is allowed to cover the most glaring inconsistencies, and the enemies, perhaps the assassins, of Othman now demanded vengeance for his blood. They were accompanied in their flight by Ayesha, the widow of the prophet, who cherished, to the last hour of her life, an implacable hatred against the husband and the posterity of Fatima. The most reasonable Moslems were scandalized, that the mother of the faithful should expose in a camp her person and character, but the superstitious crowd was confident that her presence would sanctify the justice, and assure the success, of their cause. At the head of twenty thousand of his loyal Arabs, and nine thousand valiant auxiliaries of Cufa, the caliph encountered and defeated the superior numbers of the rebels under the walls of Bassora. Their leaders, Tella and Zobeir, were slain in the first battle that stained with civil blood the arms of the Moslems. After passing through the ranks to animate the troops, Ayesha had chosen her post amidst the dangers of the field. In the heat of the action, seventy men, who held the bridle of her camel, were successively killed or wounded, and the cage, or litter, in which she sat, was struck with javelins and darts like the quills of a porcupine. The venerable captive sustained with firmness the reproaches of the conqueror, and was speedily dismissed to her proper station, at the tomb of Mahomet, with the respect and tenderness that was still due to the widow of the apostle. After this victory, which was styled the Day of the Camel, Ali marched against a more formidable adversary, against Moawiyah, the son of Abu Sufyan, who had assumed the title of caliph, and whose claim was supported by the forces of Syria and the interest of the house of Ommiyah. From the passage of Thapsacus, the plain of Siffin<sup>a</sup> extends along the western bank of the Euphrates. On this spacious and level theatre, the two competitors waged a desultory war of one hundred and ten days. In the course of ninety actions or skirmishes, the loss of Ali was estimated at twenty-five, that of Moawiyah at forty-five, thousand soldiers, and the list of the slain was dignified with the names of five and twenty veterans who had fought at Bedar

Reign of Ali,
A. D.
655-660

Death of Othman
A. D. 655
June 18

<sup>a</sup> The plain of Siffin is determined by D'Anville (l'Euphrate et le

figre, p. 29) to be the Campus Barbaricus of Procopius

under the standard of Mahomet In this sanguinary contest the lawful caliph displayed a superior character of valour and humanity His troops were strictly enjoined to await the first onset of the enemy, to spare their flying brethren, and to respect the bodies of the dead, and the chastity of the female captives He generously proposed to save the blood of the Moslems by a single combat, but his trembling rival declined the challenge as a sentence of inevitable death The ranks of the Syrians were broken by the charge of a hero who was mounted on a pycbald horse, and wielded with irresistible force his ponderous and two-edged sword As often as he smote a rebel, he shouted the Allah Acbar, "God is victorious," and in the tumult of a nocturnal battle, he was heard to repeat four hundred times that tremendous exclamation The prince of Damascus already meditated his flight, but the certain victory was snatched from the grasp of Ali by the disobedience and enthusiasm of his troops Their conscience was awed by the solemn appeal to the books of the Koran which Moawiyah exposed on the foremost lances, and Ali was compelled to yield to a disgraceful truce and an insidious compromise He retreated with sorrow and indignation to Cufa, his party was discouraged, the distant provinces of Persia, of Yemen, and of Egypt, were subdued or seduced by his crafty rival, and the stroke of fanaticism, which was aimed against the three chiefs of the nation, was fatal only to the cousin of Mahomet In the temple of Mecca, three Charegites or enthusiasts discoursed of the disorders of the church and state they soon agreed, that the deaths of Ali, of Moawiyah, and of his friend Amron, the viceroy of Egypt, would restore the peace and unity of religion Each of the assassins chose his victim, poisoned his dagger, devoted his life, and secretly repaired to the scene of action Their resolution was equally desperate but the first mistook the person of Amrou, and stabbed the deputy who occupied his seat, the prince of Damascus was dangerously hurt by the second, the lawful caliph, in the mosque of Cufa, received a mortal wound from the hand of the third He expired in the sixty-third year of his age, and mercifully recommended to his children, that they would despatch the murderer by a single stroke The sepulchre of Ali<sup>a</sup> was concealed from the tyrants of the house of Ommyah,<sup>b</sup> but in the fourth age of the Hegira, a tomb, a temple, a city, arose near the ruins of Cufa Many thousands of the Shites repose in holy ground at the feet of the vicar of God, and the desert is vivified by the numerous and annual visits of the Persians, who esteem their devotion not less meritorious than the pilgrimage of Mecca

The persecutors of Mahomet usurped the inheritance of his children, and the champions of idolatry became the supremo heads of his religion and empire The opposition of Abu Sophian had been fierce and obstinate, his conversion was tardy and reluctant, his new faith was fortified by necessity and interest, he served, he fought, perhaps he believed, and the sins of the time of ignorance were expiated by the recent merits of the family of Ommyah Moawiyah, the son of Abu Sophian, and of the cruel Henda, was dignified in his early youth with the office or title of secretary of the prophet the judgment of Omar intrusted him with the government of Syria; and he administered that important province above forty years, either in a subordinate or supreme rank Without renouncing the fame of valour and liberality, he affected the reputation of humanity and moderation a grateful people were attached to their benefactor, and the victorious Moslems were enriched with the spoils of Cyprus and Rhodes The sacred duty of pursuing the assassins of Othman was the engine and pretence of his ambition The bloody shirt of the martyr was exposed in the mosque of Damascus the emir deplored the fate of his injured kinsman, and sixty thousand Syrians were engaged in his service by an oath of fidelity and revenge Amrou, the conqueror of Egypt, himself an army, was the first who saluted the new monarch, and divulged the dangerous secret, that the Arabian caliphs might be created elsewhere than in the city of the prophet The policy of Moawiyah eluded the valour of his rival, and, after the death of Ali, he negotiated the abdication of his son Hassan, whose mind was either above or below the government of the world, and who retired without a sigh from the palace of Cufa to an humble cell near the tomb of his grandfather The aspiring wishes of the caliph were finally crowned by the important change of an elective to an hereditary kingdom Some murmurs of freedom or fanaticism attested the reluctance of the Arabs, and four citizens of Medina refused the oath of fidelity, but the designs of Moawiyah were conducted with vigour and address, and his son Yezid, a feeble and dissolute youth, was proclaimed as the commander of the faithful and the successor of the apostle of God

A familiar story is related of the benevolence of one of the sons of Ali Death of Insem,
A D 680
Oct 10 In serving at table, a slave had inadvertently dropt a dish of scalding broth on his master the heedless wretch fell prostrate, to deprecate his punishment, and repeated a verse of the Koran "Paradise is for those who command their anger"—"I am not angry"—"and for those who

<sup>a</sup> Abulfeda, a modern Sounite, relates the different opinions concerning the burial of Ali, but adopts the sepulchre of Cufa hodie fama umerique religiose frequentantium celebratum This number is reckoned by Niebuhr to amount annually to 2000 of the dead, and 5000 of the living, (tom ii p 203, 209)

<sup>b</sup> All the tyrants of Persia, from Adhir el Dowlat (A D 977, Herbelot, p 58 59 95) to Nahir Shah (A D 1743, Hist de Nadir Ali ibn loin ii p 155) have enriched the tomb of Ali with the spoils of the people The dome is copper, with a bright and massy gilding, which shimmers to the sun at the distance of many a mile

<sup>c</sup> The city of Meshud Ali, five or six miles from the ruins of Cufa, and one hundred and twenty to the south of Bagdad, is of the size and form of the modern Jerusalem Meshud Hosin, larger and more populous, is at the distance of thirty miles

<sup>d</sup> I borrow, on this occasion, the strong sense and expression of Tacitus (Hist i 4) Et ulgito imperii arcano possit imperitorem alitum quam Romæ fieri

pardon offences"—"I pardon your offence"—"and for those who return good for evil"—"I give you your liberty, and four hundred pieces of silver" With an equal measure of piety, Hosein, the younger brother of Hassan, inherited a remnant of his father's spirit, and served with honour against the Christians in the siege of Constantinople. The primogeniture of the line of Hashem, and the holy character of grandson of the apostle, had centred in his person, and he was at liberty to prosecute his claim against Yezid, the tyrant of Damascus, whose vices he despised, and whose title he had never deigned to acknowledge. A list was secretly transmitted from Cufa to Medina, of one hundred and forty thousand Moslems, who professed their attachment to his cause, and who were eager to draw their swords so soon as he should appear on the banks of the Euphrates. Against the advice of his wisest friends, he resolved to trust his person and family in the hands of a perfidious people. He traversed the desert of Arabia with a timorous retinue of women and children, but as he approached the confines of Irak, he was alarmed by the solitary or hostile face of the country, and suspected either the defection or ruin of his party. His fears were just, Obeidollah, the governor of Cufa, had extinguished the first sparks of an insurrection, and Hosein, in the plain of Kerbela, was encompassed by a body of five thousand horse, who intercepted his communication with the city and the river. He might still have escaped to a fortress in the desert, that had defied the power of Cæsar and Chosroes, and confided in the fidelity of Tai, which would have armed ten thousand warriors in his defence. In a conference with the chief of the enemy he proposed the option of three honourable conditions, that he should be allowed to return to Medina, or be stationed in a frontier garrison against the Turks, or safely conducted to the presence of Yezid. But the commands of the caliph, or his lieutenant, were stern and absolute, and Hosein was informed that he must either submit as a captive and a criminal to the commander of the faithful, or expect the consequences of his rebellion. "Do you think," replied he, "to terrify me with death?" And, during the short respite of a night, he prepared with calm and solemn resignation to encounter his fate. He checked the lamentations of his sister Fatima, who deplored the impending ruin of his house. "Our trust," said Hosein, "is in God alone. All things, both in heaven and earth, must perish and return to their Creator. My brother, my father, my mother, were better than me, and every Mussulman has an example in the prophet." He pressed his friends to consult their safety by a timely flight; they unanimously refused to desert or survive their beloved master, and their courage was fortified by a fervent prayer and the assurance of paradise. On the morning of the fatal day, he mounted on horseback, with his sword in one hand and the Koran in the other. His generous band of martyrs consisted only of thirty-two horse and forty foot, but their flanks and rear were secured by the tent-ropes, and by a deep trench which they had filled with lighted faggots, according to the practice of the Arabs. The enemy advanced with reluctance, and one of their chiefs deserted, with thirty followers, to claim the partnership of inevitable death. In every close onset, or single combat, the despair of the Fatimites was invincible, but the surrounding multitudes galled them from a distance with a cloud of arrows, and the horses and men were successively slain. A truce was allowed on both sides for the hour of prayer, and the battle at length expired by the death of the last of the companions of Hosein. Alone, weary and wounded, he seated himself at the door of his tent. As he tasted a drop of water, he was pierced in the mouth with a dart, and his son and nephew, two beautiful youths, were killed in his arms. He lifted his hands to heaven, they were full of blood, and he uttered a funeral prayer for the living and the dead. In a transport of despair his sister issued from the tent, and adjured the general of the Cufians, that he would not suffer Hosein to be murdered before his eyes. A tear trickled down his venerable beard, and the boldest of his soldiers fell back on every side as the dying hero threw himself among them. The remorseless Slander, a name detested by the faithful, reproached their cowardice, and the grandson of Mahomet was slain with three and thirty strokes of lances and swords. After they had trampled on his body, they carried his head to the castle of Cufa, and the inhuman Obeidollah struck him on the mouth with a cane. "Alas!" exclaimed an aged Mussulman, "on these lips have I seen the lips of the apostle of God!" In a distant age and climate the tragic scene of the death of Hosein will awaken the sympathy of the coldest reader. On the annual festival of his martyrdom, in the devout pilgrimage to his sepulchre, his Persian votaries abandon their souls to the religious frenzy of sorrow and indignation.

When the sisters and children of Ali were brought in chains to the throne of Damascus, the caliph was advised to extirpate the enmity of a popular and hostile race, whom he had injured beyond the hope of reconciliation. But Yezid preferred the counsels of mercy, and the mourning family was honourably dismissed to mingle their tears with their kindred at Medina. The glory of martyrdom superseded the right of primogeniture, and the twelve IMAMS, or pontiffs, of the Persian creed are Ali, Hassan, Hosein, and the lineal descendants of Hosein to the

* I have abridged the interesting narrative of Ockley (tom. ii. p. 170—231). It is long, and minute, but the pathetic almost always consists in the detail of little circumstances.

† Niebuhr the Dane (Voyages en Arabie, &c. tom. ii. p. 208 &c.) is perhaps the only European traveller who has dared to visit Mehed Ali and Meshed Hosein. The two sepulchres are in the hands of the Turks, who tolerate and tax the devotion of the Persian heretics. The festival of the death of Hosein is amply described by Sir John Chardin, a traveller whom I have often praised.

‡ The general article of Imam in D'Herbelot's Bibliothèque will indicate the succession, and the lives of the twelve are given under their respective names.

ninth generation Without arms or treasures, or subjects, they successively enjoyed the veneration of the people, and provoked the jealousy of the reigning caliphs, their tombs at Mecca or Medina, on the banks of the Euphrates, or in the province of Chorasán, are still visited by the devotion of their sect Their names were often the pretence of sedition and civil war, but these royal saints despised the pomp of the world, submitted to the will of God and the injustice of man, and devoted their innocent lives to the study and practice of religion The twelfth and last of the Imams, conspicuous by the title of Mahadi, or the Guide, surpassed the solitude and sanctity of his predecessors He concealed himself in a cavern near Bagdad the time and place of his death are unknown, and his votaries pretend, that he still lives, and will appear before the day of judgment to overthrow the tyranny of Dejal, or the antichrist* In the lapse of two or three centuries the posterity of Abbas, the nucle of Mahomet, had multiplied to the number of thirty-three thousand† the race of Ali might be equally prolific, the meanest individual was above the first and greatest of princes, and the most eminent were supposed to excel the perfection of angels But their adverse fortune, and the wide extent of the mussulman empire, allowed an ample scope for every bold and artful impostor, who claimed affinity with the holy seed the sceptre of the Almohades in Spain and Africa, of the Fatimites in Egypt and Syria,‡ of the sultans of Yemen, and of the sophis of Persia,§ has been consecrated by this vague and ambiguous title Under their reigns it might be dangerous to dispute the legitimacy of their birth, and one of the Fatimite caliphs silenced an indiscreet question by drawing his scymitar "This," said Moez, "is my pedigree, and these," casting a handful of gold to his soldiers, "and these are my kindred and my children" In the various conditions of princes, or doctors, or nobles, or merchants, or beggars, a swarm of the genuine or fictitious descendants of Mahomet and Ali is honoured with the appellation of sheiks, or sherifs, or emirs In the Ottoman empire, they are distinguished by a green turban, receive a stipend from the treasury, are judged only by their chief, and, however debased by fortune or character, still assert the proud pre-eminence of their birth A family of three hundred persons, the pure and orthodox branch of the caliph Hassan, is preserved without taint or suspicion in the holy cities of Mecca and Medina, and still retains, after the revolutions of twelve centuries, the custody of the temple and the sovereignty of their native land The fame and merit of Mahomet would ennoble a plebeian race, and the ancient blood of the Koreish transcends the recent majesty of the kings of the earth<sup>b</sup>

The talents of Mahomet are entitled <sup>Silence of Ma</sup> to our applause, but his success has <sup>homot</sup>

perhaps too strongly attracted our admiration Are we surprised that a multitude of proselytes should embrace the doctrine and the passions of an eloquent fanatic? In the heresies of the church, the same seduction has been tried and repeated from the time of the apostles to that of the reformers Does it seem incredible that a private citizen should grasp the sword and the sceptre, subdue his native country, and erect a monarchy by his victorious arms? In the moving picture of the dynasties of the east, a hundred fortunate usurpers have arisen from a baser origin, surmounted more formidable obstacles, and filled a large scope of empire and conquest Mahomet was alike instructed to preach and to fight, and the union of these opposite qualities, while it enhanced his merit, contributed to his success the operation of force and persuasion, of enthusiasm and fear, continually acted on each other, till every barrier yielded to their irresistible power His voice invited the Arabs to freedom and victory, to arms and rapine, to the indulgence of their darling passions in this world and the other the restraints which he imposed were requisite to establish the credit of the prophet, and to exercise the obedience of the people, and the only objection to his success was his rational creed of the unity and perfections of God It is not the propagation but the per-

<sup>Permanency of</sup> manency of his religion that deserves <sup>his religion</sup>

our wonder the same pure and perfect impression which he engraved at Mecca and Medina, is preserved after the revolutions of twelve centuries, by the Indian, the African, and the Turkish proselytes of the Koran If the christian apostles, St Peter or St Paul, could return to the Vatican, they might possibly inquire the name of the Deity who is worshipped with such mysterious rites in that magnificent temple at Oxford or Geneva, they would experience less surprise, but it might still be incumbent on them to peruse the catechism of the church, and to study the orthodox commentators on their own writings and the words of their Master But the Turkish dome of St Sophia, with an increase of splendour and size, represents the humble tabernacle erected at Medina by the hands of Mahomet The Mahometans have uniformly withstood the temptation of reducing the objects of their faith to be an Edifice of Shells, cum in Ægypto sit Chahsa de gente Ali, quorum ego communem habeo patrem et indicem

a The kings of Persia of the last dynasty are descended from Shiek Bekt, a saint of the fourteenth century, and throned him from Monka Cassem, the son of Hovein, the son of Ali (Olearius, p 937 Chardin, tom iii p 289) But I cannot trace the intermedial degrees in my genuine or fabulous pedigree If they were truly Fatimites, they might draw their origin from the princes of Mazandern, who reigned in the ninth century (D Herbelot, p 96)

b The present state of the family of Mahomet and Ali is most accurately described by Demetrius Canemur, (Hist of the Ottoman empire, p 94) and Niebuhr (Description de l'Arabie p 9-16, 317 &c) It is much to be lamented, that the Danish traveller was unable to pursue the chronicles of Arabia

* The name of Antichrist may seem ridiculous, but the Mahometans have liberally borrowed the fables of every religion (Sale's Preliminary Discourse, p 80-82) In the royal stable of Ismail, two horses were always kept saddled, one for the Mahadi himself, the other for his lieutenant Jesus the son of Mary

† In the year of the Hejra 200 (A D 815) see D Herbelot, p 546
‡ D Herbelot, p 312. The enemies of the Fatimites disgraced them by a Jewish origin. Yet they accurately deduced their genealogy from Israhel the sixth Imam, and the impartial Abulfidâ allows (Annual Moslem p 230) that they were owned by many, qui abique controversia genuim sinit Alidarum homines propterea, inquit, sunt gentis exacte califfes. He quotes some lines from the celebrated Scherif or Mahadi, L'égone humiliatam Induam in turris hostium? (I suspect him and devotion to a level with the senses and imagination of man "I believe in one God, and Mahomet the apostle of God," is the simple and invariable profession of Islam. The intellectual image of the Deity has never been degraded by any visible idol, the honours of the prophet have never transgressed the measure of human virtue, and his living precepts have restrained the gratitude of his disciples within the bounds of reason and religion. The votaries of Ali have indeed consecrated the memory of their hero, his wife, and his children, and some of the Persian doctors pretend that the divine essence was incarnate in the person of the Imams, but their superstition is universally condemned by the Sunnites, and their impiety has afforded a seasonable warning against the worship of saints and martyrs. The metaphysical questions on the attributes of God, and the liberty of man, have been agitated in the schools of the Mahometans, as well as in those of the christians, but among the former they have never engaged the passions of the people or disturbed the tranquillity of the state. The cause of this important difference may be found in the separation or union of the regal and sacerdotal characters. It was the interest of the caliphs, the successors of the prophet and commanders of the faithful, to repress and discourage all religious innovations: the order, the discipline, the temporal and spiritual ambition of the clergy, are unknown to the Moslems, and the sages of the law are the guides of their conscience and the oracles of their faith. From the Atlantic to the Ganges, the Koran is acknowledged as the fundamental code, not only of theology but of civil and criminal jurisprudence, and the laws which regulate the actions and the property of mankind, are guarded by the infallible and immutable sanction of the will of God. This religious servitude is attended with some practical disadvantage, the illiterate legislator had been often misled by his own prejudices and those of his country, and the institutions of the Arabian desert may be ill adapted to the wealth and numbers of Ispahan and Constantinople. On these occasions, the Cadhi respectfully places on his head the holy volume, and substitutes a dexterous interpretation more apposite to the principles of equity, and the manners and policy of the times.

His merit towards his country His beneficial or pernicious influence on the public happiness is the last consideration in the character of Mahomet. The most bitter or most bigoted of his christian or Jewish foes, will surely allow that he assumed a false commission to inculcate a salutary doctrine, less perfect only than their own. He piously supposed, as the basis of his religion, the truth and sanctity of their prior revelations, the virtues and miracles of their founders. The idols of Arabia were broken before the throne of God, the blood of human victims was expiated by prayer, and fasting, and alms, the laudable or innocent arts of devotion, and his rewards and punishments of a future life were painted by the images most congenial to an ignorant and carnal generation. Mahomet was perhaps incapable of dictating a moral and political system for the use of his countrymen, but he breathed among the faithful a spirit of charity and friendship, recommended the practice of the social virtues, and checked, by his laws and precepts, the thirst of revenge and the oppression of widows and orphans. The hostile tribes were united in faith and obedience, and the valour which had been idly spent in domestic quarrels, was vigorously directed against a foreign enemy. Had the impulse been less powerful, Arabia, free at home, and formidable abroad, might have flourished under a succession of her native monarchs. Her sovereignty was lost by the extent and rapidity of conquest. The colonies of the nation were scattered over the east and west, and their blood was mingled with the blood of their converts and captives. After the reign of three caliphs, the throne was transported from Medina to the valley of Damascus and the banks of the Tigris, the holy cities were violated by impious war, Arabia was ruled by the rod of a subject, perhaps of a stranger, and the Bedouens of the desert, awakening from their dream of dominion, resumed their old and solitary independence.

CHAP LI

The conquest of Persia, Syria, Egypt, Africa, and Spain, by the Arabs or Saracens — Empire of the caliphs, or successors of Mahomet — State of the christians, &c under their government

THE revolution of Arabia had not changed the character of the Arabs. The death of Mahomet was the signal of independence, and the hasty structure of his power and religion tottered to its foundations. A small and faithful band of his primitive disciples had listened to his eloquence, and shared his distress, had fled with the apostle from the persecution of Mecca, or had received the fugitive in the walls of Medina. The increasing myriads, who acknowledged Mahomet as their king and prophet, had been compelled by his arms, or allured by his prosperity. The polytheists were confounded by the simple idea of a solitary and invisible God, the pride of the christians and Jews disdained the yoke of a mortal and contemporary legislator. Their habits of faith and obedience were not sufficiently confirmed, and many of the new converts

Union of the Arabs
A D 632.

<sup>a</sup> The writers of the Modern Universal History (vol. 1 and 11) have compiled in 8vo folio p. 1, &c the life of Mahomet and the annals of the caliphs. They enjoyed the advantage of reading and sometimes correcting the Arabic text: yet, notwithstanding their high sounding boasts, I cannot find, after the conclusion of my work, that they have afforded me much (if any) additional information. The dull mass is not quickened by a spark of philosophy or taste: and the compilers indulge the criticism of acrimonious bigotry against Bonapartists, Sale, Gagnier and all who treated Mahomet with favour, or even justice.

regretted the venerable antiquity of the law of Moses, or the rites and mysteries of the catholic church, or the idols, the sacrifices, the joyous festivals of their pagan ancestors. The jarring interests and hereditary feuds of the Arabian tribes had not yet coalesced in a system of union and subordination, and the barbarians were impatient of the mildest and most salutary laws that curbed their passions, or violated their customs. They submitted with reluctance to the religious precepts of the Koran, the abstinence from wine, the fast of the Ramadan, and the daily repetition of five prayers, and the alms and tithes, which were collected for the treasury of Medina, could be distinguished only by a name from the payment of a perpetual and ignominious tribute. The example of Mahomet had excited a spirit of fanaticism or imposture, and several of his rivals presumed to imitate the conduct, and defy the authority, of the living prophet. At the head of the fugitives and auxiliaries, the first caliph was reduced to the cities of Mecca, Medina, and Tayef, and perhaps the Kureish would have restored the idols of the Caaba, if their levity had not been checked by a seasonable reproof. "Ye men of Mecca, will ye be the last to embrace, and the first to abandon, the religion of Islam?" After exhorting the Moslems to confide in the aid of God and his apostle, Abubeker resolved, by a vigorous attack, to prevent the junction of the rebels. The women and children were safely lodged in the cavities of the mountains: the warriors, marching under eleven banners, diffused the terror of their arms, and the appearance of a military force revived and confirmed the loyalty of the faithful. The inconstant tribes accepted, with humble repentance, the duties of prayer, and fasting, and alms, and, after some examples of success and severity, the most daring apostates fell prostrate before the sword of the Lord and of Caled. In the fertile province of Yemanah,<sup>a</sup> between the Red sea and the gulf of Persia, in a city not inferior to Medina itself, a powerful chief, his name was Moseilama, had assumed the character of a prophet, and the tribe of Hanifa listened to his voice. A female prophetess was attracted by his reputation: the deceivings of words and actions were spurned by these favourites of heaven,<sup>b</sup> and they employed several days in mystic and amorous converse. An obscure sentence of his Koran, or book, is yet extant,<sup>c</sup> and, in the pride of his mission, Moseilama condescended to offer a partition of the earth. The proposal was answered by Mahomet with contempt,

<sup>a</sup> See the description of the city and country of Al Yemanah, in Abulfeda, Descript. Arabie, p. 60, 61. In the thirteenth century there were some ruins, and a few palms: but in the present century, the same ground is occupied by the visions and arms of a modern prophet, whose tenets are imperfectly known. (Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 296—302.)

<sup>b</sup> Their first salutation may be transcribed, but cannot be translated. It was thus that Moseilama said or sung:
Surge tandem namque strenue permolecinda, nam stratus tibi torus est.

Aut in propulso tentorio a velis, aut in abditiore cubiculo ei malis Aut supinum te humi exporreculam suscipio, a velis, aut si malis manibus pedibusque nixam
Aut a velis (Priapi) gemino triente, aut si malis totus veniam

but the rapid progress of the impostor awakened the fears of his successor: forty thousand Moslems were assembled under the standard of Caled, and the existence of their faith was resigned to the event of a decisive battle. In the first action they were repulsed with the loss of twelve hundred men, but the skill and perseverance of their general prevailed: their defeat was avenged by the slaughter of ten thousand infidels, and Moseilama himself was pierced by an Ethiopian slave with the same javelin which had mortally wounded the uncle of Mahomet. The various rebels of Arabia, without a chief or cause, were speedily suppressed by the power and discipline of the rising monarchy, and the whole nation again professed, and more steadfastly held, the religion of the Koran. The ambition of the caliphs provided an immediate exercise for the restless spirit of the Saracens: their valour was united in the prosecution of a holy war, and their enthusiasm was equally confirmed by opposition and victory.

From the rapid conquests of the Saracens a presumption will naturally arise, that the first caliphs commanded in person the armies of the faithful, and sought the crown of martyrdom in the foremost ranks of the battle. The courage of Abubeker,<sup>d</sup> Omar,<sup>e</sup> and Othman,<sup>f</sup> had indeed been tried in the persecution and wars of the prophet, and the personal assurance of paradise must have taught them to despise the pleasures and dangers of the present world. But they ascended the throne in a venerable or mature age, and esteemed the domestic cares of religion and justice the most important duties of a sovereign. Except the presence of Omar at the siege of Jerusalem, their longest expeditions were the frequent pilgrimage from Medina to Mecca, and they calmly received the tidings of victory as they prayed or preached before the sepulchre of the prophet. The austere and frugal measure of their lives was the effect of virtue or habit, and the pride of their simplicity insulted the vain magnificence of the kings of the earth. When Abubeker assumed the office of caliph, he enjoined his daughter Ayesha to take a strict account of his private patrimony, that it might be evident whether he were enriched or impoverished by the service of the state. He thought himself entitled to a stipend of three pieces of gold, with the sufficient maintenance of a single camel and a black slave, but on the Friday of each week he distributed the residue of his own and the public money, first to the most worthy, and then to the

Imo, totus venito, O Apostole Dei, clamabit fœmina. Id ipsum dicebat.

Moseilama, mali quoque suggestit Deus. The prophetess begot, after the fall of her lover, returned to idolatry, but, under the reign of Morwyah, she became a muslimian, and died at Meccæ. (Abulfeda, Annal. vers. Renke, p. 63.)

<sup>c</sup> See this text, which demonstrates a God from the work of generation in Abulphragus, in (Specimen Hist. Arabum, p. 13 and Dynast. p. 107) and Abulfeda (Annal. p. 63).

<sup>d</sup> He reigns in Eutychius, tom. ii. p. 251. Eutychius p. 18. Abulphragus, p. 108. Abulfeda, p. 60. D. Herbelot, p. 58.

<sup>e</sup> His reign in Eutychius p. 261. Eutychius, p. 21. Abulphragus, p. 110. Abulfeda, p. 60. D. Herbelot, p. 606.

<sup>f</sup> His reign in Eutychius p. 277. Eutychius, p. 36. Abulphragus, p. 115. Abulfeda, p. 75. D. Herbelot, p. 602.

most indigent, of the Moslems. The remains of his wealth, a coarse garment, and five pieces of gold, were delivered to his successor, who lamented with a modest sigh his own inability to equal such an admirable model. Yet the abstinence and humility of Omar were not inferior to the virtues of Abubeker, his food consisted of barley-bread or dates, his drink was water, he preached in a gown that was torn or tattered in twelve places, and a Persian satrap, who paid his homage to the conqueror, found him asleep among the beggars on the steps of the mosque of Medina. Economy is the source of liberality, and the increase of the revenue enabled Omar to establish a just and perpetual reward for the past and present services of the faithful. Careless of his own emolument, he assigned to Abbas, the uncle of the prophet, the first and most ample allowance of twenty-five thousand drams or pieces of silver. Five thousand were allotted to each of the aged warriors, the relics of the field of Beder, and the last and meanest of the companions of Mahomet was distinguished by the annual reward of three thousand pieces. One thousand was the stipend of the veterans who had fought in the first battles against the Greeks and Persians, and the decreasing pay, as low as fifty pieces of silver, was adapted to the respective merit and seniority of the soldiers of Omar. Under his reign, and that of his predecessor, the conquerors of the east were the trusty servants of God and the people: the mass of the public treasure was consecrated to the expenses of peace and war, a prudent mixture of justice and bounty maintained the discipline of the Saracens, and they united, by a rare felicity, the despatch and execution of despotism, with the equal and frugal maxims of a republican government. The heroic courage of Ali, the consummate prudence of Moawiyah, excited the emulation of their subjects, and the talents which had been exercised in the school of civil discord, were more usefully applied to propagate the faith and dominion of the prophet. In the sloth and vanity of the palace of Damascus, the succeeding princes of the house of Ommiyah were alike destitute of the qualifications of statesmen and of saints. Yet the spoils of unknown nations were continually laid at the foot of their throne, and the uniform ascent of the Arabian greatness must be ascribed to the spirit of the nation rather than the abilities of their chiefs. A large deduction must be allowed for the weakness of their enemies. The birth of Mahomet was fortunately placed in the most degenerate and disorderly period of the Persians, the Romans, and the barbarians, of Europe the empires of Trajan, or even of Constantine or Charlemagne, would have repelled the assault of the naked Saracens, and the torrent of fanaticism might have been obscurely lost in the sands of Arabia.

In the victorious days of the Roman republic, it had been the aim of the senate to confine their consuls and legions to a single war, and completely to suppress a first enemy before they provoked the hostilities of a second. These timid maxims of policy were disdained by the magnanimity or enthusiasm of the Arabian caliphs. With the same vigour and success they invaded the successors of Augustus and those of Artaxerxes, and the rival monarchies at the same instant became the prey of an enemy whom they had been so long accustomed to despise. In the ten years of the administration of Omar, the Saracens reduced to his obedience thirty-six thousand cities or castles, destroyed four thousand churches or temples of the unbelievers, and edified fourteen hundred mosques for the exercise of the religion of Mahomet. One hundred years after his flight from Mecca, the arms and the reign of his successors extended from India to the Atlantic ocean, over the various and distant provinces, which may be comprised under the names of, I Persia, II Syria, III Egypt, IV Africa, and, V Spain. Under this general division, I shall proceed to unfold these memorable transactions, despatching with brevity the remote and less interesting conquests of the east, and reserving a fuller narrative for those domestic countries, which had been included within the pale of the Roman empire. Yet I must excuse my own defects by a just complaint of the blindness and insufficiency of my guides. The Greeks, so loquacious in controversy, have not been anxious to celebrate the triumphs of their enemies. After a century of ignorance, the first annals of the Mussulmans were collected in a great measure from the voice of tradition. Among the numerous productions of Arabic and Persian literature,<sup>m</sup> our interpreters have selected the imperfect sketches of a more recent age.<sup>n</sup> The art and genius of history have ever been unknown to the

<sup>g</sup> His reign in Eutychius p. 343. Elmæin, p. 51. Abulpharagius, p. 117. Abulfeda p. 83. D'Herbelot, p. 69.

<sup>h</sup> His reign in Eutychius, p. 344. Elmæin p. 54. Abulpharagius, p. 123. Abulfeda, p. 107. D'Herbelot p. 586.

<sup>i</sup> Their reigns in Eutychius tom. ii. p. 360—395. Elmæin p. 59—108. Abulpharagius Dynast. ix. p. 124—139. Abulfeda p. 111—141. D'Herbelot Bibliothèque Orientale, p. 691 and the particular articles of the Ommiades.

<sup>k</sup> For the seventh and eighth century, we have scarcely any original evidence of the Byzantine historians except the Chronicles of Theophanes (Theophanis Confessoris Chronographia Græc. et Lat. cum notis Jacobi Goar. Paris, 1655, in folio) and the Abridgment of Nicephorus, (Nicephori Patriarchæ C. P. Breviarium Historiarum Græc. et Lat. Paris 1648 in folio) who both lived in the beginning of the ninth century, (see Hanekius de Scriptoribus Byzantinis p. 200—246). Their contemporary Photinus does not seem to be more opulent. After praising the style of Nicephorus he adds: Καὶ ὁλως πολλὰ ἐστὶ τὸν προ αὐτοῦ ἀποκριπόμενον τῆς τῆς ἱστορίας τῆς συνγραφῆς, καὶ οὐκ ἐκπληρῶν of his extreme brevity (Phot. Biblioth. Cod. lxxvi. p. 100). Some additions may be gleaned from the more recent histories of Cedrenus and Zonaras of the twelfth century.

<sup>l</sup> Tabari, or Al Tabari, a native of Taborestan, a famous imam of Bagdad and the Liby of the Arabians, finished his general history in the year of the Hegiri 302 (A. D. 914). At the request of his friends he reduced a work of 30 000 sheets to a more reasonable size. But his Arabic original is known only by the Persian and Turkish versions. The Saracenic history of Ebn Amīd or Imaïn, is said to be an abridgement of the great Tabari (Ockley's Hist. of the Saracens, vol. ii. preface p. xxxiv. and list of authors, D'Herbelot, p. 866. 870. 1014).

<sup>m</sup> Besides the lists of authors framed by Prædieu (Life of Mahomet, p. 179—189) Ockley (at the end of his second volume) and Petit de la Croix (Hist. de Geographie, p. 525—550) we find in the Bibliothèque Orientale Tarikh a catalogue of two or three hundred histories or chronicles of the east of which not more than three or four are older than Tabari. A lively sketch of oriental literature is given by Kerké (in his Præfation ad Hagii Chalife historiarum memoriam ad calcem Abulfeda. Tobulæ Syriæ, Lipsiæ 1766) but his project and the French version of Petit de la Croix (Hist. de Timur Dec. tom. 2. preface p. xlv) have fallen in the ground.

<sup>n</sup> The particular historians and geographers will be occasionally introduced. The four following titles represent the Annals which have guided me in this general narrative: 1. Annales Eutychii Patriarchæ Alexandrini ab Eduardo Pocockio Oxoniæ 1656 2 vols. in 4to. A pompous edition of an indifferent author, translated by Pocock

Asiatics,* they are ignorant of the laws of criticism, and our monkish chronicles of the same period may be compared to their most popular works, which are never vivified by the spirit of philosophy and freedom. The oriental library of a Frenchman<sup>2</sup> would instruct the most learned mufti of the east, and perhaps the Arabs might not find in a single historian, so clear and comprehensive a narrative of their own exploits, as that which will be deduced in the ensuing sheets.

I In the first year of the first caliph, his lieutenant Caled, the sword of God, and the scourge of the infidels, advanced to the banks of the Euphrates, and reduced the cities of Anbar and Hira. Westward of the ruins of Babylon, a tribe of sedentary Arabs had fixed themselves on the verge of the desert, and Hira was the seat of a race of kings who had embraced the christian religion, and reigned above six hundred years under the shadow of the throne of Persia.<sup>3</sup> The last of the Mondars was defeated and slain by Caled, his son was sent a captive to Medina, his nobles bowed before the successor of the prophet, the people were tempted by the example and success of their countrymen, and the caliph accepted as the first-fruits of foreign conquest, an annual tribute of seventy thousand pieces of gold. The conquerors, and even their historians, were astonished by the dawn of their future greatness. "In the same year," says Elmacin, "Caled fought many signal battles, an immense multitude of the infidels was slaughtered, and spoils, infinite and innumerable, were acquired by the victorious Moslems."<sup>4</sup> But the invincible Caled was soon transferred to the Syrian war: the invasion of the Persian frontier was conducted by less active or less prudent commanders: the Saracens were repulsed with loss in the passage of the Euphrates, and, though they chastised the insolent pursuit of the Magians, their remaining forces still hovered in the desert of Babylon.

Battle of Cadesia,
A D 636

The indignation and fears of the Persians suspended for a moment their intestine divisions. By the unanimous sentence of the priests and nobles, their queen Arzema was deposed, the sixth of the transient usurpers, who had arisen and vanished in three or four years, since the death of Chosroes and the retreat of Heraclius. Her tiara was placed on the head of Yezdegerd, the grandson of Chosroes, and the same æra, which coincides with an astronomical period,<sup>5</sup> has recorded the fall of the Sassanian dynasty and the religion of Zoroaster.<sup>6</sup> The youth and inexperience of the prince, he was only fifteen years of age, declined a perilous encounter: the royal standard was delivered into the hands of his general Rustam, and a remnant of thirty thousand regular troops was swelled in truth, or in opinion, to one hundred and twenty thousand subjects, or allies, of the great king. The Moslems, whose numbers were reinforced from twelve to thirty thousand, had pitched their camp in the plains of Cadesia,<sup>7</sup> and their line, though it consisted of fewer men, could produce more soldiers, than the unwieldy host of the infidels. I shall here observe what I must often repeat, that the charge of the Arabs was not, like that of the Greeks and Romans, the effort of a firm and compact infantry: their military force was chiefly formed of cavalry and archers, and the engagement, which was often interrupted and often renewed by single combats and flying skirmishes, might be protracted without any decisive event to the continuance of several days. The periods of the battle of Cadesia were distinguished by their peculiar appellations. The first, from the well-timed appearance of six thousand of the Syrian brethren, was denominated the day of succour. The day of concussion might express the disorder of one, or perhaps of both, of the contending armies. The third, a nocturnal tumult, received the whimsical name of the night of barking, from the discordant clamours, which were compared to the inarticulate sounds of the fiercest animals. The morning of the succeeding day determined the fate of Persia, and a seasonable whirlwind drove a cloud of dust against the faces of the unbelievers. The clangour of arms was echoed to the tent of Rustam, who, far unlike the

to gratify the presbyterian prejudices of his friend Selden. 2 Historia Saracenica Georgii Elmacini, opera et studio Thomæ Erpenii, in 4to Lugd. Batavonium, 1625. He is said to have hastily translated a corrupt MS., and his version is often deficient in style and sense. 3 Historia compendiosa Dynastiarum a Gregorio Abulpharago, in terprete Edwardo Pocockio in 4to Oxon 1663. More useful for the history than the civil history of the east. 4 Abulfeda Annales Moslemici ad Ann Hegira ccccvi a Jo Jac Reiske, in 4to Lipsiæ, 1764. The best of our chronicles, both for the original and version, yet how far below the name of Abulfeda. We know that he wrote at Hamah, in the fourteenth century. The three former were christians of the tenth, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, the two first, natives of Egypt a Melchite patriarch and a Jacobite serbe. 5 M. de Guignes (Hist. des Huns tom. i. pref. xix. xx.) has characterized, with truth and knowledge, the two sorts of Arabian historians the dry annalist, and the tumid and flowery orator. 6 Bibliothèque Orientale, par M. D. Herbelot, in folio Paris 1697. For the character of the respectable author, consult his friend Thesart not (Voyages du Levant, part. i. chap. 1.) His work is an agreeable miscellany, which must gratify every taste: but I never can digest the alphabetical order, and I find him more satisfactory in the Persian than the Arabic history. The recent supplement from the papers of M. M. Visdelon and Gailard (in folio La Haye, 1779) is of a different cast a medley of tales, proverbs, and Chinese antiquities. 7 Pocock will explain the chronology (Specimen Hist. Arabum p. 63-74) and D Anville the geography (L'Euphrate et le Tigre p. 125) of the dynasty of the Almondure. The English scholar understood more Arabic than the Mufti of Aleppo (Ockley, vol. ii. p. 34), the French geographer is equally at home in every age and every climate of the world.

8 Fecit et Chaled plurima in hoc anno prelia, in quibus vicerunt Musulmi, et infideliam immensa multitudinem occisa spolia infinita et innumera sunt uacti (Hist. Saracenica, p. 20.) The christian annalist slides into the national and compendious term of infidels, and I often adopt (I hope without scandal) this characteristic mode of expression.

9 A cycle of 120 years, at the end of which an intercalary month of 30 days supplied the use of our Brevetile, and restored the integrity of the solar year. In a great revolution of 1440 years this intercalation was successively removed from the first to the twelfth month: but Hyde and Freret are involved in a profound controversy, whether the twelve, or only eight of these changes were accomplished before the era of Yezdegerd which is unanimously fixed to the 16th of June A D 632. How laboriously does the curious spirit of Europe explore the darkest and most distant antiquities! (Hyde, de Reliquiæ Persarum, c. 14-18 p. 181-211. Freret in the Mém. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xvi. p. 233-267.)

10 Nine days after the death of Mithomet, (7th June, A D 632) we find the era of Yezdegerd, (16th June, A D 632) and his accession cannot be postponed beyond the end of the first year. His predecessors could not therefore resist the arms of the caliph Omar, and these unquestionable dates overthrow the thoughtless chronology of Abulpharagius. See Ockley's Hist. of the Saracens vol. i. p. 130.

11 Cadesia, says the Nubian geographer, (p. 121) is in marginale solitudine 61 leagues from Buda, and two stations from Cufa. Other (Voyage, tom. i. p. 163) reckons 15 leagues, and observes, that the place is supplied with dates and water.

ancient hero of his name, was gently reclining in a cool and tranquil shade, amidst the baggage of his camp, and the train of mules that were laden with gold and silver. On the sound of danger he started from his couch, but his flight was overtaken by a valiant Arab, who caught him by the foot, struck off his head, hoisted it on a lance, and instantly returning to the field of battle, carried slaughter and dismay among the thickest ranks of the Persians. The Saracens confess a loss of seven thousand five hundred men, and the battle of Cadesia is justly described by the epithets of obstinate and atrocious. The standard of the monarchy was overthrown and captured in the field—a leathern apron of a blacksmith, who, in ancient times, had arisen the deliverer of Persia, but this badge of heroic poverty was disguised, and almost concealed, by a profusion of precious gems. After this victory, the wealthy province of Irak, or Assyria, submitted to the caliph, and his conquests were firmly established by the speedy foundation of Bassora,* a place which ever commands the trade and navigation of the Persians. At the distance of fourscore miles from the gulf, the Euphrates and Tigris unite in a broad and direct current, which is aptly styled the river of the Arabs. In the midway, between the junction and the mouth of these famous streams, the new settlement was planted on the western bank: the first colony was composed of eight hundred Moslems, but the influence of the situation soon reared a flourishing and populous capital. The air, though excessively hot, is pure and healthy: the meadows are filled with palm-trees and cattle, and one of the adjacent valleys has been celebrated among the four paradises or gardens of Asia. Under the first caliphs, the jurisdiction of this Arabian colony extended over the southern provinces of Persia: the city has been sanctified by the tombs of the companions and martyrs, and the vessels of Europe still frequent the port of Bassora, as a convenient station and passage of the Indian trade.

Foundation of
Bassora

Sack of Madayn
A. D. 637
March

After the defeat of Cadesia, a country intersected by rivers and canals might have opposed an insuperable barrier to the victorious cavalry, and the walls of Ctesiphon or Madayn, which had resisted the battering-rams of the Romans, would not have yielded to the darts of the Saracens. But the flying Persians were overcome by the belief, that the last day of their religion and empire was at hand: the strongest posts were abandoned by treachery or cowardice, and the king, with a part of his family and treasures, escaped to Holwan at the foot of the Median hills. In the third month after the battle, Said, the lieutenant of Omar, passed the Tigris without opposition, the capital was taken by assault, and the disorderly resistance of the people gave a keener edge to the sabres of the Moslems, who shouted with religious transport, "This is the white palace of Chosroes, this is the promise of the apostle of God!" The naked robbers of the desert were suddenly enriched beyond the measure of their hope or knowledge. Each chamber revealed a new treasure secreted with art, or ostentatiously displayed, the gold and silver, the various wardrobes and precious furniture, surpassed (says Abulfeda) the estimate of fancy or numbers, and another historian defines the untold and almost infinite mass, by the fabulous computation of three thousands of thousands of thousands of pieces of gold. Some minute though curious facts represent the contrast of riches and ignorance. From the remote islands of the Indian ocean, a large provision of camphire<sup>b</sup> had been imported, which is employed with a mixture of wax to illuminate the palaces of the east. Strangers to the name and properties of that odoriferous gum, the Saracens, mistaking it for salt, mingled the camphire in their bread, and were astonished at the bitterness of the taste. One of the apartments of the palace was decorated with a carpet of silk, sixty cubits in length, and as many in breadth: a paradise or garden was depicted on the ground, the flowers, fruits, and shrubs, were imitated by the figures of the gold embroidery, and the colours of the precious stones, and the ample square was encircled by a variegated and verdant border. The Arabian general persuaded his soldiers to relinquish their claim, in the reasonable hope, that the eyes of the caliph would be delighted with the splendid workmanship of nature and industry. Regardless of the merit of art, and the pomp of royalty, the rigid Omar divided the prize among his brethren of Medina: the picture was destroyed, but such was the intrinsic value of the materials, that the share of Ali alone was sold for twenty thousand drams. A mule that carried away the tiara and cuirass, the belt and bracelets, of Chosroes, was overtaken by the pursuers, the gorgeous trophy was presented to the commander of the faithful, and the gravest of the companions condescended to smile when they beheld the white beard, hairy arms, and uncouth figure of the veteran, who was invested with the spoils of the Great King. The sack of Ctesiphon was followed by its desertion and gradual decay. The Saracens disliked the air and situation of the place, and Omar was advised by his numbers of Timen may be the error not of the text, but of the version. The best translators from the Greek, for instance, I find to be very poor arithmeticians.

Foundation of
Cufa

<sup>b</sup> The camphire tree grows in China and Japan: but many hundred weight of these incense sorts are exchanged for a single pound of the more precious gum of Borneo and Sumatra (Raynal, Hist. Philosophique, tom. i. p. 362—365. Dictionnaire d'Hist. Naturelle par Bomare, Miller's Gardener's Dictionary.) These may be the islands of the first elation from whence the Arabians imported their camphire (Geograph. Nub. p. 34, 35. D'Herbelot p. 232.)

<sup>c</sup> See Geogr. Vie de Mahomet, tom. i. p. 376, 377. I may credit the fact, without believing the prophecy.

* Arcus conlumiæ, plus semel renovatum, i.e. the well chosen expressions of the translator of Abulfeda. (Reiske, p. 69.)

† The reader may satisfy himself on the subject of Bassora by consulting the following writers: Geograph. Nubiens, p. 121. D'Herbelot, Bibliothèque Orientale, p. 192. D'Anville, l'Euphrate et le Tigre, p. 130, 133, 145. Raynal, Hist. Philosophique de deux Indes, tom. ii. p. 92—100. Voyages de Pietro della Valle, tom. ii. p. 370—391. De Tavernier, tom. i. p. 240—247. De Thevenot, tom. ii. p. 545—584. D'Olier, tom. ii. p. 45—78. De Niebuhr, tom. ii. p. 172—109.

‡ Ment. vix potest numerare comprehendique spolia. (Mastruc. cesserunt. Abulfeda, p. 69.) Yet I still suspect, that the extravagant general to remove the seat of government to the western side of the Euphrates. In every age the foundation and ruin of the Assyrian cities have been easy and rapid: the country is destitute of stone and timber, and the most solid structures<sup>d</sup> are composed of bricks baked in the sun, and joined by a cement of the native bitumen. The name of Cufa<sup>e</sup> describes a habitation of reeds and earth, but the importance of the new capital was supported by the numbers, wealth, and spirit, of a colony of veterans, and their licentiousness was indulged by the wisest caliphs, who were apprehensive of provoking the revolt of a hundred thousand swords. "Ye men of Cufa," said Ali, who solicited their aid, "you have been always conspicuous by your valour. You conquered the Persian king, and scattered his forces, till you had taken possession of his inheritance." This mighty conquest was achieved by the battles of Jalula and Nehavend. After the loss of the former, Yezdegerd fled from Holwan, and concealed his shame and despair in the mountains of Farsistan, from whence Cyrus had descended with his equal and valiant companions. The courage of the nation survived that of the monarch: among the hills to the south of Ecbatana or Hamadan, one hundred and fifty thousand Persians made a third and final stand for their religion and country, and the decisive battle of Nehavend was styled by the Arabs the victory of victories. If it be true that the flying general of the Persians was stopt and overtaken in a crowd of mules and camels laden with honey, the incident, however slight or singular, will denote the luxurious impediments of an oriental army.<sup>f</sup>

Conquest of Persia,
A. D. 637—651

The geography of Persia is darkly delineated by the Greeks and Latins, but the most illustrious of her cities appear to be more ancient than the invasion of the Arabs. By the reduction of Hamadan and Ispahan, of Caswin, Tauris, and Rei, they gradually approached the shores of the Caspian sea, and the orators of Mecca might applaud the success and spirit of the faithful, who had already lost sight of the northern bear, and had almost transcended the bounds of the habitable world.<sup>g</sup> Again turning towards the west and the Roman empire, they repassed the Tigris over the bridge of Mosul, and, in the captive provinces of Armenia and Mesopotamia, embraced their victorious brethren of the Syrian army. From the palace of Madayn their eastern progress was not less rapid or extensive. They advanced along the Tigris and the gulf, penetrated through the passes of the mountains into the valley of the Estachar or Persepolis, and pro-

faned the last sanctuary of the Magian empire. The grandson of Chosroes was nearly surprised among the falling columns and mutilated figures, a sad emblem of the past and present fortune of Persia,<sup>h</sup> he fled with accelerated haste over the desert of Kirman, implored the aid of the warlike Segestans, and sought an humble refuge on the verge of the Turkish and Chinese power. But a victorious army is insensible of fatigue: the Arabs divided their forces in the pursuit of a timorous enemy, and the caliph Othman promised the government of Chorasana to the first general who should enter that large and populous country, the kingdom of the ancient Bactrians. The condition was accepted, the prize was deserved, the standard of Mahomet was planted on the walls of Herat, Merou, and Balch, and the successful leader neither halted nor reposed till his foaming cavalry had tasted the waters of the Oxus. In the public anarchy, the independent governors of the cities and castles obtained their separate capitulations: the terms were granted or imposed by the esteem, the prudence, or the compassion, of the victors, and a simple profession of faith established the distinction between a brother and a slave. After a noble defence, Harmozan, the prince or satrap of Alwaz and Susa, was compelled to surrender his person and his state to the discretion of the caliph, and their interview exhibits a portrait of the Arabian manners. In the presence, and by the command, of Omai, the gay barbarian was despoiled of his silken robes embroidered with gold, and of his tiara bedecked with rubies and emeralds. "Are you now sensible," said the conqueror to his naked captive, "are you now sensible of the judgment of God, and of the different rewards of infidelity and obedience?" "Alas!" replied Harmozan, "I feel them too deeply. In the days of our common ignorance, we fought with the weapons of the flesh, and my nation was superior. God was then neuter: since he has espoused your quarrel, you have subverted our kingdom and religion." Oppressed by this painful dialogue, the Persian complained of intolerable thirst, but discovered some apprehensions lest he should be killed whilst he was drinking a cup of water. "Be of good courage," said the caliph, "your life is safe till you have drank this water." The crafty satrap accepted the assurance, and instantly dashed the vase against the ground. Omar would have avenged the deceit, but his companions represented the sanctity of an oath, and the speedy conversion of Harmozan entitled him not only to a free pardon, but even to a stipend of two thousand pieces of gold. The administration of Persia was regulated

<sup>d</sup> The most considerable ruins of Assyria are the tower of Belus, at Babylon, and the hall of Chosroes at Ctesiphon: they have been visited by that vain and curious traveller Pietro della Valle, (tom. i. p. 713—718, 731—735.)

<sup>e</sup> Consult the article of Causak in the Bibliothèque de D'Herbelot, (p. 277, 278) and the second volume of Ockley's History, particularly p. 40 and 153.

<sup>f</sup> See the article of Nehavend, in D'Herbelot p. 667, 668, and Voyages en Perse et en Perse, par Otter tom. i. p. 191.

<sup>g</sup> It is in such a style of ignorance and wonder that the Athenian orator describes the Arctic conquests of Alexander, who never advanced beyond the shores of the Caspian. Ἀνατολὴν ἐξω τῆς ἀρκτοῦ καὶ τῆς

οὐρανίου, οὐρανὸν δὲ, πρὸς μεσημέριον. Æschines contra Ctesiphonem tom. iii. p. 554 edit. Græc. Oriental Researches. This memorable cruise was pleaded at Athens, Olymp. cxi. 3 (before Christ 330) in the autumn, (Taylor, præfat. p. 376, &c.) about a year after the battle of Arbela: and Alexander, in the pursuit of Darius, was marching towards Hyrcania and Bactriana.

<sup>h</sup> We are indebted for this curious particular to the Dynasties of Abulpharagius p. 116 but it is needless to prove the identity of Estachar and Persepolis (D'Herbelot, p. 327) and still more needless to copy the drawings and descriptions of Sir John Chardin, or Cornuille le Bruyn.

by an actual survey of the people, the cattle, and the fruits of the earth,<sup>1</sup> and this monument, which attests the vigilance of the caliphs, might have instructed the philosophers of every age.<sup>2</sup>

The flight of Yezdegerd had carried him beyond the Oxus, and as far as the Jaxartes, two rivers<sup>1</sup> of ancient and modern renown, which descend from the mountains of India towards the Caspian sea. He was hospitably entertained by Tarkhan, prince of Fargana,<sup>2</sup> a fertile province on the Jaxartes. The king of Samarcand, with the Turkish tribes of Sogdiana and Scythia, were moved by the lamentations and promises of the fallen monarch, and he solicited, by a suppliant embassy, the more solid and powerful friendship of the emperor of China.<sup>3</sup> The virtuous Taitsong,<sup>4</sup> the first of the dynasty of the Tang, may be justly compared with the Antonines of Rome: his people enjoyed the blessings of prosperity and peace, and his dominion was acknowledged by forty-four hordes of the barbarians of Tartary. His last garrisons of Cashgar and Khoten maintained a frequent intercourse with their neighbours of the Jaxartes and Oxus, a recent colony of Persians had introduced into China the astronomy of the Magi, and Taitsong might be alarmed by the rapid progress and dangerous vicinity of the Arabs. The influence, and perhaps the supplies, of China revived the hopes of Yezdegerd and the zeal of the worshippers of fire, and he returned with an army of Turks to conquer the inheritance of his fathers. The fortunate Moslems, without unsheathing their swords, were the spectators of his ruin and death. The grandson of Chosroes was betrayed by his servant, insulted by the seditious inhabitants of Merou, and oppressed, defeated, and pursued, by his barbarian allies. He reached the banks of a river, and offered his rings and bracelets for an instant passage in a miller's boat. Ignorant or insensible of royal distress, the rustic replied, that four drams of silver were the daily profit of his mill, and that he would not suspend his work unless the loss were repaid. In this moment of hesitation and delay, the last of the Sassanian kings was overtaken and slaughtered by the Turkish cavalry, in the nineteenth year of his unhappy reign.<sup>5</sup> His son Firuz, an humble client of the Chinese emperor, accepted the station of captain of his guards, and the Magian worship was long preserved by a colony of loyal exiles in the province of Bucharia. His grandson inherited the regal name, but after a faint and fruitless enterprise, he returned to China, and ended his days in the palace of Sigan. The male line of the Sassanides was extinct, but the female captives, the daughters of Persia, were given to the conquerors in servitude, or marriage, and the race of the caliphs and imams was ennobled by the blood of their royal mothers.<sup>6</sup>

After the fall of the Persian kingdom, the river Oxus divided the territories of the Saracens and of the Turks.

The conquest of Transoxiana, A. D. 710

This narrow boundary was soon overleaped by the spirit of the Arabs: the governors of Chorasan extended their successive inroads, and one of their triumphs was adorned with the buskin of a Turkish queen, which she dropped in her precipitate flight beyond the hills of Bochara.<sup>7</sup> But the final conquest of Transoxiana,<sup>8</sup> as well as of Spain, was reserved for the glorious reign of the inactive Walid, and the name of Catibah, the camel driver, declares the origin and merit of his successful lieutenant. While one of his colleagues displayed the first Mahometan banner on the banks of the Indus, the spacious regions between the Oxus, the Jaxartes, and the Caspian sea, were reduced by the arms of Catibah to the obedience of the prophet and of the caliph.<sup>9</sup> A tribute of two millions of pieces of gold was imposed on the infidels, their idols were burnt or broken, the mussulman chief pronounced a sermon in the new mosch of Carizme, after several battles, the Turkish hordes were driven back to the desert, and the emperors of China solicited the friendship of the victorious Arabs. To their industry, the prosperity of the province, the Sogdiana of the ancients, may in a great measure be ascribed, but the advantages of the soil and climate had been understood and cultivated since the reign of the Macedonian kings. Before the invasion of the Saracens, Carizme, Bochara, and Samarcand, were rich and populous under the

<sup>1</sup> After the conquest of Persia, Theophanes adds, αὐτὸν δὲ τῷ χρόνῳ ἐκέλευσαν Οὐμάρους ἀναγραφῆναι πᾶσαν τὴν γῆν αὐτοῦ οἰκουμένην ἐγγεγραπτο δὲ ἡ ἀναγραφὴ καὶ ἀνθρώπων καὶ κτηνῶν καὶ φυτῶν (Chronogr. p. 283).

<sup>2</sup> Amidst our meagre relations I must regret that D Herbelot has not found and used a Persian translation of Tabari enriched as he says with many extracts from the native historians of the Ghebers or Magi (Bibliothèque Orientale p. 1014).

<sup>3</sup> The most authentic accounts of the two rivers, the Sihon, (Jaxartes) and the Gihon (Oxus) may be found in Sherif al Edrisi (Geograph. Nubiens. p. 138). Abulfeda, (Description Chorasan in Hudson tom. iii. p. 23) Abulnuzi Khan who reigned on their banks (Hist. Genealog. que des Tartars, p. 32, 57, 766) and the Turkish Geographer a MS. in the King of France's library (Examen Critique des Historiens d'Alexandre p. 194—369).

<sup>4</sup> The territory of Fargana is described by Abulfeda p. 76, 77.
<sup>5</sup> Co redegit auxilium eundem regem exulem in Turcia regis et Sogdiani et Sinenis auxilia missis literis imploraret (Abulfeda Annal. p. 74). The connexion of the Persian and Chinese history is illustrated by Freret (Mem. de l'Académie, tom. xvi. p. 245—255) and de Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. i. p. 54—59 and for the geography of the borders tom. ii. p. 1—43).

<sup>6</sup> Hist. Sinica p. 41—46 in the third part of the Relations Curieuses of Thevenot.

<sup>7</sup> I have endeavoured to harmonize the various narratives of Elmucin, (Hist. Saracen. p. 37) Abulphiragius, (Dynast. p. 116) Abulfeda, (Annal. p. 74, 75) and D Herbelot. (p. 483). The end of Yezdegerd was not only unfortunate but obscure.

<sup>8</sup> The two daughters of Yezdegerd married Hisham the son of Ali and Mohammed the son of Abubekr, and the first of these was the father of a numerous progeny. The daughter of Phiroon became the wife of the caliph Walid, and their son Yezid derived his lineage or fabulous descent from the Chosroes of Persia, the Cæsars of Rome, and the Chagans of the Turks or Avars (D Herbelot, Biblioth. Orientale, p. 96, 487).

<sup>9</sup> It was valued at 2000 pieces of gold, and was the prize of Obaidollah the son of Ziyad a name afterwards infamous by the murder of Hosein (Ockley's History of the Saracens vol. ii. p. 142, 143). His brother Saleem was accompanied by his wife the first Arabian woman (A. D. 680) who pressed the Oxus she borrowed or rather stole, the crown and jewels of the princess of the Sogdians (p. 231, 232).

<sup>10</sup> A part of Abulfeda's geography is translated by Greaves inserted in Hudson's collection of the minor geographers, (tom. iii.) and entitled Description Chorasmie et Mawaralnahr, id est, regionem extra fluvium, Oxum p. 80. The name of Transoxiana softer in sound, equivalent in sense is aptly used by Petit de la Croix, (Hist. de Genes. p. 86) and some modern orientalist, but they are mistaken in ascribing it to the writers of antiquity.

<sup>11</sup> The conquests of Catibah are faintly marked by Elmucin, (Hist. Saracen. p. 84) D Herbelot (Biblioth. Orient. Catibah, Samarcand, Fakhid,) and De Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. i. p. 58, 59).

joke of the shepherds of the north These cities were surrounded with a double wall, and the exterior fortification, of a larger circumference, enclosed the fields and gardens of the adjacent district The mutual wants of India and Europe were supplied by the diligence of the Sogdian merchants, and the inestimable art of transforming linen into paper, has been diffused from the manufacture of Samarcand over the western world *

Invasion of Syria, II No sooner had Abubeker restored the unity of faith and government, than he despatched a circular letter to the Arabian tribes "In the name of the most merciful God, to the rest of the true believers Health and happiness, and the mercy and blessing of God be upon you I praise the most high God, and I pray for his prophet Mahomet This is to acquaint you, that I intend to send the true believers into Syria* to take it out of the hands of the infidels And I would have you know, that the fighting for religion is an act of obedience to God" His messengers returned with the tidings of pious and martial ardour which they had kindled in every province, and the camp of Medina was successively filled with the intrepid bands of the Saracens, who panted for action, complained of the heat of the season and the scarcity of provisions, and accused with impatient murmurs the delays of the caliph As soon as their numbers were complete, Abubeker ascended the hill, reviewed the men, the horses, and the arms, and poured forth a fervent prayer for the success of their undertaking In person, and on foot, he accompanied the first day's march, and when the blushing leaders attempted to dismount, the caliph removed their scruples by a declaration, that those who rode, and those who walked, in the service of religion, were equally meritorious His instructions<sup>7</sup> to the chiefs of the Syrian army were inspired by the warlike fanaticism which advances to seize, and affects to despise, the objects of earthly ambition "Remember," said the successor of the prophet, "that you are always in the presence of God, on the verge of death, in the assurance of judgment, and the hope of paradise Avoid injustice and oppression, consult with your brethren, and study to preserve the love and confidence of your troops When you fight the battles of the Lord, acquit yourselves like men, without turning your backs, but let not your victory be stained with the blood of women or children Destroy no palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn Cut down no fruit-trees, nor do any mischief to cattle, only such as you kill to eat When you make any covenant or article, stand to it, and be as good as your word As you go on, you will find some religious persons who live retired in monasteries, and propose to themselves to serve God that way let them alone, and neither kill them nor destroy their monasteries * And you will find another sort of people, that belong to the synagogue of Satan, who have shaven crowns,* be sure you cleave their skulls, and give them no quarter till they either turn Mahometans or pay tribute" All profane or frivolous conversation, all dangerous recollection of ancient quarrels, was severely prohibited among the Arabs in the tumult of a camp, the exercises of religion were assiduously practised, and the intervals of action were employed in prayer, meditation, and the study of the Koran The abuse, or even the use, of wine was chastised by fourscore strokes on the soles of the feet, and in the fervour of their primitive zeal many secret sinners revealed their fault, and solicited their punishment After some hesitation, the command of the Syrian army was delegated to Abu Obeidah, one of the fugitives of Mecca and companions of Mahomet, whose zeal and devotion were assuaged, without being abated, by the singular mildness and benevolence of his temper But in all the emergencies of war, the soldiers demanded the superior genius of Caled, and whoever might be the choice of the prince, the sword of God was both in fact and fame the foremost leader of the Saracens He obeyed without reluctance, he was consulted without jealousy, and such was the spirit of the man, or rather of the times, that Caled professed his readiness to serve under the banner of the faith, though it were in the hands of a child or an enemy Glory, and riches, and dominion, were indeed promised to the victorious mussulman, but he was carefully instructed, that if the goods of this life were his only incitement, they likewise would be his only reward
A D 632.

One of the fifteen provinces of Syria, <sup>Sic, e of Bosra</sup> the cultivated lands to the eastward of the Jordan, had been decorated by Roman vanity with the name of Arabia,<sup>b</sup> and the first arms of the Saracens were justified by the semblance of a national right The country was enriched by the

* A curious description of Samarcand is inserted in the Bibliotheca Arabico Hispanica tom i p 208, &c The librarian Casiri (tom ii p 9) relates, from credible testimony, that paper was first imported from China to Samarcand A D 30 and invented, or rather introduced at Mecca, A D 88 The Escurial library contains paper MSS as old as the fourth or fifth century of the Hejira

* A separate history of the conquest of Syria has been composed by Al Wakidi, calif of Bagdad, who was born A D 748 and died A D 822 he likewise wrote the conquest of Egypt, of Diarbekir, &c Above the meagre and recondite chronicles of the Arabians, Al Wakidi has the double merit of antiquity and copiousness His tales and traditions afford an artless picture of the men and the times Yet his narrative is too often defective, trifling, and improbable Till something better shall be found his learned and spirited interpreter (Ockley, in his history of the Saracens, vol i p 21—742) will not deserve the painful animadversion of Reiske (Prodromus ad Hist. Chrifta Tabular, p 230) I am sorry to think that the labours of Ockley were consumed in a jail (See his two prefaces to the first vol A D 1708 to the second 1718 with the list of authors at the end)

<sup>7</sup> The strictures, &c of the Syrian war, are described by Al Wakidi

and Ockley, tom i p 22—27, &c In the sequel it is necessary to contract, and needless to quote, their circumstantial narrative My obligations to others shall be noticed

* Notwithstanding this precept, M Fraw (Recherches sur les Ety p. liens tom ii p 102 edit Lacombe) represents the Bedouens as the implacable enemies of the christian monks For my own part I am more inclined to suspect the avarice of the Arabian robbers, and the prejudices of the German philosopher

* Even in the seventh century, the monks were generally laymen they wore their hair long and dishevelled, and shaved their heads when they were ordained priests The circular tonsure was sacred and mysterious it was the crown of thorns, but it was likewise a royal diadem, and every priest was a king, &c (Thomassin, Discipline de l'Eglise, tom i p 721—728 especially p 737, 738)

<sup>b</sup> Hinc Arabia est conserit ex alio latere Nabithina, confusio, opima variis commerciorum castrisque oppida validis et castris, quia repellendos gentium vicinarum excursum, sollicitudo pervigil veterum per opportunos saltos crexit et cantos Ammian Marcellin lib 8. Reland Palestina tom i p 85, 86

various benefits of trade, by the vigilance of the emperors it was covered with a line of forts, and the populous cities of Gerasa, Philadelphia, and Bosra,<sup>c</sup> were secure, at least from a surprise, by the solid structure of their walls. The last of these cities was the eighteenth station of Medina: the road was familiar to the caravans of Hejaz and Irak, who annually visited this pleuteous market of the province and the desert: the perpetual jealousy of the Arabs had trained the inhabitants to arms, and twelve thousand horse could sally from the gates of Bosra, an appellation which signifies, in the Syriac language, a strong tower of defence. Encouraged by their first success against the open towns and flying parties of the borders, a detachment of four thousand Moslems presumed to summon and attack the fortress of Bosra. They were oppressed by the numbers of the Syrians, they were saved by the presence of Calad, with fifteen hundred horse: he blamed the enterprise, restored the battle, and rescued his friend, the venerable Sergabul, who had vainly invoked the unity of God and the promise of the apostle. After a short repose, the Moslems performed their ablutions with sand instead of water,<sup>d</sup> and the morning prayer was recited by Calad before they mounted on horseback. Confident in their strength, the people of Bosra threw open their gates, drew their forces into the plain, and swore to die in the defence of their religion. But a religion of peace was incapable of withstanding the fanatic cry of "Fight, fight!" "Paradise, paradise!" that re-echoed in the ranks of the Saracens, and the uproar of the town, the ringing of bells,<sup>e</sup> and the exclamations of the priests and monks, increased the dismay and disorder of the christians. With the loss of two hundred and thirty men, the Arabs remained masters of the field, and the ramparts of Bosra, in expectation of human or divine aid, were crowded with holy crosses and consecrated banners. The governor Romanus had recommended an early submission: despised by the people, and degraded from his office, he still retained the desire and opportunity of revenge. In a nocturnal interview, he informed the enemy of a subterraneous passage from his house under the wall of the city, the son of the caliph, with a hundred volunteers, were committed to the faith of this new ally, and their successful intrepidity gave an easy entrance to their companions. After Calad had imposed the terms of servitude and tribute, the apostate or convert avowed in the assembly of the people his meritorious treason. "I renounce your society," said Romanus, "both in this world, and the world to come. And I deny him that was crucified, and whosoever worships him. And I choose God for my Lord, Islam for my faith, Mecca for my temple, the Moslems for my brethren, and Mahomet for my prophet, who was sent to lead us into the right way, and to exalt the true religion in spite of those who join partners with God."

The conquest of Bosra, four days' journey from Damascus,<sup>f</sup> encouraged the Arabs to besiege the ancient capital of Syria.<sup>g</sup> At some distance from the walls, they encamped among the groves and fountains of that delicious territory,<sup>h</sup> and the usual option of the Mahometan faith, of tribute or of war, was proposed to the resolute citizens, who had been lately strengthened by a reinforcement of five thousand Greeks. In the decline as in the infancy of the military art, an hostile defiance was frequently offered and accepted by the generals themselves: many a lance was shattered in the plain of Damascus, and the personal prowess of Calad was signalized in the first sally of the besieged. After an obstinate combat, he had overthrown and made prisoner one of the christian leaders, a stout and worthy antagonist. He instantly mounted a fresh horse, the gift of the governor of Palmyra, and pushed forwards to the front of the battle. "Repose yourself for a moment," said his friend Derar, "and permit me to supply your place: you are fatigued with fighting with this dog." "O Derar!" replied the indefatigable Saracen, "we shall rest in the world to come. He that labours to-day shall rest to-morrow." With the same unabated ardour, Calad answered, encountered, and vanquished a second champion, and the heads of his two captives who refused to abandon their religion were indignantly hurled into the midst of the city. The event of some general and partial actions reduced the Damascenes to a closer defence: but a messenger whom they dropt from the walls, returned with the promise of speedy and powerful succour, and their tumultuous joy conveyed the intelligence to

Siege of Damascus.
A.D. 633.

<sup>c</sup> With Gerasa and Philadelphia. Ammianus praises the fortifications of Bosra, firmitate cunctissimas. They deserved the same praise in the time of Abulfelâ (Tabul Syriae, p. 99) who describes this city, the metropolis of Hawran (Aurantiq), four days' journey from Damascus. The Hebrew etymology I learn from Reland, Palestina tom. ii. p. 666.

<sup>d</sup> The apostle of a desert and an army, was obliged to allow this ready succedaneum for water. (Koran c. iii. p. 66 c. v. p. 83) but the Arabian and Persian casuists have embarrassed his free permission with many niceties and distinctions. (Reland de Reli, Mohammed i. p. 82 83. Chardin, Voyages en Perse tom. iv.)

<sup>e</sup> The bells rung! Ockley vol. i. p. 38. Yet I much doubt whether this expression can be justified by the text of Al Wâkidi or the practice of the times. Ad Græcos, says the learned Dncange, (Glossar. med. et infim. Græcal. tom. i. p. 774) camparum usus scribis transit et eliamnum rarissimus est. The oldest example which he can find in the Byzantine writers is of the year 1040: but the Venetians pretend, that they introduced bells at Constantinople in the ninth century.

<sup>f</sup> Damascus is amply described by the Sheraif al Edrisi (Geograph. Nuh. p. 116 117) and his translator Sicula (Appendix c. 4) Abulfelâ (Tabula Syriae, p. 100) Schultens (Index Geograph. ad Vit. Saladin) D. Herbelot (Biblioth. Orient. p. 221) Thiersenol (Voyage du Levant, part. i. p. 698—699) Maundrell (Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem p. 122—130) and Pocock (Description of the East, vol. ii. p. 117—127).

<sup>g</sup> Nobilissima civitas, says Justin. According to the oriental tradition it was older than Abraham or Semiramis. Joseph Antiq. Jud. l. i. c. 6, 7. p. 24 29. edit. Havercamp. Justin xxxvi. 2.

<sup>h</sup> Εἰδε γὰρ οἱ αὐτοὶ τὴν πόλιν ἀληθῶς, καὶ τῆς ἑωσας ἀπασθῆς οὐ θαλροὶ τὴν ἱερὰν καὶ μεγίστην Δαμασκὸν λέγω τοῖς τε ἀλλοῖς συμπασιν οἰον ἱερὸν καλλεῖ, καὶ νεῶν μετῆθε καὶ ὤρων ἐγκαρτῆα, καὶ πηγῶν ἀγλαῖα καὶ ποταμῶν πληθεῖ, καὶ τῆς εὐφορίας νικῶσαν. &c. Julianus epist. xxi. p. 392. These splendid epithets are occasioned by the siege of Damascus of which the author sends a hundred to his friend Serapion and this rhetorical theme is inserted by Petauius, Spanheim &c. (p. 390—396) among the genuine epistles of Julian. How could they overlook that the writer is an inhabitant of Damascus? (he thrice affirms, that this peculiar fig. grows only παρ' ἡμῶν, a city which Julian never entered or approached.)

<sup>i</sup> Voltaire who casts a keen and lively glance over the surface of history has been struck with the resemblance of the first Moslems and the heroes of the Iliad: the siege of Troy and that of Damascus (Hist. Generale, tom. i. p. 348.)

the camp of the Arabs After some debate it was resolved by the generals, to raise, or rather to suspend, the siege of Damaseus, till they had given battle to the forces of the emperor In the retreat, Caled would have chosen the more perilous station of the rear-guard, he modestly yielded to the wishes of Abu Obeidah But in the hour of danger he flew to the rescue of his companion, who was rudely pressed by a sally of six thousand horse and ten thousand foot, and few among the christians could relate at Damaseus the circumstances of their defeat The importance of the contest required the junction of the Saracens, who were dispersed on the frontiers of Syria and Palestine, and I shall transcribe one of the circular mandates which was addressed to Amrou, the future conqueror of Egypt "In the name of the most merciful God from Caled to Amrou, health and happiness Know that thy brethren the Moslems design to march to Aîznadin, where there is an army of seventy thousand Greeks, who purpose to come against us, that they may extinguish the light of God with their mouths, but God preserveth his light in spite of the infidels* As soon therefore as this letter of mine shall be delivered to thy hands, come with those that are with thee to Aîznadin, where thou shalt find us if it please the most high God" The summons was cheerfully obeyed, and the forty-five thousand Moslems who met on the same day, on the same spot, ascribed to the blessing of Providence the effects of their activity and zeal

Battle of Aîznadin

AD 633
July 13

About four years after the triumphs of the Persian war, the repose of Heraclius and the empire was again disturbed by a new enemy, the power of whose religion was more strongly felt, than it was clearly understood, by the christians of the east In his palace of Constantinople or Antioch, he was awakened by the invasion of Syria, the loss of Bosra, and the danger of Damaseus An army of seventy thousand veterans, or new levies, was assembled at Hems or Emesa, under the command of his general Werdan, and these troops, consisting chiefly of cavalry, might be indifferently styled either Syrians, or Greeks, or Romans Syrians, from the place of their birth or warfare, Greeks, from the religion and language of their sovereign, and Romans, from the proud appellation which was still profaned by the successors of Constantine On the plain of Aîznadin, as Werdan rode on a white mule decorated with gold chains, and surrounded with ensigns and standards, he was surprised by the near approach of a fierce and naked warrior, who had undertaken to view the state of the enemy The adventurous valour of Derar was inspired, and has perhaps been adorned, by the enthusiasm of his age and country The hatred of the christians, the love of spoil, and the contempt of danger, were the ruling passions of the audacious Saracen, and the prospect of instant death could never shake his religious confidence, or ruffle the calmness of his resolution, or even suspend the frank and martial pleantry of his humour In the most hopeless enterprises, he was bold, and prudent, and fortunate after innumerable hazards, after being thrice a prisoner in the hands of the infidels, he still survived to relate the achievements, and to enjoy the rewards, of the Syrian conquest On this occasion, his single lance maintained a flying fight against thirty Romans, who were detached by Werdan, and after killing or unhorsing seventeen of their number, Derar returned in safety to his applauding brethren When his rashness was mildly censured by the general, he excused himself with the simplicity of a soldier "Nay," said Derar, "I did not begin first but they came out to take me, and I was afraid that God should see me turn my back, and indeed I fought in good earnest, and without doubt God assisted me against them, and had I not been apprehensive of disobeying your orders, I should not have come away as I did, and I perceive already that they will fall into our hands" In the presence of both armies, a venerable Greek advanced from the ranks with a liberal offer of peace, and the departure of the Saracens would have been purchased by a gift to each soldier, of a turban, a robe, and a piece of gold, ten robes and a hundred pieces to their leader, one hundred robes and a thousand pieces to the caliph A smile of indignation expressed the refusal of Caled "Ye christian dogs, you know your option, the Koran, the tribute, or the sword We are a people whose delight is in war, rather than in peace, and we despise your pitiful alms, since we shall be speedily masters of your wealth, your families, and your persons" Notwithstanding this apparent disdain, he was deeply conscious of the public danger those who had been in Persia, and had seen the armies of Chosroes, confessed that they never beheld a more formidable array From the superiority of the enemy, the artful Saracen derived a fresh incentive of courage "You see before you," said he, "the united force of the Romans you cannot hope to escape, but you may conquer Syria in a single day The event depends on your discipline and patience Reserve yourselves till the evening It was in the evening that the prophet was accustomed to vanquish" During two successive engagements, his temperate firmness sustained the darts of the enemy, and the murmurs of his troops At length, when the spirits and quivers of the adverse line were almost exhausted, Caled gave the signal of onset and victory. The remains of the imperial army fled to Antioch, or Cæsarea, or Damaseus, and the death of four

* These words are a text of the Koran, c ix 32 lx 8 Like our fanatics of the 1st century, the Moslems, on every familiar or important occasion, spoke the language of their scriptures a style more natural in their mouths than the Hebrew idiom transplanted into the climate and dialect of Arrian

† The name of Werdan is unknown to Theophrastus, and though it might belong to an Armenian chief, has very little of a Greek aspect or sound If the Byzantine historians have mingled the oriental names, the Arabs, in this instance, likewise have taken ample revenge on their enemies In transposing the Greek character from right to left, might they not produce, from the familiar appellation of Andreas, something like the surname Werdan?

hundred and seventy Moslems was compensated by the opinion that they had sent to hell above fifty thousand of the infidels. The spoil was inestimable, many banners and crosses of gold and silver, precious stones, silver and gold chains, and innumerable suits of the richest armour and apparel. The general distribution was postponed till Damascus should be taken, but the seasonable supply of arms became the instrument of new victories. The glorious intelligence was transmitted to the throne of the caliph, and the Arabian tribes, the coldest or most hostile to the prophet's mission, were eager and importunate to share the harvest of Syria.

The Arabs return to Damascus

The sad tidings were carried to Damascus by the speed of grief and terror, and the inhabitants beheld from their walls the return of the heroes of Aiznadin. Amron led the van at the head of nine thousand horse, the bands of the Saracens succeeded each other in formidable review, and the rear was closed by Calid in person, with the standard of the black eagle. To the activity of Derar he intrusted the commission of patrolling round the city with two thousand horse, of scouring the plain, and of intercepting all succour or intelligence. The rest of the Arabian chiefs were fixed in their respective stations before the seven gates of Damascus, and the siege was renewed with fresh vigour and confidence. The art, the labour, the military engines, of the Greeks and Romans are seldom to be found in the simple, though successful, operations of the Saracens: it was sufficient for them to invest a city with arms, rather than with trenches, to repel the sallies of the besieged, to attempt a stratagem or an assault, or to expect the progress of famine and discontent. Damascus would have acquiesced in the trial of Aiznadin, as a final and peremptory sentence between the emperor and the caliph: her courage was rekindled by the example and authority of Thomas, a noble Greek, illustrious in a private condition by the alliance of Heraclius.<sup>m</sup> The tumult and illumination of the night proclaimed the design of the morning sally, and the christian hero, who affected to despise the enthusiasm of the Arabs, employed the resource of a similar superstition. At the principal gate, in the sight of both armies, a lofty crucifix was erected, the bishop, with his clergy, accompanied the march, and laid the volume of the New Testament before the image of Jesus, and the contending parties were scandalized or elided by a prayer, that the Son of God would defend his servants and vindicate his truth. The battle raged with incessant fury, and the dexterity of Thomas,<sup>n</sup> an incomparable archer, was fatal to the boldest

Saracens, till their death was revenged by a female heroine. The wife of Aban, who had followed him to the holy war, embraced her expiring husband "Happy," said she, "happy art thou, my dear! thou art gone to thy Lord who first joined us together, and then parted us asunder. I will revenge thy death, and endeavour to the utmost of my power to come to the place where thou art, because I love thee. Henceforth shall no man ever touch me more, for I have dedicated myself to the service of God." Without a groan, without a tear, she washed the corpse of her husband, and buried him with the usual rites. Then grasping the manly weapons, which in her native land she was accustomed to wield, the intrepid widow of Aban sought the place where his murderer sought in the thickest of the battle. Her first arrow pierced the hum of his standard-bearer, her second wounded Thomas in the eye, and the fainting christians no longer beheld their ensign or their leader. Yet the generous champion of Damascus refused to withdraw to his palace: his wound was dressed on the rampart, the fight was continued till the evening, and the Syrians rested on their arms. In the silence of the night, the signal was given by a stroke on the great bell, the gates were thrown open, and each gate discharged an impetuous column on the sleeping camp of the Saracens. Calid was the first in arms, at the head of four hundred horse he flew to the post of danger, and the tears trickled down his iron cheeks, as he uttered a fervent ejaculation, "O God, who never sleepest, look upon thy servants, and do not deliver them into the hands of their enemies." The valour and victory of Thomas were arrested by the presence of the sword of God, with the knowledge of the peril, the Moslems recovered their ranks, and charged the assailants in the flank and rear. After the loss of thousands, the christian general retreated with a sigh of despair, and the pursuit of the Saracens was checked by the military engines of the rampart.

After a siege of seventy days,<sup>o</sup> the patience, and perhaps the provisions, of the Damascenes were exhausted, and the harvest of their chiefs submitted to the hard dictates of necessity. In the occurrences of peace and war, they had been taught to dread the fierceness of Calid, and to revere the mild virtues of Abu Obedah. At the hour of midnight, one hundred chosen deputies of the clergy and people were introduced to the tent of that venerable commander. He received and dismissed them with courtesy. They returned with a written agreement, on the faith of a companion of Mahomet, that all hostilities should cease, that the voluntary emigrants

The city is taken by storm and capitulation,
A. D. 634

(Annal Moslem p. 67. vers. Reiske) but Elmacin who mentions this opinion, prolongs the term to six months, and notices the use of balistæ by the Saracens (Hist. Saracen p. 23. 32). I ven this longer period is insufficient to fill the interval between the battle of Aiznadin (July A. D. 633) and the accession of Omir, (24th July, A. D. 634) in whose reign the conquest of Damascus is unanimously ascribed (Al Wakidi apud Ockley, vol. 1. p. 112. Abulpharagius Dynast. p. 112. vers. Pocock). Perhaps, as in the Trojan war, the operations were interrupted by excursions and detachments till the last seventy days of the siege.

<sup>m</sup> Vainly prompted the Arabs to believe, that Thomas was the son in law of the emperor. We know the children of Heraclius by his two wives: and his august daughter would not have married in exile at Damascus (see Dierage Fam. Byzantin p. 119. 120). Had he been less religious I might only suspect the legitimacy of the daimon. Al Wakidi (Ockley p. 101) says, "with poisoned arrows," but this savage invention is so repugnant to the practice of the Greeks and Romans, that I must suspect, on this occasion, the malevolent credulity of the Saracens.

<sup>o</sup> Abulfeda allows only seventy days for the siege of Damascus.

might depart in safety, with as much as they could carry away of their effects, and that the tributary subjects of the caliph should enjoy their lands and houses, with the use and possession of seven churches. On these terms, the most respectable hostages, and the gate nearest to his camp, were delivered into his hands: his soldiers imitated the moderation of their chief, and he enjoyed the submissive gratitude of a people whom he had rescued from destruction. But the success of the treaty had relaxed their vigilance, and in the same moment the opposite quarter of the city was betrayed and taken by assault. A party of a hundred Arabs had opened the eastern gate to a more inexorable foe. "No quarter," cried the rapacious and sanguinary Caled, "no quarter to the enemies of the Lord!" his trumpets sounded, and a torrent of christian blood was poured down the streets of Damascus. When he reached the church of St. Mary, he was astonished and provoked by the peaceful aspect of his companions, their swords were in the scabbard, and they were surrounded by a multitude of priests and monks. Abu Obaidah saluted the general. "God," said he, "has delivered the city into my hands by way of surrender, and has saved the believers the trouble of fighting." "And am I not," replied the indignant Caled, "am I not the lieutenant of the commander of the faithful? Have I not taken the city by storm? The unbelievers shall perish by the sword. Fall on!" The hungry and cruel Arabs would have obeyed the welcome command, and Damascus was lost, if the benevolence of Abu Obaidah had not been supported by a decent and dignified firmness. Throwing himself between the trembling citizens and the most eager of the barbarians, he adjured them by the holy name of God, to respect his promise, to suspend their fury, and to wait the determination of their chiefs. The chiefs retired into the church of St. Mary, and after a vehement debate, Caled submitted in some measure to the reason and authority of his colleague, who urged the sanctity of a covenant, the advantage as well as the honour which the Moslems would derive from the punctual performance of their word, and the obstinate resistance which they must encounter from the distrust and despair of the rest of the Syrian cities. It was agreed that the sword should be sheathed, that the part of Damascus which had surrendered to Abu Obaidah, should be immediately entitled to the benefit of his capitulation, and that the final decision should be referred to the justice and wisdom of the caliph. A large majority of the people accepted the terms of toleration and tribute, and Damascus is still peopled by twenty thousand christians. But the valiant Thomas, and the free-

p. It appears from Abulfeda (p. 120) and Ibn al-Arabi (p. 72) that this distinction of the two parts of Damascus was long remembered, though it was not always respected, by the Mohammedan sovereigns. See likewise Putschius (Annal. tom. ii. p. 379, 380, 383).
q. On the fate of these lovers, whom he names Phoenias and Indocia, Mr. Hughes has built the scene of Damascus, one of our most popular tragedies, and which possesses the rare merit of blending truth and history, the manners of the times and the feelings of the heart. The born patriots who had fought under his banner, embraced the alternative of poverty and exile. In the adjacent meadow, a numerous encampment was formed of priests and laymen, of soldiers and citizens, of women and children: they collected, with haste and terror, their most precious movables, and abandoned, with loud lamentations or silent anguish, their native homes, and the pleasant banks of the Pharphar. The inflexible soul of Caled was not touched by the spectacle of their distress: he disputed with the Damascenes the property of a magazine of corn, and endeavoured to exclude the garrison from the benefit of the treaty, consented with reluctance, that each of the fugitives should arm himself with a sword, or a lance, or a bow, and sternly declared, that, after a respite of three days, they might be pursued and treated as the enemies of the Moslems.

The passion of a Syrian youth completed the ruin of the cities of Damascus. A nobleman of the city, of the name of Jonas, was betrothed to a wealthy maiden, but her parents delayed the consummation of his nuptials, and their daughter was persuaded to escape with the man whom she had chosen. They corrupted the nightly watchmen of the gate Keisan, the lover, who led the way, was encompassed by a squadron of Arabs, but his exclamation in the Greek tongue, "the bird is taken," admonished his mistress to hasten her return. In the presence of Caled, and of death, the unfortunate Jonas professed his belief in one God and his apostle Mahomet, and continued, till the season of his martyrdom, to discharge the duties of a brave and sincere muslim. When the city was taken, he flew to the monastery, where Endocia had taken refuge, but the lover was forgotten, the apostate was scorned, she preferred her religion to her country, and the justice of Caled, though deaf to mercy, refused to detain by force a male or female inhabitant of Damascus. Four days was the general confined to the city by the obligation of the treaty, and the urgent cares of his new conquest. His appetite for blood and rapine would have been extinguished by the hopeless computation of time and distance, but he listened to the importunities of Jonas, who assured him that the wary fugitives might yet be overtaken. At the head of four thousand horse, in the disguise of christian Arabs, Caled undertook the pursuit. They halted only for the moments of prayer, and the guide had a perfect knowledge of the country. For a long way the footsteps of the Damascenes were plain and conspicuous: they vanished on a sudden, but the Saracens were comforted by the assurance that the caravan had turned aside into the mountains, and must speedily fall into their hands. In traversing

Jewish delinquency of the players compelled him to soften the guilt of the hero and the despair of the heroine. Instead of a wise, sensible, Phoenias, he represents the Arab as an honourable ally, instead of prompting their pursuit he flies to the encounter of his countrymen, and after killing Caled and Derar, he himself mortally wounded, and expires in the presence of Indocia, who professes her resolution to take the veil at Constantinople. A felicitous catastrophe!

the ridges of the Libanus, they endured intolerable hardships, and the sinking spirits of the veteran fanatics were supported and cheered by the unconquerable ardour of a lover. From a peasant of the country, they were informed that the emperor had sent orders to the colony of exiles, to pursue without delay the road of the sea-coast and of Constantinople, apprehensive, perhaps, that the soldiers and people of Antioch might be discouraged by the sight and the story of their sufferings. The Saracens were conducted through the territories of Ghabala<sup>r</sup> and Laodicea, at a cautious distance from the walls of the cities, the rain was incessant, the night was dark, a single mountain separated them from the Roman army, and Caled, ever anxious for the safety of his brethren, whispered an ominous dream in the ear of his companion. With the dawn of day the prospect again cleared, and they saw before them, in a pleasant valley, the tents of Damascus. After a short interval of repose and prayer, Caled divided his cavalry into four squadrons, committing the first to his faithful Derar, and reserving the last for himself. They successively rushed on the promiscuous multitude, insufficiently provided with arms, and already vanquished by sorrow and fatigue. Except a captive who was pardoned and dismissed, the Arabs enjoyed the satisfaction of believing that not a christian of either sex escaped the edge of their scymitars. The gold and silver of Damascus was scattered over the camp, and a royal wardrobe of three hundred load of silk might clothe an army of naked barbarians. In the tumult of the battle, Jonas sought and found the object of his pursuit, but her resentment was inflamed by the last act of his perfidy, and as Eudocia struggled in his hateful embraces, she struck a dagger to her heart. Another female, the widow of Thomas, and the real or supposed daughter of Herachus, was spared and released without a ransom, but the generosity of Caled was the effect of his contempt, and the haughty Saracen insulted, by a message of defiance, the throne of the Cæsars. Caled had penetrated above a hundred and fifty miles into the heart of the Roman province. He returned to Damascus with the same secrecy and speed. On the accession of Omar, the sword of God was removed from the command, but the caliph, who blamed the rashness, was compelled to applaud the vigour and conduct, of the enterprise.

Another expedition of the conquerors of Damascus will equally display their avidity and their contempt for the riches of the present world. They were informed that the produce and manufactures of the country were annually collected in the fair of Abyla,<sup>s</sup> about thirty miles from the city, that the cell of a devout hermit was visited at the same time by a multitude of pilgrims, and that the festival of trade and superstition would be ennobled by the nuptials of the daughter of the governor of Tripoli. Abdallah, the son of Jaifar, a glorious and holy martyr, undertook, with a banner of five hundred horse, the pious and profitable commission of despoiling the infidels. As he approached the fair of Abyla, he was astonished by the report of a mighty concourse of Jews and christians, Greeks and Armenians, of natives of Syria and of strangers of Egypt, to the number of ten thousand, besides a guard of five thousand horse that attended the person of the bride. The Saracens paused. "For my own part," said Abdallah, "I dare not go back: our foes are many, our danger is great, but our reward is splendid and secure, either in this life or in the life to come. Let every man according to his inclination advance or retire." Not a mussulman deserted his standard. "Lead the way," said Abdallah to his christian guide, "and you shall see what the companions of the prophet can perform." They charged in five squadrons, but after the first advantage of the surprise they were encompassed and almost overwhelmed by the multitude of their enemies, and their valiant band is fancifully compared to a white spot in the skin of a black camel.<sup>t</sup> About the hour of sunset, when their weapons dropped from their hands, when they panted on the verge of eternity, they discovered an approaching cloud of dust, they heard the welcome sound of the tebir,<sup>u</sup> and they soon perceived the standard of Caled, who flew to their relief with the utmost speed of his cavalry. The christians were broken by his attack, and slaughtered in their flight, as far as the river of Tripoli. They left behind them the various riches of the fair, the merchandises that were exposed for sale, the money that was brought for purchase, the gay decorations of the nuptials, and the governor's daughter, with forty of her female attendants. The fruits, provisions, and furniture, the money, plate, and jewels, were diligently laden on the backs of horses, asses, and mules, and the holy robbers returned in triumph to Damascus. The hermit, after a short and angry controversy with Caled, declined the crown of martyrdom, and was left alive in the solitary scene of blood and devastation.

Syria,<sup>v</sup> one of the countries that have been improved by the most early cultivation, is not unworthy of the pre-

Siege of Heliopolis and Emesa, A. D. 635

<sup>r</sup> The towns of Ghabala and Laodicea, which the Arabs passed, still exist in a state of decay (Maunderell p. 11, 12. Procock vol. ii. p. 13.) Had not the christians been overtaken they must have crossed the Orontes on some bridge in the sixteen miles between Antioch and the sea, and might have rejoined the high road of Constantinople at Alexandria. The Itineraries will represent the directions and distances (p. 141. 149. 581. 582. edit. Wesseling.)

<sup>s</sup> Fair Abil Kodos. After retrenching the last word the epithet holy, I discover the Abila of Lysons between Damascus and Heliopolis: the name (Abil signifies a vineyard) concurs with the situation to justify my conjecture (Reland. Palestin. tom. i. p. 317. tom. ii. p. 525. 527.)

<sup>t</sup> I am bolder than Mr. Ockley (vol. i. p. 163.) who dares not insert this figurative expression in the text, though he observes in a marginal

note that the Arabians often borrow their similes from that useful and familiar animal. The reindeer may be equally famous in the songs of the Laplanders.

<sup>u</sup> We heard the tebir on the Arabs cry. Their shout of onset, when with loud appeal they challenge heaven as if demanding conquest.

This word so formidable in their holy wars is a verb active (say Ockley in his index) of the second conjugation from habbara, which signifies saying, Alla Acher. God is most mighty.

<sup>v</sup> In the geography of Abulfeda the description of Syria his native country, is the most interesting and authentic portion. It was published in Arabic and Latin, Lipsæ 1766 in quarto with the learned notes of Kochler and Reiske, and some extracts of geography and natu-

serence. The heat of the climate is tempered by the vicinity of the sea and mountains, by the plenty of wood and water, and the produce of a fertile soil affords the subsistence, and encourages the propagation, of men and animals. From the age of David to that of Heraclius, the country was overspread with ancient and flourishing cities: the inhabitants were numerous and wealthy, and, after the slow ravage of despotism and superstition, after the recent calamities of the Persian war, Syria could still attract and reward the rapacious tribes of the desert. A plain of ten days' journey, from Damascus to Aleppo and Antioch, is watered on the western side by the winding course of the Orontes. The hills of Libanus and Anti-Libanus are planted from north to south, between the Orontes and the Mediterranean, and the epithet of hollow (Colesyria) was applied to a long and fruitful valley, which is confined in the same direction by the two ridges of snowy mountains. Among the cities, which are enumerated by Greek and oriental names in the geography and conquest of Syria, we may distinguish Emesa or Hems, Heliopolis or Baalbec, the former as the metropolis of the plain, the latter as the capital of the valley. Under the last of the Cæsars, they were strong and populous: the turrets glittered from afar: an ample space was covered with public and private buildings, and the citizens were illustrious by their spirit, or at least by their pride, by their riches, or at least by their luxury. In the days of paganism, both Emesa and Heliopolis were addicted to the worship of Baal, or the sun, but the decline of their superstition and splendour has been marked by a singular variety of fortune. Not a vestige remains of the temple of Emesa, which was equalled in poetic style to the summits of mount Libanus,* while the ruins of Baalbec, invisible to the writers of antiquity, excite the curiosity and wonder of the European traveller.<sup>b</sup> The measure of the temple is two hundred feet in length, and one hundred in breadth: the front is adorned with a double portico of eight columns, fourteen may be counted on either side, and each column, forty-five feet in height, is composed of three massy blocks of stone or marble. The proportions and ornaments of the Corinthian order express the architecture of the Greeks, but as Baalbec has never been the seat of a monarch, we are not at a loss to conceive how the expense of these magnificent structures could be supplied by private or municipal liberality.<sup>c</sup> From the conquest of Damascus the Saracens proceeded to Heliopolis and Emesa: but I shall decline the repetition of the sallies and combats which have been already shown on a large scale. In the prosecution of the war, their policy was not less effectual than their sword. By short and separate truces they dissolved the union of the enemy, accustomed the Syrians to compare their friendship with their enmity, familiarized the idea of their language, religion, and manners, and exhausted, by clandestine purchase, the magazines and arsenals of the cities which they returned to besiege. They aggravated the ransom of the more wealthy, or the more obstinate, and Chalcis alone was taxed at five thousand ounces of gold, five thousand ounces of silver, two thousand robes of silk, and as many figs and olives as would load five thousand asses. But the terms of truce or capitulation were faithfully observed, and the lieutenant of the caliph, who had promised not to enter the walls of the captive Baalbec, remained tranquil and immovable in his tent till the jarring factions solicited the interposition of a foreign master. The conquest of the plain and valley of Syria was achieved in less than two years. Yet the commander of the faithful reproved the slowness of their progress; and the Saracens, bewailing their fault with tears of rage and repentance, called aloud on their chiefs to lead them forth to fight the battles of the Lord. In a recent action, under the walls of Emesa, an Arabian youth, the cousin of Calad, was heard aloud to exclaim, "Methinks I see the black-eyed girls looking upon me, one of whom, should she appear in this world, all mankind would die for love of her. And I see in the hand of one of them, a handkerchief of green silk, and a cap of precious stones, and she beckons me, and calls out, Come hither quickly, for I love thee." With these words, charging the christians, he made havoc wherever he went, till, observed at length by the governor of Hems, he was struck through with a javelin.

It was incumbent on the Saracens to exert the full powers of their valour and enthusiasm against the forces of the emperor, who was taunted by repeated losses, that the rovers of the desert had undertaken, and ral history from Ibn Ol Wardi. Among the modern travels, Pocock's Description of the East (of Syria and Mesopotamia vol II p 89-209) is a work of superior learning and dignity, but the author too often confounds what he had seen and what he had read.

* The praises of Dionysius are just and lively. καὶ τὴν μὲν (Σύρις) πολλοὶ τε καὶ ὀλίγοι ἀνδρες ἔχουσιν, (in Periegesis, v. 502 in tom I in Geograph. Minor Hudson.) In another place he styles the country πολυτολίαν αἰών (v. 1028). He proceeds to say,

Μῦσα δὲ τοὶ Λιβανὸν τε καὶ εὐβοῖαν ἐν ἑνὸς χωρῇ
Μῦθα τε ἔρβειναι καὶ δεῖναι καρπὸν αἰεὶν v. 1021, 1022
This poetical geography lived in the age of Augustus and his description of the world is illustrated by the Greek commentary of Iustathius, who paid the same compliment to Homer and Dionysius (Fabric. Bib. Græc. I. v. c. h. tom III p 21, &c.).

The topography of the Libanus and Anti Libanus is excellently described by the learning and sense of Reland (Palestin. tom I p 311-326).

* — I messe fish, in celia resident
Vni diffusa polo latius explicit, ac subit auras
Turribus in coelum nitentibus: incola clavis
Cor studium inuit.

Denique flammicomis devoti pectora soli
Vitam æquum: Ictibus frondosa cucurbita turget
Et lumen bis certant cæli fastigii templi

These verses of the Latin version of Rufus Avienus are wanting in the Greek original of Dionysius; and since they are likewise unnoticed by Iustathius I must, with Fabricius (Biblioth. Latin. tom III p 151 edit. Iruetii) and against Salmasius (ad Vopiscum, p 366 367 in Hist. August.) ascribe them to the fancy, rather than to the MSS. of Avienus.

<sup>b</sup> I am much better satisfied with Maundrell's slight octavo (Journey, p 171-179) than with the pompous folio of Dr Pocock; (Description of the East vol II p 106-113) but every preceding account is eclipsed by the magnificent description and drawings of M. M. Dawkins and Wood, who have transported into England the ruins of Palmyra and Baalbec.

<sup>c</sup> The orientals explain the prodigy by a never failing expedient. The edifices of Babel were constructed by the fairies or the genii (Hist. de Témour Bar, tom III l. v. c. 23 p 311, 312 Voyage d'Oller tom I p 83). With less absurdity, but with equal ignorance, Abulfeda and Ibn Chalkal ascribe them to the Sabæans or Amalites. Non sunt in omni Syria a diis et magnificèntiora hinc (Tabula Syria, p 103).

would speedily achieve, a regular and permanent conquest. From the provinces of Europe and Asia fourscore thousand soldiers were transported by sea and land to Antioch and Cæsarea: the light troops of the army consisted of sixty thousand christian Arabs of the tribe of Gassan. Under the banner of Jabalah, the last of their princes, they marched in the van, and it was a maxim of the Greeks, that, for the purpose of cutting diamond, a diamond was the most effectual. Heraclius withheld his person from the dangers of the field, but his presumption, or perhaps his despondency, suggested a peremptory order, that the fate of the province and the war should be decided by a single battle. The Syrians were attached to the standard of Rome and of the cross, but the noble, the citizen, the peasant, were exasperated by the injustice and cruelty of a licentious host, who oppressed them as subjects, and despised them as strangers and aliens.<sup>d</sup> A report of these mighty preparations was conveyed to the Saracens in their camp of Emesa, and the chiefs, though resolved to fight, assembled a council: the faith of Abu Obeidah would have expected on the same spot the glory of martyrdom, the wisdom of Calad advised an honourable retreat to the skirts of Palestine and Arabia, where they might await the succours of their friends, and the attack of the unbelievers. A speedy messenger soon returned from the throne of Medina, with the blessings of Omar and Ali, the prayers of the widows of the prophet, and a reinforcement of eight thousand Moslems. In their way they overturned a detachment of Greeks, and when they joined at Yermuk the camp of their brethren, they found the pleasing intelligence, that Calad had already defeated and scattered the christian Arabs of the tribe of Gassan. In the neighbourhood of Bosra, the springs of mount Hermon descend in a torrent to the plain of Decapolis, or ten cities, and tho Hieromax, a name which has been corrupted to Yermuk, is lost after a short course in the lake of Tiberias.<sup>e</sup> The banks of this obscure stream were illustrated by a long and bloody encounter. On this momentous occasion, the public voice, and the modesty of Abu Obeidah restored the command to the most deserving of the Moslems. Calad assumed his station in the front, his colleague was posted in the rear, that the disorder of the fugitives might be checked by his venerable aspect, and the sight of the yellow banner which Mahomet had displayed before the walls of Chaibar. The last line was occupied by the sister of Derar, with the Arabian women who had enlisted in this holy war, who were accustomed to wield the bow and the lance, and who in a moment of captivity had defended, against the unreinforced ravishers, their chastity and religion.<sup>f</sup> The exhortation of the general was brief and forcible: "Paradise is before you, the devil and hell-fire in your rear." Yet such was the weight of the Roman cavalry, that the right wing of the Arabs was broken and separated from the main body. Thrice did they retreat in disorder, and thrice were they driven back to the charge by the reproaches and blows of the women. In the intervals of action, Abu Obeidah visited the tents of his brethren: prolonged their repose by repeating at once the prayers of two different hours, bound up their wounds with his own hands, and administered the comfortable reflection, that the infidels partook of their sufferings without partaking of their reward. Four thousand and thirty of the Moslems were buried in the field of battle, and the skill of the Armenian archers enabled seven hundred to boast that they had lost an eye in that meritorious service. The veterans of the Syrian war acknowledged that it was the hardest and most doubtful of the days which they had seen. But it was likewise the most decisive: many thousands of the Greeks and Syrians fell by the swords of the Arabs, many were slaughtered, after the defeat in the woods and mountains, many by mistaking the ford, were drowned in the waters of the Yermuk, and however the loss may be magnified,<sup>g</sup> the christian writers confess and bewail the bloody punishment of their sins.<sup>h</sup> Mammel, the Roman general, was either killed at Damascus, or took refuge in the monastery of mount Sinai. An exile in the Byzantine court, Jabalah lamented the manners of Arabia, and his unlucky preference of the christian cause.<sup>i</sup> He had once inclined to the profession of Islam, but in the pilgrimage of Meccah, Jabalah was provoked to strike one of his brethren, and fled with amazement from the stern and equal justice of the caliph. The victorious Saracens enjoyed at Damascus a month of pleasure and repose: the spoil was divided by the discretion of Abu Obeidah: an equal share was allotted to a soldier and to his horse, and a double portion was reserved for the noble coursers of the Arabian breed.

After the battle of Yermuk, the Roman army no longer appeared in the field, and the Saracens might securely choose among the fortified towns of Syria, the first

Conquest of Jerusalem
A. D. 637

<sup>d</sup> I have read somewhere in Tacitus or Grotius, Sulcyetis in hunc tamquam suus, et hunc tamquam alienus. Some Greek officers ravished the wife and murdered the child of their Syrian landlord, and Manuel smiled at his unfeeling compliment.

<sup>e</sup> See Reland, Palestina tom. i. p. 272. 283 tom. ii. p. 773. 775. This learned professor was equal to the task of describing the Holy Land: since he was alike conversant with Greek and Latin with Hebrew and Arabian literature. The Yermuk, or Hieromax, is noticed by Celarius (Geograph. Antiqua tom. ii. p. 392) and D'Anville (Geographie Ancienne, tom. ii. p. 185). The Arabs and even Abulfeda himself do not seem to recognize the scene of their victory.

<sup>f</sup> These women were of the tribe of the Hamyrites, who derived their origin from the ancient Amalekites. Their females were accustomed to ride on horseback and to fight like the Amazons of old (Oehler, vol. i. p. 67).

<sup>g</sup> We killed of them, says Abu Obeidah to the caliph, one hundred and fifty thousand, and made prisoners forty thousand (Oehler, vol. i.

p. 211). As I cannot doubt his veracity, nor believe his compilation, I must suspect that the Arabic historians indulged themselves in the practice of composing, speeches and letters for their heroes.

<sup>h</sup> After deploring the sins of the christians, Theophanes adds (Chronographi p. 276) οι εσση α ερημικος Αμαλικη τι πτωι υμαρ τον λαον των Χριστιανων, και γινεται προτη φορα πτωσι τον Ρωμαιοικον στρατον η κατα το Γαββιλαρ λεγω (does he mean Aizmadin?) και λερμιοικον, και την αθροικον αμαρτολογισιν. His account is brief and obscure: but he accuses the members of the enemy the adverse wind, and the cloud of dust μη συνθετες (the Romans) οτι η προσωπηση εχθροι δια τον κονορον, ηστανται και εαυτοι θαλλοντες εις τα νενοδοι τοι λερμιοικον ποταμον και ατλωντο ορδην (Chronographi p. 280).

<sup>i</sup> See Abulfeda (Annot. Moslem p. 70. 71) who transcribes the poetical complaint of Jabalah himself, and some princely rival strains of an Arabian poet. In whom the chief of Gassan sent from Constantinople a gift of five hundred pieces of gold by the hands of the ambassador of Omar.

object of their attack. They consulted the caliph whether they should march to Cæsarea or Jerusalem, and the advice of Ali determined the immediate siege of the latter. To a profane eye, Jerusalem was the first or second capital of Palestine, but after Mecca and Medina, it was revered and visited by the devout Moslems, as the temple of the Holy Land which had been sanctified by the revelation of Moses, of Jesus, and of Mahomet himself. The son of Abu Sophian was sent with five thousand Arabs to try the first experiment of surprise or treaty, but on the eleventh day, the town was invested by the whole force of Abu Obeidah. He addressed the customary summons to the chief commanders and people of Ælia.<sup>k</sup> "Health and happiness to every one that follows the right way! We require of you to testify that there is but one God, and that Mahomet is his apostle. If you refuse this, consent to pay tribute, and be under us forthwith. Otherwise I shall bring men against you who love death better than you do the drinking of wine or eating hog's flesh. Nor will I ever stir from you, if it please God, till I have destroyed those that fight for you, and made slaves of your children." But the city was defended on every side by deep valleys and steep ascents, since the invasion of Syria, the walls and towers had been anxiously restored, the bravest of the fugitives of Yermuk had stopped in the nearest place of refuge, and in the defence of the sepulchre of Christ, the natives and strangers might feel some sparks of the enthusiasm which so fiercely glowed in the bosoms of the Saracens. The siege of Jerusalem lasted four months, not a day was lost without some action of sally or assault; the military engines incessantly played from the ramparts, and the inclemency of the winter was still more painful and destructive to the Arabs. The Christians yielded at length to the perseverance of the besiegers. The patriarch Sophronius appeared on the walls, and by the voice of an interpreter demanded a conference. After a vain attempt to dissuade the lieutenant of the caliph from his impious enterprise, he proposed, in the name of the people, a fair capitulation, with this extraordinary clause, that the articles of security should be ratified by the authority and presence of Omar himself. The question was debated in the council of Medina, the sanctity of the place, and the advice of Ali, persuaded the caliph to gratify the wishes of his soldiers and enemies, and the simplicity of his journey is more illustrious than the royal pageants of vanity and oppression. The conqueror of Persia and Syria was mounted on a red camel, which carried, besides his person, a bag of corn, a bag of dates, a wooden dish, and a leathern bottle of water. Wherever he halted, the company, without distinction, was invited to partake of his homely fare, and the repast was consecrated by the prayer and exhortation of the commander of the faithful.<sup>l</sup> But in this expedition or pilgrimage, his power was exercised in the administration of justice. He reformed the licentious polygamy of the Arabs, relieved the tributaries from extortion and cruelty, and chastised the luxury of the Saracens, by despoiling them of their rich silks, and dragging them on their faces in the dirt. When he came within sight of Jerusalem, the caliph cried with a loud voice, "God is victorious. O Lord, give us an easy conquest," and, pitching his tent of coarse hair, calmly seated himself on the ground. After signing the capitulation, he entered the city without fear or precaution, and courteously discoursed with the patriarch concerning its religious antiquities.<sup>m</sup> Sophronius bowed before his new master, and secretly muttered, in the words of Daniel, "The abomination of desolation is in the holy place."<sup>n</sup> At the hour of prayer they stood together in the church of the resurrection, but the caliph refused to perform his devotions, and contented himself with praying on the steps of the church of Constantine. To the patriarch he disclosed his prudent and honourable motive. "Had I yielded," said Omar, "to your request, the Moslems of a future age would have infringed the treaty under colour of imitating my example." By his command the ground of the temple of Solomon was prepared for the foundation of a mosque,<sup>o</sup> and, during a residence of ten days, he regulated the present and future state of his Syrian conquests. Medina might be jealous, lest the caliph should be detained by the sanctity of Jerusalem or the beauty of Damascus, her apprehensions were dispelled by his prompt and voluntary return to the tomb of the apostle.<sup>p</sup>

To achieve what yet remained of the Syrian war, the caliph had formed two separate armies, a chosen detachment, Of Aleppo and Antioch, A D 638 under Amrou and Yezid, was left in the camp of Palestine, while the larger division, under the standard of Abu Obeidah and Caled, marched away to the north against Antioch and Aleppo. The latter of these, the Bœrea of the Greeks, was not <sup>k</sup> In the name of the city, the profane prevailed over the sacred. Jerusalem was known to the devout Christians (Covelli de Martyr Palest. c. 14) but the Jews and popular appellation of Ælia (the colony of Ælius Hadrianus) has passed from the Romans to the Arabs (Rehnd Palestin tom. i. p. 207 tom. ii. p. 835. D Herbelot Biblioth. theque Orientale. Code, p. 269 Ælia, p. 420). The epithet of Al Cods, the Holy, is used as the proper name of Jerusalem.

<sup>l</sup> The annual journey and equipping of Omar are described (besides Ockley, vol. i. p. 250) by Murâdî (Merveilles de l'Égypte, p. 200—202).

<sup>m</sup> The Arabs boast of an old prophecy preserved at Jerusalem and describing the name, religion, and person of Omar, the future conqueror. By such tale the Jews are said to have soothed the pride of their foreign masters. Cyrus and Alexander (Joseph Ant. Jud. l. vi. c. 18 p. 547—579—582).

<sup>n</sup> Το βδελύγμα της ερημώσεως το ρηθέν δια Δανιήλ του προφήτου

ἔσωσε τὸν πόλιν ἀγίαν. Theophan Chronograph. p. 281. This prediction, which had already served for Antiochus and the Romans, was again refitted for the present occasion, by the economy of Sophronius, one of the deepest theologians of the Monothelite controversy.

<sup>o</sup> According to the accurate survey of D'Anville, (Dissertation sur l'ancienne Jérusalem, p. 42—51) the mosque of Omar, enlarged and embellished by succeeding caliphs covered the ground of the ancient temple, (παλαιῶν του μεγάλου ιουδαίου δαπέδου) a length of 215 a breadth of 172 fathoms. The Arabian geographer declares, that this magnificent structure was second only in size and beauty to the great mosque of Cordova, (p. 117) whose present state Mr Swinburne has so elegantly represented (Travels into Spain, p. 296—302).

<sup>p</sup> Of the many Arabian annals or chronicles of Jerusalem (D Herbelot, p. 857) Ockley found one among the Pocock MSS of Oxford (vol. i. p. 257) which he has used to supply the defective narrative of Al Wakidi.

yet illustrious as the capital of a province or a kingdom, and the inhabitants, by anticipating their submission and pleading their poverty, obtained a moderate composition for their lives and religion. But the castle of Aleppo, distinct from the city, stood erect on a lofty artificial mound the sides were sharpened to a precipice, and faced with freestone, and the breadth of the ditch might be filled with water from the neighbouring springs. After the loss of three thousand men, the garrison was still equal to the defence, and Youkanna, their valiant and hereditary chief, had murdered his brother, a holy monk, for daring to pronounce the name of peace. In a siege of four or five months, the hardest of the Syrian war, great numbers of the Saracens were killed and wounded their removal to the distance of a mile could not seduce the vigilance of Youkanna, nor could the Christians be terrified by the execution of three hundred captives, whom they beheaded before the castle wall. The silence, and at length the complaints, of Abu Obeidah informed the caliph that their hope and patience were consumed at the foot of this impregnable fortress. "I am variously affected," replied Omar, "by the difference of your success, but I charge you by no means to raise the siege of the castle. Your retreat would diminish the reputation of our arms, and encourage the infidels to fall upon you on all sides. Remain before Aleppo till God shall determine the event, and forage with your horse round the adjacent country." The exhortation of the commander of the faithful was fortified by a supply of volunteers from all the tribes of Arabia, who arrived in the camp on horses or camels. Among these was Dames, of a servile birth, but of gigantic size, and intrepid resolution. The forty-seventh day of his service he proposed, with only thirty men, to make an attempt on the castle. The experience and testimony of Caled recommended his offer, and Abu Obeidah admonished his brethren not to despise the baser origin of Dames, since he himself, could he relinquish the public care, would cheerfully serve under the banner of the slave. His design was covered by the appearance of a retreat, and the camp of the Saracens was pitched about a league from Aleppo. The thirty adventurers lay in ambush at the foot of the hill, and Dames at length succeeded in his inquiries, though he was provoked by the ignorance of his Greek captives. "God curse these dogs," said the illiterate Arab, "what a strange barbarous language they speak!" At the darkest hour of the night, he scaled the most accessible height, which he had diligently surveyed, a place where the stones were less entire, or the slope less perpendicular, or the guard less vigilant. Seven of the stoutest Saracens mounted on each other's shoulders, and the weight of the column was sustained on the broad and sinewy back of the gigantic slave. The foremost in this painful ascent could grasp and climb the lowest part of the battlements they silently stabbed and cast down the sentinels, and the thirty brethren, repeating a pious ejaculation, "O apostle of God, help and deliver us!" were successively drawn up by the long folds of their turbans. With bold and cautious footsteps, Dames explored the palace of the governor, who celebrated, in riotous merriment, the festival of his deliverance. From thence, returning to his companions, he assaulted on the inside the entrance of the castle. They overpowered the guard, unbolted the gate, let down the drawbridge, and defended the narrow pass, till the arrival of Caled, with the dawn of day, relieved their danger and assured their conquest. Youkanna, a formidable foe, became an active and useful proselyte, and the general of the Saracens expressed his regard for the most humble merit, by detaining the army at Aleppo till Dames was cured of his honourable wounds. The capital of Syria was still covered by the castle of Aazaz and the iron bridge of the Orontes. After the loss of these important posts, and the defeat of the last of the Roman armies, the luxury of Antioch trembled and obeyed. Her safety was ransomed with three hundred thousand pieces of gold, but the throne of the successors of Alexander, the seat of the Roman government in the east, which had been decorated by Cæsar with the titles of free, and holy, and inviolate, was degraded under the yoke of the caliphs to the secondary rank of a provincial town.

In the life of Heraclius, the glories of the Persian war are clouded on either hand by the disgrace and weakness of his more early and his later days. When the successors of Mahomet unsheathed the sword of war and religion, he was astonished at the boundless prospect of toil and danger, his nature was indolent, nor could the infirm and frigid age of the emperor be kindled to a second effort. The sense of shame, and the importunities of the Syrians, prevented his hasty departure from the scene of action, but the hero was no more, and the loss of Damascus and Jerusalem, the bloody fields of Aynadin and Yermuk, may be imputed in some degree to the absence or misconduct of the sovereign. Instead of defending the sepulchre of Christ, he involved the church and state in a metaphysical controversy for the unity of his will, and while Hera-

Flight of Heraclius
A D 638

clius in the year of Christ 638 (Pagi, Critica, in Baron Annal tom ii p 812 813) Al Wakidi (Ochley vol i p 314) assigns this event to Tuesday, August 21st, an inconsistent date since Easter fell that year on April 5th, the 21st of August must have been a Friday (See the Tables of the Art de Verifier les Dates).

His benignant edict which tempted the grateful city to assume the victory of Pharsalia for a perpetual era, is given by Antiochens in Greek, ἡμεῖς καὶ αὐτοὶ καὶ αὐτονομία καὶ ἀρχὴ καὶ τροχὸς μὲν τῆς ἀνατολῆς John Mlala in Chron p 91 edit Venet. We may distinguish his authentic information of domestic facts from his gross ignorance of general history.

* The Persian historian of Timur (tom iii l v c 21 p 300) describes the castle of Aleppo as founded on a rock one hundred cubits in height a proof, says the French translator that he had never visited the place. It is now in the midst of the city of no strength with a single gate the circuit is about 500 or 600 paces and the ditch half full of stagnant water (Voyages de Tavernier tom i p 149 Pocock vol ii part i p 150). The fortresses of the east are contemptible to a European eye.

* The date of the conquest of Antioch by the Arabs is of some importance. By comparing the years of the world in the chronography of Theophanes with the years of the Hegira in the history of Timur, we shall determine, that it was taken between January 23d and Sep-thus crowned the offspring of his second nuptials, he was tamely stripped of the most valuable part of their inheritance. In the cathedral of Antioch, in the presence of the bishops, at the foot of the crucifix, he bewailed the sins of the prince and people, but his confession instructed the world, that it was vain, and perhaps impious, to resist the judgment of God. The Saracens were invincible in fact, since they were invincible in opinion, and the desertion of Yonkinnu, his false repentance and repeated perfidy, might justify the suspicion of the emperor, that he was encompassed by traitors and apostates, who conspired to betray his person and their country to the enemies of Christ. In the hour of adversity, his superstition was agitated by the omens and dreams of a falling crown, and after bidding an eternal farewell to Syria, he secretly embarked with a few attendants, and absolved the faith of his subjects. Constantine, his eldest son, had been stationed with forty thousand men at Casarea, the civil metropolis of the three provinces of Palestine. But his private interest recalled him to the Byzantine court, and, after the flight of his father, he felt himself an unequal champion to the united force of the caliph. His vanguard was boldly attacked by three hundred Arabs and a thousand black slaves, who, in the depth of winter, had climbed the snowy mountains of Libanus, and who were speedily followed by the victorious squadrons of Calid himself. From the north and south the troops of Antioch and Jerusalem advanced along the sea-shore, till their banners were joined under the walls of the Phœnician cities.

the Syrian war

Tripoli and Tyre were betrayed, and a fleet of fifty transports, which entered without distrust the captive harbours, brought a seasonable supply of arms and provisions to the camp of the Saracens. Their labours were terminated by the unexpected surrender of Casarea: the Roman prince had embarked in the night,* and the defenceless citizens solicited their pardon with an offering of two hundred thousand pieces of gold. The remainder of the province, Ramlah, Ptolemais, or Acre, Sichein or Neapolis, Gaza, Ascalon, Berytus, Sidon, Gabala, Laodicea, Apamea, Hierapolis, no longer presumed to dispute the will of the conqueror, and Syria bowed under the sceptre of the caliph seven hundred years after Pompey had despoiled the last of the Macedonian kings.

The conquerors
of Syria
A D 637-639

The sieges and battles of six campaigns had consumed many thousands of the Moslems. They died with the reputation and the cheerfulness of martyrs, and the simplicity of their faith may be expressed in the words of an Arabian youth, when he embraced, for the last time, his sister and mother. "It is not," said he, "the delicacies of Syria, or the fading delights of this world, that have prompted me to devote my life in the cause of religion. But I seek the favour of God and his apostle, and I have heard from one of the companions of the prophet, that the spirits of the martyrs will be lodged in the crops of green birds, who shall taste the fruits, and drink of the rivers, of paradise. Farewell, we shall meet again among the groves and fountains which God has provided for his elect." The faithful captives might exercise a passive and more arduous resolution, and a cousin of Mahomet is celebrated for refusing, after an abstinence of three days, the wine and pork, the only nourishment that was allowed by the malice of the infidels. The fradits of some weaker brethren exasperated the implacable spirit of fanaticism, and the father of Amer deplored, in pathetic strains, the apostasy and damnation of a son, who had renounced the promises of God, and the intercession of the prophet, to occupy, with the priests and deacons, the lowest mansions of hell. The more fortunate Arabs, who survived the war, and persevered in the faith, were restrained by their abstemious leader from the abuse of prosperity. After a refreshment of three days, Abu Obaidah withdrew his troops from the pernicious contagion of the luxury of Antioch, and assured the caliph that their religion and virtue could only be preserved by the hard discipline of poverty and labour. But the virtue of Omar, however rigorous to himself, was kind and liberal to his brethren. After a just tribute of praise and thanksgiving, he dropt a tear of compassion, and sitting down on the ground, wrote an answer, in which he mildly censured the severity of his lieutenant. "God," said the successor of the prophet, "has not forbidden the use of the good things of this world to faithful men, and such as have performed good works. Therefore you ought to have given them leave to rest themselves, and partake freely of those good things which the country affordeth. If any of the Saracens have no family in Arabia, they may marry in Syria, and whosoever of them wants any female slaves, he may purchase as many as he hath occasion for." The conquerors prepared to use, or to abuse, this gracious permission, but the year of their triumph was marked by a mortality of men and cattle, and twenty-five thousand Saracens were snatched away from the possession of Syria. The death of Abu Obaidah might be lamented by the Christians, but his brethren recollected that he was one of the ten elect whom the prophet had named as the heirs of paradise. Calid survived his brethren about three years, and the * See Orkley, (vol. 1 p. 208, 212) who laughs at the credulity of his author. When Heraclius bade farewell to Syria, Vile Syria et ubi munus valit, he prophesied that the Romans should never re-enter the province till the birth of an inauspicious child, the future scourge of the empire. Abulfeda, p. 68. I am perfectly ignorant of the mysteriousness, or nonsense, of this prediction.

† In the loose and obscure chronology of the times, I am guided by an authentic record (in the book of ceremonies of Constantinople Porphyrogenitus) which certifies that, June 4 A D 678 the emperor crowned his younger son Heraclius in the presence of his eldest, Constantine, and in the palace of Constantinople, (first January 1 A D 678) the royal procession visited the great church, and on the 4th of the same month the hippodrome.

‡ Sixty five years before Christ, Syria Pontique monuments sent Cn Pompey victoribus (Vell. Paterculus li 38) rather of his fortune and power: he adjudged Syria to be a Roman province, and the last of the delinquents were incapable of drawing a sword in the defence of their patrimony. (See the original texts collected by Usur, Annal p. 120.)

§ Abulfeda, Annal Moslem p. 73. Mahomet could artfully vary the praises of his disciples. Of Omar he was accustomed to say, that tomb of the Sword of God is shown in the neighbourhood of Emesa. His valour, which founded in Arabia and Syria the empire of the caliphs, was fortified by the opinion of a special providence, and as long as he wore a cap, which had been blessed by Mahomet, he deemed himself invulnerable amidst the darts of the infidels.

The place of the first conquerors was supplied by a new generation of their children and countrymen. Syria became the seat and support of the house of Ommiyah, and the revenue, the soldiers, the ships of that powerful kingdom, were consecrated to enlarge on every side the empire of the caliphs. But the Saracens despise a superfluity of fame, and their historians scarcely condescend to mention the subordinate conquests which are lost in the splendour and rapidity of their victorious career. To the north of Syria, they passed mount Taurus and reduced to their obedience the province of Cilicia, with its capital Tarsus, the ancient monument of the Assyrian kings. Beyond a second ridge of the same mountains, they spread the flame of war, rather than the light of religion, as far as the shores of the Euxine and the neighbourhood of Constantinople. To the east they advanced to the banks and sources of the Euphrates and Tigris; the long-disputed barrier of Rome and Persia was for ever confounded, the walls of Edessa and Amida, of Dara and Nisibis, which had resisted the arms and engines of Sapor or Nushirvan, were levelled in the dust, and the holy city of Abgarus might vainly produce the epistle or the image of Christ to an unbelieving conqueror. To the west, the Syrian kingdom is bounded by the sea, and the ruin of Aradus, a small island or peninsula on the coast, was postponed during ten years. But the hills of Libanus abounded in timber, the trade of Phœnicia was populous in mariners, and a fleet of seventeen hundred barks was equipped and manned by the natives of the desert. The imperial navy of the Romans fled before them from the Pamphylian rocks to the Hellespont, but the spirit of the emperor, a grandson of Heraclius, had been subdued before the combat by a dream and a pun.<sup>a</sup> The Saracens rode masters of the sea, and the islands of Cyprus, Rhodes, and the Cyclades, were successively exposed to their rapacious visits. Three hundred years before the christian æra, the memorable though fruitless siege of Rhodes<sup>b</sup> by Demetrius, had furnished that maritime republic with the materials and the subject of a trophy. A gigantic statue of Apollo or the sun, seventy cubits in height, was erected at the entrance of the harbour, a monument of the freedom and the arts of Greece. After standing fifty-six years, the colossus of Rhodes was overthrown by an earthquake, but the massy trunk, and huge fragments, lay scattered eight centuries on the ground, and are often described as one of the wonders of the ancient world. They were collected by the diligence of the Saracens, and sold to a Jewish merchant of Edessa, who is said to have laden nine hundred camels with the weight of the brass metal, an enormous weight, though we should include the hundred colossal figures,<sup>c</sup> and the three thousand statues, which adorned the prosperity of the city of the sun.

II The conquest of Egypt may be explained by the character of the victorious Saracen, one of the first of his nation, in an age when the meanest of the brethren was exalted above his nature by the spirit of enthusiasm. The birth of Amrou was at once base and illustrious: his mother, a notorious prostitute, was unable to decide among five of the Koreish; but the proof of resemblance adjudged the child to Aasi, the oldest of her lovers.<sup>d</sup> The youth of Amrou was impelled by the passions and prejudices of his kindred: his poetic genius was exercised in satirical verses against the person and doctrine of Mahomet; his dexterity was employed by the reigning faction to pursue the religious exiles who had taken refuge in the court of the Ethiopian king.<sup>e</sup> Yet he returned from this embassy, a secret proselyte, his reason or his interest determined him to renounce the worship of idols, he escaped from Mecca with his friend Calid, and the prophet of Medina enjoyed at the same moment the satisfaction of embracing the two firmest champions of his cause. The impatience of Amrou to lead the armies of the faithful was checked by the reproof of Omar, who advised him not to seek power and dominion, since he who is a subject to-day, may be a prince to-morrow. Yet his merit was not overlooked by the two first successors of Mahomet, they were indebted to his arms for the conquest of Palestine, and in all the battles and sieges of Syria, he united with the temper of a chief, the valour of an adventurous soldier. In a visit to Medina, the caliph expressed a wish to survey the sword which had cut down so many christian warriors: the son of Aasi unsheathed a short and ordinary scymitar, and as he perceived the surprise of

EGYPT
Character and life of Amrou

if a prophet could arise after himself, it would be Omar: and that in a general calamity, Omar would be excepted by the divine justice (Ockley vol. i. p. 221).

<sup>a</sup> Al Walkidi had likewise written a history of the conquest of Durbekir, or Mesopotamia (Ockley, at the end of the second vol.) which our interpreters do not appear to have seen. The Chronicle of Dionysius of Telmar the Jacobite patriarch records the taking of Edessa A. D. 637, and of Dara A. D. 641 (Asseman Biblot. Orient. tom. ii. p. 103) and the attentive may glean some doubtful information from the Chronography of Theophanes, (p. 285–287.) Most of the towns of Mesopotamia yielded by surrender (Abulpharag. p. 112).

<sup>b</sup> He dreamt that he was at Theſſalonia, a harmless and unmeaning vision: but his soothsayer or his cowardice, understood the sure omen of a defeat concealed in that unpropitious word Θεσ ἀλλω νικησι. Give to another the victory (Theophan. p. 286 Zonaris tom. ii. l. xiv. p. 681).

<sup>c</sup> Every passage and every fact that relates to the isle, the city, and the colossus of Rhodes are compiled in the laborious treatise of Meursius, who has bestowed the same diligence on the two larger islands of Crete and Cyprus. See in the third vol. of his works, the Rhodus of Meursius (l. i. c. 15. p. 715–719). The Bizzantine writers Theophanes and Constantine have ignorantly prolonged the term to 1360 years, and ridiculously divide the weight among 30,000 camels.

<sup>d</sup> Centum colossa alium mobilitatum locum, says Pliny, with his usual spirit. Hist. Natur. xxvii. 18.

<sup>e</sup> We learn this anecdote from a spirited old woman who retiled to their faces the caliph and his friend. She was encouraged by the silence of Amrou and the liberality of Moawiyah (Abulpharag. Annal. Moslem. p. 111).

<sup>f</sup> Gagner, Viede Mahomet, tom. ii. p. 46, &c. who quotes the Abyssinian history or romance of Abdel Baleides. Yet the fact of the embassy and ambassador may be allowed.

Omar, "Alas," said the modest Saracen, "the sword itself, without the arm of its master, is neither sharper nor more weighty than the sword of Pharez-dak the poet." After the conquest of Egypt, he was recalled by the jealousy of the caliph Othman, but in the subsequent troubles, the ambition of a soldier, a statesman, and an orator, emerged from a private station. His powerful support, both in council and in the field, established the throne of the Omnades, the administration and revenue of Egypt were restored by the gratitude of Moawiyah to a faithful friend who had raised himself above the rank of a subject, and Amrou ended his days in the palace and city which he had founded on the banks of the Nile. His dying speech to his children is celebrated by the Arabians as a model of eloquence and wisdom: he deplored the errors of his youth, but if the penitent was still infected by the vanity of a poet, he might exaggerate the venom and mischief of his impious compositions.*

Invasion of Egypt
A.D. 638
June

From his camp, in Palestine, Amrou had surprised or anticipated the caliph's leave for the invasion of Egypt.

The magnanimous Omar trusted in his God and his sword, which had shaken the thrones of Chosroes and Caesar; but when he compared the slender force of the Moslems with the greatness of the enterprise, he condemned his own rashness, and listened to his timid companions. The pride and the greatness of Pharaoh were familiar to the readers of the Koran, and a tenfold repetition of prodigies had been scarcely sufficient to effect, not the victory, but the flight, of six hundred thousand of the children of Israel: the cities of Egypt were many and populous, their architecture was strong and solid, the Nile, with its numerous branches, was alone an insuperable barrier, and the granary of the imperial city would be obstinately defended by the Roman powers. In this perplexity, the commander of the faithful resigned himself to the decision of chance, or, in his opinion, of Providence. At the head of only four thousand Arabs, the intrepid Amrou had marched away from his station of Gaza when he was overtaken by the messenger of Omar. "If you are still in Syria," said the ambiguous mandate, "retreat without delay, but if, at the receipt of this epistle, you have already reached the frontiers of Egypt, advance with confidence, and depend on the succour of God and of your brethren." The experience, perhaps the secret intelligence, of Amrou

* Ptolemy is preserved by Pocock, (No. ad Carmen Loggii, p. 184) and justly applied by Mr Harris (Philosophical Antiquities, p. 130).

For the life and character of Amrou, see Ockley (Hist. of the Saracens, vol. 1, p. 28, 63, 91, 324, 342, 344) and to the end of the volume, vol. 1, p. 51, 53, 57, 74, 110-112, 162) and Otter (Mém. de l'Académie des Inscriptions, tom. xvi, p. 171, 172). The readers of Tacitus may aptly compare Vespasian and Maximian, with Moawiyah and Amrou. Yet the resemblance is still more in the situation, than in the character, of the men.

Al Walkidi had likewise composed a separate history of the conquest of Egypt, which Mr Ockley could never procure, and his own inquiries (vol. 1, p. 344-362) have added very little to the original text of Walkidi (Annal. tom. 2, p. 296-323, see Pocock) the Melchite patriarch of Alexandria, who lived three hundred years after the revolution.

Strabo an accurate and attentive spectator, observes of Heliopolis, had taught him to suspect the mutability of courts, and he continued his march till his tents were unquestionably pitched on Egyptian ground. He there assembled his officers, broke the seal, perused the epistle, gravely inquired the name and situation of the place, and declared his ready obedience to the commands of the caliph. After a siege of thirty days, he took possession of Farmah or Pelusium, and that key of Egypt, as it has been justly named, unlocked the entrance of the country, as far as the ruins of Heliopolis and the neighbourhood of the modern Cairo.

On the western side of the Nile, at a small distance to the east of the Pyramids, at a small distance to the south

The cities of Memphis, Babylon, and Cairo

of the Delta, Memphis, one hundred and fifty furlongs in circumference, displayed the magnificence of ancient kings. Under the reign of the Ptolemies and Casars, the seat of government was removed to the sea-coast, the ancient capital was eclipsed by the arts and opulence of Alexandria, the palaces, and at length the temples, were reduced to a desolate and ruinous condition: yet, in the age of Augustus, and even in that of Constantine, Memphis was still numbered among the greatest and most populous of the provincial cities. The banks of the Nile, in this place of the breadth of three thousand feet, were united by two bridges of sixty and of thirty boats, connected in the middle stream by the small island of Rouda, which was covered with gardens and habitations. The eastern extremity of the bridge was terminated by the town of Babylon and the camp of a Roman legion, which protected the passage of the river and the second capital of Egypt. This important fortress, which might fairly be described as a part of Memphis or Misrah, was invested by the arms of the lieutenant of Omar: a reinforcement of four thousand Saracens soon arrived in his camp, and the military engines, which battered the walls, may be imputed to the art and labour of his Syrian allies. Yet the siege was protracted to seven months, and the rash invaders were encompassed and threatened by the inundation of the Nile. Their last assault was bold and successful: they passed the ditch, which had been fortified with iron spikes, applied their scaling-ladders, entered the fortress with the shout of "God is victorious!" and drove the remnant of the Greeks to their boats and the isle of Rouda. The spot was afterwards recommended to the conqueror by the easy communication with the gulf and the peninισμὸν μὲν οὖν ἐν πλεονεκτήσει ἡ πόλις, (Geograph. 1, τὸν p. 1138) but of Memphis he declares πόλις ἐστὶ μεγάλη καὶ ἀνεκτίκτου, δευτέρα μὲν Ἀλεξανδρείαν (p. 1131) he notices, however, the mixture of inhabitants, and the ruins of the palaces. In the proper Egypt, Ammianus enumerates Memphis among the four cities, miximus urbibus quibus proxima sunt (xvii, 16) and the name of Memphis appears with distinction in the Roman history and in the ecclesiastical lists. The rare and curious facts, the breadth (2016 feet) and the height of the Nile are only to be found in the Danish traveller and the Arabian Geographer, (p. 104).

From the month of April, the Nile begins imperceptibly to rise: the swell becomes strong and stable in the month after the summer solstice (Pto. Hist. Nat. 2, 10) and is usually proclaimed at Cairo on St Peter's day, (June 29). A register of thirty successive years marks the greatest height of the waters between July 25 and August 18 (Maffei Description de l'Égypte, lettre xl, p. 67, &c. Pocock's Description of the East, vol. 1, p. 200. Shaw's Travels, p. 393).

sula of Arabia the remains of Memphis were deserted, the tents of the Arabs were converted into permanent habitations, and the first mosque was blessed by the presence of fourscore companions of Mahomet.<sup>a</sup> A new city arose in their camp on the eastward bank of the Nile, and the contiguous quarters of Babylon and Fostat are confounded in their present decay by the appellation of old Misrah, or Cairo, of which they form an extensive suburb. But the name of Cairo, the town of victory, more strictly belongs to the modern capital, which was founded in the tenth century by the Fatimite caliphs.<sup>b</sup> It has gradually receded from the river, but the continuity of buildings may be traced by an attentive eye from the monuments of Sesosthis to those of Saladin.<sup>c</sup>

Voluntary submission of the Copts or Jacobites.
A D 638

Yet the Arabs, after a glorious and profitable enterprise, must have retreated to the desert, had they not found a powerful alliance in the heart of the country. The rapid conquest of Alexander was assisted by the superstition and revolt of the natives: they abhorred their Persian oppressors, the disciples of the Magi, who had burnt the temples of Egypt, and feasted with sacrilegious appetite on the flesh of the god Apis.<sup>d</sup> After a period of ten centuries the same revolution was renewed by a similar cause, and in the support of an incomprehensible creed, the zeal of the Coptic christians was equally ardent. I have already explained the origin and progress of the Monophysite controversy, and the persecution of the emperors, which converted a sect into a nation, and alienated Egypt from their religion and government. The Saracens were received as the deliverers of the Jacobite church, and a secret and effectual treaty was opened during the siege of Memphis between a victorious army and a people of slaves. A rich and noble Egyptian, of the name of Mokawkas, had dissembled his faith to obtain the administration of his province in the disorders of the Persian war; he aspired to independence: the embassy of Mahomet ranked him among princes, but he declined, with rich gifts and ambiguous compliments, the proposal of a new religion.<sup>e</sup> The abuse of his trust exposed him to the resentment of Heraclius, his submission was delayed by arrogance and fear, and his conscience was prompted by interest to throw himself on the favour of the nation and the support of the Saracens. In his first conference with Amrou, he heard without indignation the usual option of the Koran, the tribute, or the sword. "The Greeks," replied Mokawkas, "are determined to abide the determination of the sword, but with the Greeks I desire no communion, either in this world or in the next, and I abjure for ever the Byzantine tyrant, his synod of Chalcedon, and his Melchite slaves. For myself and my brethren, we are resolved to live and die in the profession of the gospel and unity of Christ. It is impossible for us to embrace the revelations of your prophet, but we are desirous of peace, and cheerfully submit to pay tribute and obedience to his temporal successors." The tribute was ascertained at two pieces of gold for the head of every christian, but old men, monks, women, and children, of both sexes, under sixteen years of age, were exempted from this personal assessment. The Copts above and below Memphis swore allegiance to the caliph, and promised an hospitable entertainment of three days to every mussulman who should travel through their country. By this charter of security, the ecclesiastical and civil tyranny of the Melchites was destroyed: the anathemas of St. Cyril were thundered from every pulpit, and the sacred edifices, with the patrimony of the church, were restored to the national communion of the Jacobites, who enjoyed without moderation the moment of triumph and revenge. At the pressing summons of Amrou, their patriarch Benjamin emerged from his desert, and, after the first interview, the courteous Arab affected to declare, that he had never conversed with a christian priest of more innocent manners and a more venerable aspect.<sup>f</sup> In the march from Memphis to Alexandria the lieutenant of Omar intrusted his safety to the zeal and gratitude of the Egyptians: the roads and bridges were diligently repaired, and in every step of his progress, he could depend on a constant supply of provisions and intelligence. The Greeks of Egypt, whose numbers could scarcely equal a tenth of the natives, were overwhelmed by the universal defection; they had ever been hated, they were no longer feared: the magistrate fled from his tribunal, the bishop from his altar, and the distant garrisons were surprised or starved by the surrounding multitudes. Had not the Nile afforded a safe and ready conveyance to the sea, not an individual could have escaped, who by birth, or language, or office, or religion, was connected with their odious name.

<sup>a</sup> Muriadi, Merveilles de l'Egypte, 243—259. He expatiates on the subject with the zeal and minuteness of a citizen and a bigot, and his local traditions have a strong air of truth and accuracy.

<sup>b</sup> D. Herbelot, Bibliothèque Orientale, p. 233.

<sup>c</sup> The position of New and of Old Cairo is well known, and has been often described. Two writers, who were intimately acquainted with ancient and modern Egypt, have fixed, after a learned inquiry, the city of Memphis at Gizeh, directly opposite the Old Cairo (Sieard, Non venaux Mémoires des Missions du Levant tom. ii. p. 56. Shaw's Observations and Travels, p. 296—304). Yet we may not disregard the authority or the arguments of Pocock (vol. i. p. 25—41), Niebuhr (Voyage, tom. i. p. 77—106) and above all, of D'Anville (Description de l'Egypte, p. 111, 112, 130—149) who have removed Memphis towards the village of Mollannah, some miles further to the south. In their heat the disputants have forgot that the ample space of a topography covers and annihilates the far greater part of the controversy.

<sup>d</sup> See Herodotus, l. iii. c. 27, 28, 29. Asian Hist. Var. l. iv. c. 8. Suidas in Oxon. tom. ii. p. 774. Diodor. Sicul. tom. ii. l. xvii. p. 197.

edit. Weseling. Τὸν Περσῶν ἡγεβηκότων εἰς τὰ ἱερά, says the last of these historians.

<sup>e</sup> Mokawkas sent the prophet two Coptic damsels with two maids, and one eunuch, an alabaster vase, an ounce of pure gold, oil, honey, and the finest white linen of Egypt, with a horse, a mule and an ass distinguished by their respective qualifications. The embassy of Mahomet was despatched from Medina in the seventh year of the Hegira (A D 628). See Gagner, (Vie de Mahomet, tom. ii. p. 255, 256, 303) from Al Jannabi.

<sup>f</sup> The prefecture of Egypt, and the conduct of the war, had been trusted by Heraclius to the patriarch Cyrus (Theophan. p. 280, 281). "In Spain," said James II. "do you not consult your priests?" "We do," replied the catholic ambassador, "and our affairs succeed accordingly." I know not how to relate the plus of Cyrus of psalm, tribute without impuring, the revenue, and of converting, Omar by his marriage with the emperor's daughter (Nicephor. Breviar. p. 17, 18).

<sup>g</sup> See the life of Benjamin in Renaudot (Hist. Patriarch. Alexandrin. p. 156—172), who has correlated the conquest of Egypt with some facts from the Arabic text of Severus the Jacobite historian.

Siege and conquest of Alexandria

By the retreat of the Greeks from the provinces of Upper Egypt, a considerable force was collected in the island of Delta the natural and artificial channels of the Nile afforded a succession of strong and defensible posts, and the road to Alexandria was laboriously cleared by the victory of the Saracens in two and twenty days of general or partial combat. In their annals of conquest, the siege of Alexandria is perhaps the most arduous and important enterprise. The first trading city in the world was abundantly replenished with the means of subsistence and defence. Her numerous inhabitants fought for the dearest of human rights, religion and property, and the enmity of the natives seemed to exclude them from the common benefit of peace and toleration. The sea was continually open, and if Heraclius had been awake to the public distress, fresh armies of Romans and barbarians might have been poured into the harbour to save the second capital of the empire. A circumference of ten miles would have scattered the forces of the Greeks, and favoured the stratagems of an active enemy, but the two sides of an oblong square were covered by the sea and the lake Maræotis, and each of the narrow ends exposed a front of no more than ten furlongs. The efforts of the Arabs were not inadequate to the difficulty of the attempt and the value of the prize. From the throne of Medina, the eyes of Omar were fixed on the camp and city: his voice excited to arms the Arabian tribes and the veterans of Syria, and the merit of a holy war was recommended by the peculiar fame and fertility of Egypt. Anxious for the ruin or expulsion of their tyrants, the faithful natives devoted their labours to the service of Amrou, some sparks of martial spirit were perhaps rekindled by the example of their allies, and the sanguine hopes of Mokawkas had fixed his sepulchre in the church of St John of Alexandria. Eutychius the patriarch observes, that the Saracens fought with the courage of lions, they repulsed the frequent and almost daily sallies of the besieged, and soon assaulted in their turn the walls and towers of the city. In every attack, the sword, the banner of Amrou, glittered in the van of the Moslems. On a memorable day, he was betrayed by his impudent valour: his followers who had entered the citadel were driven back, and the general, with a friend and a slave, remained a prisoner in the hands of the christians. When Amrou was conducted before the præfect, he remembered his dignity, and forgot his situation, a lofty demeanour, and resolute language, revealed the lieutenant of the caliph, and the battle-axe of a soldier was already raised to strike off the head of the audacious captive. His life was saved by the readiness of his slave, who instantly gave his master a blow on the face, and commanded him, with an angry tone, to be silent in the presence of his superiors. The credulous Greek was deceived, he listened to the offer of a treaty, and his prisoners were dismissed in the hope of a more respectable embassy, till the joyful acclamations of the camp announced the return of their general, and insulted the folly of the infidels. At length, after a siege of fourteen months,* and the loss of three and twenty thousand men, the Saracens prevailed: the Greeks embarked their dispirited and diminished numbers, and the standard of Mahomet was planted on the walls of the capital of Egypt. "I have taken," said Amrou to the caliph, "the great city of the west. It is impossible for me to enumerate the variety of its riches and beauty, and I shall content myself with observing, that it contains four thousand palaces, four thousand baths, four hundred theatres or places of amusement, twelve thousand shops for the sale of vegetable food, and forty thousand tributary Jews. The town has been subdued by force of arms, without treaty or capitulation, and the Moslems are impatient to seize the fruits of their victory."† The commander of the faithful rejected with firmness the idea of pillage, and directed his lieutenant to reserve the wealth and revenue of Alexandria for the public service and the propagation of the faith: the inhabitants were numbered, a tribute was imposed, the zeal and resentment of the Jacobites were curbed, and the Melchites who submitted to the Arabian yoke were indulged in the obscure but tranquil exercise of their worship. The intelligence of this disgraceful and calamitous event afflicted the declining health of the emperor, and Heraclius died of a diopsy about seven weeks after the loss of Alexandria.‡ Under the minority of his grandson, the clamours of a people, deprived of their daily sustenance, compelled the Byzantine court to undertake the recovery of the capital of Egypt. In the space of four years, the harbour and fortifications of Alexandria were twice occupied by a fleet and army of Romans. They were twice expelled by the valour of Amrou, who was recalled by the domestic peril from the distant wars of Tripoli and Nubia. But the facility of the attempt, the repetition of the insult, and the obstinacy of the resistance, provoked him to swear, that if a third time he drove the infidels into the sea, he would render Alexandria as accessible on all sides as the house of a prostitute. Faithful to his promise, he dismantled several parts of the walls and towers, but the people were spared in the chastisement of the city, and

* The local description of Alexandria is perfectly vouched by the master hand of the first of geographers (D'Anville Mémoire sur l'Égypte, p. 52-61) but we may borrow the eyes of the modern travellers more especially of Thesault, (Voyage au Levant, part 1, p. 381-395) Pocock, (vol. 1, p. 2-17) and Niebuhr (Voyage en Arabie, tom. 1, p. 31-43). Of the two modern rivals, Savary and Volney, the one may amuse, the other will instruct.

† Both Eutychius (Annal tom. 11, p. 319) and Elmæcin (Hist. Saracen, p. 28) concur in fixing the taking of Alexandria to Friday of the new moon of Mohirram of the twentieth year of the Hegira (December 22 A. D. 640). In reckoning backwards fourteen months spent before Alexandria, seven months before Babylon, &c. Amrou might have invaded Egypt about the end of the year 638 but we are assured, that he entered the country the 12th of Rayn, 6th of June (Mustadi, Mémoires de l'Égypte, p. 164 Severus, apud Renaudot, p. 162) The Saracens, and afterwards Lewis IX. of France, halted at Pelusium, or Damietta, during the season of the inundation of the Nile.

‡ Eutych. Annal tom. 11, p. 318, 319.
§ Notwithstanding some inconsistencies of Theophanes and Cedrenus, the accuracy of Pagi (Critica, tom. 11, p. 824) has extracted from Nicephorus and the Chronicon Orientale the true date of the death of Heraclius February 11th, A. D. 641 fifty days after the loss of Alexandria. A fourth of that time was sufficient to convey the intelligence

the mosque of Mercy was erected on the spot where the victorious general had stopped the fury of his troops

The Alexandrian library I should deceive the expectation of the reader, if I passed in silence the fate of the Alexandrian library, as it is described by the learned Abulpharagius. The spirit of Amrou was more curious and liberal than that of his brethren, and in his leisure hours, the Arabian chief was pleased with the conversation of John, the last disciple of Ammonius, and who derived the surname of Philoponus, from his laborious studies of grammar and philosophy. Imboldened by this familiar intercourse, Philoponus presumed to solicit a gift, inestimable in his opinion, contemptible in that of the barbarians, the royal library, which alone, among the spoils of Alexandria, had not been appropriated by the visit and the seal of the conqueror. Amrou was inclined to gratify the wish of the grammarian, but his rigid integrity refused to alienate the minutest object without the consent of the caliph, and the well-known answer of Omar was inspired by the ignorance of a fanatic. "If these writings of the Greeks agree with the book of God, they are useless and need not be preserved; if they disagree, they are pernicious and ought to be destroyed." The sentence was executed with blind obedience: the volumes of paper or parchment were distributed to the four thousand baths of the city, and such was their incredible multitude, that six months were hardly sufficient for the consumption of this precious fuel. Since the Dynasties of Abulpharagius have been given to the world in a Latin version, the tale has been repeatedly transcribed, and every scholar, with pious indignation, has deplored the irreparable shipwreck of the learning, the arts, and the genius of antiquity. For my own part, I am strongly tempted to deny both the fact and the consequences. The fact is indeed marvellous. "Read and wonder!" says the historian himself, and the solitary report of a stranger who wrote at the end of six hundred years on the confines of Media, is overbalanced by the silence of two annalists of a more early date, both christians, both natives of Egypt, and the most ancient of whom, the patriarch Eutychius, has amply described the conquest of Alexandria. The rigid sentence of Omar is repugnant to the sound and orthodox precept of the Mahometan casuists: they expressly declare, that the religious books of the Jews and christians, which are required by the right of war, should never be committed to the flames, and that the works of profane science, historians or poets, physicians or philosophers, may be lawfully applied to the use of the faithful. A more destructive zeal may perhaps be attributed to the first successors of Mahomet, yet in this instance, the conflagration would have speedily expired in the deficiency of materials. I shall not recapitulate the disasters of the Alexandrian library, the involuntary flame that was kindled by Cesar in his own defence,<sup>d</sup> or the mischievous bigotry of the christians who studied to destroy the monuments of idolatry. But if we gradually descend from the age of the Antonines to that of Theodosius, we shall learn from a chain of contemporary witnesses, that the royal palace and the temple of Serapis no longer contained the four, or the seven, hundred thousand volumes, which had been assembled by the curiosity and magnificence of the Ptolemies. Perhaps the church and seat of the patriarchs might be enriched with a repository of books, but if the ponderous mass of Arian and Monophysite controversy were indeed consumed in the public baths, a philosopher may allow, with a smile, that it was ultimately devoted to the benefit of mankind. I sincerely regret the more valuable libraries which have been involved in the ruin of the Roman empire, but when I seriously compute the lapse of ages, the waste of ignorance, and the calamities of war, our treasures, rather than our losses, are the object of my surprise. Many curious and interesting facts are buried in oblivion, the three great historians of Rome have been transmitted to our hands, in a mutilated state, and we are deprived of many pleasing compositions of the lyric, comic, and dramatic poetry of the Greeks. Yet we should gratefully remember, that the mischances of time and accident have spared the classic works to which the suffrage of antiquity<sup>b</sup> had adjudged the first place of genius and glory, the teachers of ancient knowledge, who are still extant, had perused and compared the writings of their predecessors,<sup>c</sup> nor can it fairly be presumed that any important truth, any useful dis-

cammum for which he is perils criticised by the narrow sloven of Seneca (De Tranquillitate Animi, c. 9) whose wisdom on this occasion, deviates into non sense.

<sup>d</sup> See the History, p. 467.

<sup>e</sup> Ammianus Cellinus (Noctes Attice, xi. 17) Ammianus Marcellinus (xvii. 16) and Claudius (l. xi. c. 15). They all speak in the past tense and the words of Ammianus are remarkably strong. Incensum librorum numerabilem; et iniquorum monumentorum videri conueniens fides &c.

<sup>f</sup> Remusat anwers for versions of the Bible Hexapla, Calena Patrum, Commentaries &c. (p. 170). Our Alexandrian MS. if it came from Egypt and not from Constantinople or mount Athos (Weidenfeld, Prolegomena ad N. T. p. 8 &c.) might possibly be among them.

<sup>h</sup> I have often perused with pleasure a chapter of Quintilian (Institut. Orator. x. 1) in which that judicious critic enumerates and appreciates the series of Greek and Latin classes.

<sup>i</sup> Such as Galen, Pliny, Aristotle, &c. On this subject Watson (The Selections on ancient and modern Learning, p. 62-63) argues with old sense against the lively exoteric fancies of Sir William Temple. The contempt of the Greeks for Barbarie science would scarcely admit the Indian or Ethiopian books into the library of Alexandria, nor is it proved that philosophy has sustained any real loss from their exclusion.

<sup>a</sup> Many treatises of this lover of labour (φιλοπονη) are still extant but for readers of the present age, the printed and unpublished are nearly in the same predicament. Moser and Aristotle are the chief objects of his voracious commentaries, one of which is dated as early as May 10th A. D. 617 (Fabric. Biblioth. Græc. tom. ix. p. 458-468). A modern (John de Clero) who sometimes assumed the same name was equal to all Philoponus in diligence, and far superior in good sense and real knowledge.

<sup>b</sup> Abulpharagius, Dynast. p. 114 vers. Pocock. Anni quid factum sit et mirare. It would be endless to enumerate the moderns who have wondered and believed, but I may distinguish with honour the rational scepticism of Renaudot; (Hist. Alex. Patriarch. p. 170) historia habet aliquod artem ut Arabibus familiaris est.

<sup>c</sup> This curious anecdote will be vainly sought in the annals of Italy, Julius, and the Saracenic history of Elmæus. The silence of Abulpharagius, Muraltus, and a crowd of Moslems, is less conclusive from their ignorance of christian literature.

<sup>d</sup> See Ireland, de Jure Militari Mohammedanorum in his third volume of Dissertationes p. 37. The reason for not burning the religious books of the Jews and christians, is derived from the respect that is due to the name of God.

<sup>e</sup> Consult the collections of Frenschim (Supplement Luvian c. 12. 43) and Usher (Annal. p. 409). Livy himself had styled the Alexandrian library, elegantia, regum utraque, e regum opus, a liberal en-

covery in art or nature, has been snatched away from the curiosity of modern ages

In the administration of Egypt, Amrou balanced the demands of justice and policy, the interest of the people of the law, who were defended by God, and of the people of the alliance, who were protected by man. In the recent tumult of conquest and deliverance, the tongue of the Copts and the sword of the Arabs were most adverse to the tranquillity of the province. To the former, Amrou declared, that faction and falsehood would be doubly chastised, by the punishment of the accusers, whom he should detect as his personal enemies, and by the promotion of their innocent brethren, whom their envy had laboured to injure and supplant. He excited the latter by the motives of religion and honour to sustain the dignity of their character, to endear themselves by a modest and temperate conduct to God and the caliph, to spare and protect a people who had trusted to their faith, and to content themselves with the legitimate and splendid rewards of their victory. In the management of the revenue he disapproved the simple but oppressive mode of a contribution, and preferred with reason a proportion of taxes, deducted on every branch from the clear profits of agriculture and commerce. A third part of the tribute was appropriated to the annual repairs of the dykes and canals, so essential to the public welfare. Under his administration the fertility of Egypt supplied the dearth of Arabia, and a string of camels, laden with corn and provisions, covered almost without an interval the long road from Memphis to Medina. But the genius of Amrou soon renewed the maritime communication which had been attempted or achieved by the Pharaohs, the Ptolemies, or the Cæsars, and a canal, at least eighty miles in length, was opened from the Nile to the Red sea. This inland navigation, which would have joined the Mediterranean and the Indian ocean, was soon discontinued as useless and dangerous: the throne was removed from Medina to Damascus, and the Grecian fleets might have explored a passage to the holy cities of Arabia.

Of his new conquest, the caliph Omar had an imperfect knowledge from the voice of fame and the legends of the Koran. He requested that his lieutenant would place before his eyes the realm of Pharaoh and the Amalekites, and the answer of Amrou exhibits a lively and not unfaithful picture of that singular country. "O commander of the faithful, Egypt is a compound of black earth and green plants, between a pulverized mountain and a red sand. The distance from Syene to the sea is a month's journey for a horseman. Along the valley descends a river, on which the blessing of the Most High reposes both in the evening and morning, and which rises and falls with the revolutions of the sun and moon. When the annual dispensation of Providence unlocks the springs and fountains that nourish the earth, the Nile rolls his swelling and sounding waters through the realm of Egypt: the fields are overspread by the salutary flood, and the villages communicate with each other in their painted barks. The retreat of the inundation deposits a fertilizing mud for the reception of the various seeds: the crowds of husbandmen who blacken the land may be compared to a swarm of industrious ants, and their native intolerance is quickened by the lash of the task-master, and the promise of the flowers and fruits of a plentiful increase. Their hope is seldom deceived, but the riches which they extract from the wheat, the barley, and the rice, the legumes, the fruit-trees, and the cattle, are unequally shared between those who labour and those who possess. According to the vicissitudes of the seasons, the face of the country is adorned with a silver wave, a verdant emerald, and the deep yellow of a golden harvest. Yet this beneficial order is sometimes interrupted, and the long delay and sudden swell of the river in the first year of the conquest might afford some colour to an edifying fable. It is said, that the annual sacrifice of a virgin had been interdicted by the piety of Omar, and that the Nile lay sullen and inactive in his shallow bed, till the mandate of the caliph was cast into the obedient stream, which rose in a single night to the height of sixteen cubits. The admiration of the Arabs for their new conquest encouraged the licence of their romantic spirit. We may read, in the gravest authors, that Egypt was crowded with twenty thousand cities or villages; that, exclusive of the Greeks and Arabs, the Copts alone were found, on the assessment, six millions of tributary subjects, or twenty millions of either sex, and of every age; that three hundred millions of gold or

* This curious and authentic intelligence of Murtadi (p. 251-289) has not been discovered either by Ockley, or by the self-sufficient compilers of the Modern Universal History.

† Enzychiu, Annal tom ii p. 720. I. Ismaeli, Hist. Saracen p. 7. On these obscure canals, the reader may try to satisfy himself from H. Anville, (Mém. sur l'Égypte p. 108-110, 124-132) and a learned thesis manuscript and printed at Strasbourg in the year 1770 (Journ. encyclop. inévitablement manuscrit p. 70-17 (68-70)). Even the supine Turks have admitted the old project of joining the two seas (Mémoires du Baron de Tott tom ii).

‡ A small volume des Merveilles &c de l'Égypte, composed in the thirteenth century by Murtadi of Cairo and translated from an Arabic MS. of cardinal Miram was published by Pierre Valler, Paris, 1650. The antiquities of Egypt are wild and legendary, but the writer deserves credit and esteem for his account of the conquest and geography of his native country. (See the correspondence of Amrou and Omar, p. 279-289.)

§ In a twenty years' residence at Cairo, the consul Maillet had contemplated that very scene, the Nile (lettre ii particularly p. 70-75) the fertility of the land, (lettre iv) From a collector at Cambridge, the poetic eye of Gray had seen the same objects with a keener glance.

What wonder in the sultry climes that spread,
Where Nile, redundant o'er his summer bed,
From his broad bosom life and verdure flung,
And broods o'er Egypt with his wat'ry wings,
If with adventurous war, and really said,
The dusty people drive before the gale
Or on frail boats to meet, labouring, citius rite,
That rise and glitter o'er the sunbaked tide.

(Mason's Works and Memoirs of Gray, p. 199, 200.)
¶ Murtadi, p. 101-107. The reader will not easily credit a human creature under the christian emperors or a traitor of the successors of Mahomet.

¶ Maillet, Description de l'Égypte, p. 22. He mentions this number as the common opinion; and adds that the generality of these villages contain two or three thousand persons, and that many of them are more populous than our large cities.

¶ Enzychiu Annal tom ii p. 708-711. The twenty millions are computed from the following data: one twelfth of mankind above sixty, one third below sixteen, the proportion of men to women as sixteen to sixteen (Recherches sur la population de la France, p. 71, 72). The president Goguet (Origine des Arts &c tom iii p. 20, &c) lists silver were annually paid to the treasury of the caliph.* Our reason must be startled by these extravagant assertions, and they will become more palpable, if we assume the compass and measure the extent of habitable ground a valley from the tropic to Memphis, seldom broader than twelve miles, and the triangle of the Delta, a flat surface of two thousand one hundred square leagues, compose a twelfth part of the magnitude of France†. A more accurate research will justify a more reasonable estimate. The three hundred millions, created by the error of a scribe, are reduced to the decent revenue of four millions three hundred thousand pieces of gold, of which nine hundred thousand were consumed by the pay of the soldiers‡. Two authentic lists, of the present and of the twelfth century, are circumscribed within the respectable number of two thousand seven hundred villages and towns*. After a long residence at Cairo, a French consul has ventured to assign about four millions of Mahometans, Christians, and Jews, for the ample, though not incredible, scope of the population of Egypt‡.

AFRICA IV The conquest of Africa, from First invasion by the Nile to the Atlantic ocean,‡ was Abdallah, A D 647 first attempted by the arms of the caliph Othman. The pious design was approved by the companions of Mahomet and the chiefs of the tribes, and twenty thousand Arabs marched from Medina, with the gifts and the blessing of the commander of the faithful. They were joined in the camp of Memphis by twenty thousand of their countrymen, and the conduct of the war was intrusted to Abdallah,§ the son of Sand and the foster-brother of the caliph, who had lately supplanted the conqueror and lieutenant of Egypt. Yet the favour of the prince, and the merit of his favourite, could not obliterate the guilt of his apostasy. The early conversion of Abdallah, and his skilful pen, had recommended him to the important office of transcribing the sheets of the Koran. he betrayed his trust, corrupted the text, derided the errors which ho had made, and fled to Mecca to escape the justice, and expose the ignorance, of the apostle. After the conquest of Mecca, he fell prostrate at the feet of Mahomet his tears, and the entreaties of Othman, extorted a reluctant pardon, but the prophet declared that he had so long hesitated, to allow time for some zealous disciple to avenge his injury in the blood of the apostate. With apparent fidelity and effective merit, he served the religion which it was no longer his interest to desert. his birth and talents gave him an honourable rank among the Koreish, and, in a nation of cavalry, Abdallah was renowned as the boldest and most dexterous horseman of Arabia. At the head of forty thousand Moslems, he advanced from Egypt into the unknown countries of the west. The sands of Barca might be impervious to a Roman legion, but the Arabs were attended by their faithful camels, and the natives of the desert beheld without terror the familiar aspect of the soil and climate. After a painful march, they pitched their tents before the walls of Tripoli,¶ a maritime city in which the name, the wealth, and the inhabitants, of the province had gradually centred, and which now maintains the third rank among the states of Barbary. A reinforcement of Greeks was surprised and cut in pieces on the sea-shore, but the fortifications of Tripoli resisted the first assaults, and the Saracens were tempted by the approach of the præfect Gregory,§ to relinquish the labours of the siege for the perils and the hopes of a decisive action. If his standard was followed by one hundred and twenty thousand men, the regular bands of the empire must have been lost in the naked and disorderly crowd of Africans and Moors, who formed the strength, or rather the numbers, of his host. He rejected with indignation the option of the Koran or the tribute, and during several days, the two armies were fiercely engaged from the dawn of light to the hour of noon, when their fatigue and the excessive heat compelled them to seek shelter and refreshment in twenty seven millions on ancient Egypt, because the seventeen hundred companions of Sesostris were born on the same day.

The præfect Gregory and his daughter

* Elmrein, Hist Saracen p 218 and this gross lump is swallowed without scruple by D Herbelot (Bibliot Orient p 1031) Arbuthnot, (Tables of Ancient Coins, p 262) and De Guignes (Hist des Huns, tom iii p 130). They might allege the not less extravagant liberality of Aprian in favour of the Ptolemies (in præfat.) of seventy four myriads 740,000 talents an annual income of 185 or near 300 millions of pounds sterling according as we reckon by the Egyptian or the Alexandrian talent (Bernard de Ponderibus Antiq p 186).

† See the measurement of D Anville (Mem sur l'Egypte p 23, &c.) After some puerile evils, M Pauw (Recherches sur les Egyptiens, tom i p 118-121) can only enlarge his reckoning to 2250 square leagues. ‡ Riccaudot, Hist. Palmarin Alexand p 334, who calls the common reading, or version of Elmrein, error librari. His own emendation of 4 300,000 pieces in the ninth century, maintains a probable medium between the 3 000 000 which the Arabs required by the conquest of Egypt (idem, p 168) and the 2 400 000 which the sultan of Constantinople levied in the last century (Pietro della Valle, tom i p 352 Thevenot, part i p 824) Pauw (Recherches tom ii p 365-373) gradually raises the revenue of the Pharaohs, the Ptolemies, and the Cæsars, from six to fifteen millions of German crowns.

§ The list of Schulteis, (Index Geograph et civilem Vit Sindh p 5) contains 2396 places that of D Anville, (Mem sur l'Egypte, p 29) from the divan of Cairo enumerates 2696.

¶ See Maillet, (Description de l'Egypte p 28) who seems to argue with candour and judgment. I am much better satisfied with the observations than with the reading of the French consul. He was ignorant of Greek and Latin literature and his fancy is too much delighted with the fictions of the Arabs. Their best knowledge is collected by Abulfeda, (Descript. Egypt Arab et Lat a Joh David Meinhel, & Gottinger, in 4to 1776) and in two recent voyages into Egypt, we are amused by Savary, and instructed by Volney. I wish the latter could travel over the globe.

‡ My conquest of Africa is drawn from two French interpreters of Arabic literature, Circone, (Hist de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne sous la Domination des Arabes, tom i p 8-55) and Otter (Hist de l'Academie des Inscriptions, tom xxi p 111-120 and 136). They derive their principal information from Novari, who composed, A D 1331 an Encyclopedie in more than twenty volumes. The five general parts successively treat of 1 Physics 2 Man, 3 Animals 4 Plants, and 5 History and the African affairs are discussed in the sixth chapter of the fifth section of this last part. (Reiske Prolegomena ad Hagii Chalfie Tabulas, p 232-234) Among the older historians who are quoted by Novari we may distinguish the original narrative of a soldier who led the van of the Moslems.

§ See the history of Abdallah in Abulfeda, (Vit Mohammed p 109) and Cavigier (Vie de Mahomet tom ii p 45-48).

¶ The province and city of Tripoli are described by Leo Africanus (in Navigatione et Viaggi di Ramusio tom i Venetii 1550, fol 76 verso), and Marmol (Description de l'Afrique tom ii p 562). The first of these writers was a Moor a scholar, and a traveller who composed or translated his African geography in a state of civility at Rome where he had assumed the name and religion of pope Leo X. In a similar captivity among the Moors the Spanish Marmol a soldier of Charles V compiled his Description of Africa translated by D'Abancourt into French (Paris 1667 3 vols in 4to). Marmol had read and seen, but he is destitute of the curious and extensive observation which abounds in the original work of Leo the African.

‡ Theophanes who mentions the defeat rather than the death of Gregory. He brands the præfect with the name of Trajanor he had probably assumed the purple (Chronograph p 285).

their respective camps. The daughter of Gregory, a maid of incomparable beauty and spirit, is said to have fought by his side from her earliest youth she was trained to mount on horseback, to draw the bow, and to wield the scymitar, and the richness of her arms and apparel was conspicuous in the foremost ranks of the battle. Her hand, with a hundred thousand pieces of gold, was offered for the head of the Arabian general, and the youths of Africa were excited by the prospect of the glorious prize. At the pressing solicitation of his brethren, Abdallah withdrew his person from the field, but the Saracens were discouraged by the retreat of their leader, and the repetition of these equal or unsuccessful conflicts.

Victory of the Arabs. A noble Arabian, who afterwards became the adversary of Ali, and the father of a caliph, had signalized his valour in Egypt, and Zobeir<sup>a</sup> was the first who planted a scaling-ladder against the walls of Babylon. In the African war he was detached from the standard of Abdallah. On the news of the battle, Zobeir, with twelve companions, cut his way through the camp of the Greeks, and pressed forwards, without tasting either food or repose, to partake of the dangers of his brethren. He cast his eyes round the field. "Where," said he, "is our general?" "In his tent." "Is the tent a station for the general of the Moslems?" Abdallah represented with a blush the importance of his own life, and the temptation that was held forth by the Roman præfect. "Retort," said Zobeir, "on the infidels their ungenerous attempt. Proclaim through the ranks, that the head of Gregory shall be repaid with his captive daughter, and the equal sum of one hundred thousand pieces of gold." To the courage and discretion of Zobeir the lieutenant of the caliph intrusted the execution of his own stratagem, which inclined the long-disputed balance in favour of the Saracens. Supplying by activity and artifice the deficiency of numbers, a part of their forces lay concealed in their tents, while the remainder prolonged an irregular skirmish with the enemy, till the sun was high in the heavens. On both sides they retired with fainting steps: their horses were unbridled, their armour was laid aside, and the hostile nations prepared, or seemed to prepare, for the refreshment of the evening, and the encounter of the ensuing day. On a sudden the charge was sounded, the Arabian camp poured forth a swarm of fresh and intrepid warriors, and the long line of the Greeks and Africans was surprised, assaulted, overturned, by new squadrons of the faithful, who, to the eye of fanaticism, might appear as a band of angels descending from the sky. The præfect himself was slain by the hand of Zobeir: his daughter, who sought revenge and death, was surrounded and made prisoner, and the fugitives involved in their disaster the town of Sufetula, to which they escaped from the sabres and lances of the Arabs. Sufetula was built one hundred and fifty miles to the south of Carthage: a gentle declivity is watered by a running stream, and shaded by a grove of juniper trees, and, in the ruins of a triumphal arch, a portico, and three temples of the Corinthian order, curiosity may yet admire the magnificence of the Romans. After the fall of this opulent city, the provincials and barbarians implored on all sides the mercy of the conqueror. His vanity or his zeal might be flattered by offers of tribute or professions of faith: but his losses, his fatigues, and the progress of an epidemical disease, prevented a solid establishment, and the Saracens, after a campaign of fifteen months, retreated to the confines of Egypt, with the captives and the wealth of their African expedition. The caliph's fifth was granted to a favourite, on the nominal payment of five hundred thousand pieces of gold,<sup>c</sup> but the state was doubly injured by this fallacious transaction, if each foot-soldier had shared one thousand, and each horseman three thousand, pieces, in the real division of the plunder. The author of the death of Gregory was expected to have claimed the most precious reward of the victory from his silence: it might be presumed that he had fallen in the battle, till the tears and exclamations of the præfect's daughter at the sight of Zobeir revealed the valour and modesty of that gallant soldier. The unfortunate virgin was offered, and almost rejected as a slave, by her father's murderer, who coolly declared that his sword was consecrated to the service of religion, and that he laboured for a recompence far above the charms of mortal beauty, or the riches of this transitory life. A reward congenial to his temper, was the honourable commission of announcing to the caliph Othman the success of his arms. The companions, the chiefs, and the people, were assembled in the mosque of Medina, to hear the interesting narrative of Zobeir, and, as the orator forgot nothing except the merit of his own counsels and actions, the name of Abdallah was joined by the Arabians with the heroic names of Caled and Amrou.

The western conquests of the Saracens were suspended near twenty years, till their dissensions were composed by the establishment of the house of Omayyah, and the caliph Monwiyah was invited by the cries of the Africans themselves. The successors of Heraclius had been informed of the tribute which they had been compelled to stipulate with the Arabs, but instead of being moved to pity and relieve their distresses, they imposed, as an equivalent,

Progress of the Saracens in Africa
A D 665—689

version, p. 39) seems to report the same job. When the Arabs besieged the palace of Othman, it stood high in their catalogue of grievances.

Ἡ τετραρτησὺν Σαρακηνοὶ τῇ Ἀφρικῇ, καὶ συμβαλοῦντες τῷ τυραννικῷ Τριγυρίῳ τούτων τρεπόμενοι καὶ τοῖς αἰσιν αὐτῶν κτενοῖσι, καὶ κοίτησαντες φόβους μετὰ τῶν Ἀφρικῶν υπερέβουι. Theophylact Chronograph p. 285 edit Paris. His chronology is loose and inaccurate.

<sup>a</sup> See in Oakley, (Hist. of the Saracens vol. ii p. 45) the death of Zobeir, which was honoured with the tears of Ali, against whom he had rebelled. His valour at the siege of Babylon, if indeed it be the same person, is mentioned by Luitprand (Annal. tom. ii p. 308).

<sup>c</sup> Shaw's Travels, p. 118, 119.
<sup>d</sup> Minner empior says Abdallah, erat hec, et miri donatio, quoniam quidam Othman, cum nonnullis minimis ex arario prius abbas arrio præstabil (Annal. Moslem p. 78) Imaam (in his cloudy

[The page contains extremely faint, illegible markings that appear to be bleed-through from the reverse side or very light ink impressions.]

countrymen The third general or governor of Africa, Zuhair, avenged and encountered the fate of his predecessor He vanquished the natives in many battles he was overthrown by a powerful army, which Constantinople had sent to the relief of Carthage

Foundation of Cairoan,
A. D 670—675

It had been the frequent practice of the Moorish tribes to join the invaders, to share the plunder, to profess the faith, and to revolt to their savage state of independence and idolatry, on the first retreat or misfortune of the Moslems The prudence of Akbah had proposed to found an Arabian colony in the heart of Africa, a citadel that might curb the levity of the barbarians, a place of refuge to secure, against the accidents of war, the wealth and the families of the Saracens With this view, and under the modest title of the station of a caravan, he planted this colony in the fiftieth year of the Hegira In its present decay, Cairoan<sup>q</sup> still holds the second rank in the kingdom of Tunis, from which it is distant about fifty miles to the south<sup>r</sup> its inland situation, twelve miles westward of the sea, has protected the city from the Greek and Sicilian fleets When the wild beasts and serpents were extirpated, when the forest, or rather wilderness, was cleared, the vestiges of a Roman town were discovered in a sandy plain the vegetable food of Cairoan is brought from afar, and the scarcity of springs constrains the inhabitants to collect in cisterns and reservoirs a precarious supply of rain-water These obstacles were subdued by the industry of Akbah, he traced a circumference of three thousand and six hundred paces, which he encompassed with a brick wall, in the space of five years, the governor's palace was surrounded with a sufficient number of private habitations, a spacious mosch was supported by five hundred columns of granite, porphyry, and Numidian marble, and Cairoan became the seat of learning as well as of empire But these were the glories of a later age, the new colony was shaken by the successive defeats of Akbah and Zuhair, and the western expeditions were again interrupted by the civil discord of the Arabian monarchy The son of the valiant Zuhair maintained a war of twelve years, a siege of seven months against the house of Ommiyah Abdallah was said to unite the fierce-

<sup>q</sup> The foundation of Cairoan is mentioned by Ockley (Hist of the Saracens, vol. ii p. 123, 130) and the situation, moech, &c of the city are described by Leo Africanus, (fol. 75) Martini, (tom. ii p. 532) and Shaw, (p. 115)

<sup>r</sup> A portentous, though frequent, mistake has been the confounding, from a slight similitude of name, the Cyrene of the Greeks, and the Cairoan of the Arabs two cities which are separated by an interval of a thousand miles along the sea-coast The great Thuanus has not escaped this fault, the less excusable as it is connected with a formal and elaborate description of Africa, (Historiarum l. vii c. 2. m. tom. i p. 240 edit. Buckley)

<sup>s</sup> Besides the Arabic chronicles of Abulfeda Elmacin, and Abulpharagus under the seventy third year of the Hegira, we may consult D'Herbelot (Biblioth. Orient. p. 7) and Ockley, (Hist. of the Saracens, vol. ii p. 329—330) The latter has given the last and pathetic dialogue between Abdallah and his mother but he has forgot a physical effect of her grief for his death, the return at the age of ninety, and fatal consequences, of her menage

<sup>t</sup> Δεσποτιοῦ ἀπὸ τὰς Ῥωμαίων ἐξῆλθε πλοῖμα, ᾧ ὀνόματι ἰωάννην τοῖς Πατρίσιον ἐμπερὸν τῶν πολεμίων προχειρίσαντο τὸν ἡαρχιδόνα κατὰ τὴν Σαρακηνὴν ἐξέπεμψεν Nicephorus Constantinopol. an. Breviar. p. 28 The patriarch of Constantinople,

ness of the lion with the subtilty of the fox, but if he inherited the courage, he was devoid of the generosity, of his father<sup>s</sup>

The return of domestic peace allowed the caliph Abdalmalek to resume the conquest of Africa, the standard<sup>Conquest of Carthage, A. D 692—698</sup> was delivered to Hassan governor of Egypt, and the revenue of that kingdom, with an army of forty thousand men, was consecrated to the important service In the vicissitudes of war, the interior provinces had been alternately won and lost by the Saracens But the sea-coast still remained in the hands of the Greeks, the predecessors of Hassan had respected the name and fortifications of Carthage, and the number of its defenders was recruited by the fugitives of Cades and Tripoli. The arms of Hassan were bolder and more fortunate he reduced and pillaged the metropolis of Africa, and the mention of scaling-ladders may justify the suspicion that he anticipated, by a sudden assault, the more tedious operation of a regular siege But the joy of the conquerors was soon disturbed by the appearance of the christian succours The præfect and patrician John, a general of experience and renown, embarked at Constantinople the forces of the eastern empire, they were joined by the ships and soldiers of Sicily, and a powerful reinforcement of Goths<sup>u</sup> was obtained from the fears and religion of the Spanish monarch The weight of the confederate navy broke the chain that guarded the entrance of the harbour, the Arabs retired to Cairoan, or Tripoli, the christians landed, the citizens hailed the ensign of the cross, and the winter was idly wasted in the dream of victory or deliverance But Africa was irrecoverably lost the zeal and resentment of the commander of the faithful<sup>v</sup> prepared in the ensuing spring a more numerous armament by sea and land, and the patrician in his turn was compelled to evacuate the post and fortifications of Carthage A second battle was fought in the neighbourhood of Utica the Greeks and Goths were again defeated, and their timid embarkation saved them from the sword of Hassan, who had invested the slight and insufficient rampart of their camp Whatever yet remained of Carthage, was delivered to the flames, and the colony of Didor and Cæsar lay desolate above two hundred years, till a part, perhaps a with Theophanes, (Chronograph p. 309) have slightly mentioned this last attempt for the relief of Africa Pagi (Critica, tom. iii p. 120 141) has nicely ascertained the chronology by a strict comparison of the Arabic and Byzantine historians, who often disagree both in time and fact See likewise a note of Otter, (p. 121)

<sup>u</sup> Dove s'erano ridotti i nobili Romani e i Goti, and afterwards, i Romani suggerono e i Goti, lasciarono Carthagine (Leo African fol. 22 recto) I know not from what Arabic writer the African derived his Goths but the fact, though new, is so interesting and so probable, that I will accept it on the slightest authority

<sup>x</sup> This commander is styled by Nicephorus Πασιλευ Σαρακηνων, a vague though not improper definition of the caliph Theophanes introduces the strange appellation of Προτοσυμβολος, which his interpreter Geor explains by Vizir Azem They may approach the truth, in assigning the active part to the minister, rather than the prince but they forget that the Ommiades had only a kateb or secretary, and that the office of Vizir was not revived or instituted till the 132d year of the Hegira (D'Herbelot, p. 912)

<sup>y</sup> According to Solinus (l. 27 p. 36 edit Salmas) the Carthage of Dido stood either 677 or 737 years a various reading, which proceeds from the difference of MSS or editions. (Salmas Plin. Exercit. tom. i p. 228) The former of these accounts, which gives 823 years before twentieth, of the old circumference was repeopled by the first of the Fatimite caliphs. In the beginning of the sixteenth century, the second capital of the west was represented by a mosque, a college without students, twenty-five or thirty shops, and the huts of five hundred peasants, who, in their abject poverty, displayed the arrogance of the punie senators. Even that paltry village was swept away by the Spaniards whom Charles the fifth had stationed in the fortress of the Goletta. The ruins of Carthage have perished, and the place might be unknown if some broken arches of an aqueduct did not guide the footsteps of the inquisitive traveller.*

The Greeks were expelled, but the Final conquest of Africa
A. D. 698—709
Arabians were not yet masters of the country. In the interior provinces the Moors or Beibers,* so feeble under the first Cæsars, so formidable to the Byzantine princes, maintained a disorderly resistance to the religion and power of the successors of Mahomet. Under the standard of their queen Calina the independent tribes acquired some degree of union and discipline, and as the Moors respected in their females the character of a prophetess they attacked the invaders, with an enthusiasm similar to their own. The veteran bands of Hassan were inadequate to the defence of Africa the conquests of an age were lost in a single day, and the Arabian chief, overwhelmed by the torrent, retired to the confines of Egypt, and expected, five years, the promised succours of the caliph. After the retreat of the Saracens, the victorious prophetess assembled the Moorish chiefs, and recommended a measure of strange and savage policy. "Our cities," said she, "and the gold and silver which they contain, perpetually attract the arms of the Arabs. These vile metals are not the objects of our ambition, we content ourselves with the simple productions of the earth. Let us destroy these cities, let us bury in their ruins those pernicious treasures, and when the avarice of our foes shall be destitute of temptation, perhaps they will cease to disturb the tranquillity of a warlike people." The proposal was accepted with unanimous applause. From Tangier to Tripoli the buildings, or at least the fortifications, were demolished, the fruit-trees were cut down, the means of subsistence were extirpated, a fertile and populous garden was changed into a desert, and the historians of a more recent period could discern the frequent traces of the prosperity and devastation of their ancestors. Such is the tale of the modern Arabians. Yet I strongly suspect that their ignorance of antiquity, the love of the marvellous, and the fashion of extolling the philosophy of barbarians, has induced them to describe, as one voluntary act, the calamities of three hundred years since the first fury of the Donatists and Vandals. In the progress of the revolt Calina had most probably contributed her share of destruction, and the alarm of universal ruin might terrify and alienate the cities that had reluctantly yielded to her unworthy yoke. They no longer hoped, perhaps they no longer wished, the return of their Byzantine sovereigns: their present servitude was not alleviated by the benefits of order and justice, and the most zealous catholic must prefer the imperfect truths of the Koran to the blind and rude idolatry of the Moors. The general of the Saracens was again received as the saviour of the province: the friends of civil society conspired against the savages of the land, and the royal prophetess was slain in the first battle which overturned the baseless fabric of her superstition and empire. The same spirit revived under the successor of Hassan: it was finally quelled by the activity of Musa and his two sons, but the number of the rebels may be presumed from that of three hundred thousand captives, sixty thousand of whom, the caliph's fifth, were sold for the profit of the public treasury. Thirty thousand of the barbarian youth were enlisted in the troops, and the pious labours of Musa, to inculcate the knowledge and practice of the Koran, accustomed the Africans to obey the apostle of God and the commander of the faithful. In their climate and government, their diet and habitation, the wandering Moors resembled the Bedouens of the desert. With the religion, they were proud to adopt the language, name, and origin, Adoption of the of Arabs: the blood of the strangers and natives was insensibly mingled, and from the Euphrates to the Atlantic the same nation might seem to be diffused over the sandy plains of Asia and Africa. Yet I will not deny that fifty thousand tents of pure Arabians might be transported over the Nile, and scattered through the Libyan desert, and I am not ignorant that five of the Moorish tribes still retain their barbarous idiom, with the appellation and character of white Africans.<sup>b</sup>

Moors

V In the progress of conquest from the north and south, the Goths and the Saracens encountered each other on the confines of Europe and Africa.

SIANE First temptations and desires of the Arabs
A. D. 709

In the opinion of the latter, the difference of religion is a reasonable ground of enmity and war-to the insult, (Pompeius Festus l. ii. p. 49 edit. Dreier) and freely gave themselves the name of barbarians. They insensibly claimed an exemption for Italy and her subject provinces, and at length removed the disgraceful appellation to the savage or hostile nations beyond the pale of the empire. 4 In every sense it was due to the Moors: the familiar word was borrowed from the Latin provincials by the Arabian conquerors, and has justly settled as a local denomination (Barbary) along the northern coast of Africa.

<sup>b</sup> The first book of Leo Africanus and the observations of Dr Shaw, (p. 220 213 227 217, &c.) will throw some light on the rising tribes of Barbary of Arabian or Moorish descent. But Shaw had seen these savages with distant terror, and Leo a captive in the Vahin appears to have lost more of his Arabic than he could acquire of Greek or Roman learning. Many of his gross mistakes might be detected in the first period of the Mahometan history.

Christ, is more consistent with the well wished testimony of Vellus Palerminus: but the latter is preferred by our chronologists (Marmol. Canon Chron. p. 398) as more agreeable to the Hebrew and Tyrian annals.

* Leo African. fol. 71 verso. 72. reelo. Marmol. tom. ii. p. 443—447. Shaw. p. 80.

<sup>a</sup> The history of the word Barbar may be classed under four periods. 1 In the time of Homer, when the Greeks and Asiatics might probably use a common idiom: the imitative sound of barbar was applied to the rude tribes whose pronunciation was most harsh, whose grammar was most defective. ἄγροὶ βαρβαροφωνοί (Ilud. ii. 867 with the Oxford scholiast, Clarke's Annotations and Henry Stephen's Greek Thesaurus, tom. i. p. 720.) 2 From the time at least of Herodotus it was extended to all the nations who were strangers to the language and manners of the Greeks. 3 In the age of Plautus, the Romans submitted fare. As early as the time of Othman<sup>d</sup> their piratical squadrons had ravaged the coasts of Andalusia,<sup>e</sup> nor had they forgotten the relief of Carthage by the Gothic succours. In that age, as well as in the present, the kings of Spain were possessed of the fortress of Ceuta, one of the columns of Hercules, which is divided by a narrow strait from the opposite pillar or point of Europe. A small portion of Mauritania was still wanting to the African conquest, but Musa, in the pride of victory, was repulsed from the walls of Ceuta, by the vigilance and courage of count Julian, the general of the Goths. From his disappointment and perplexity, Musa was relieved by an unexpected message of the christian chief, who offered his place, his person, and his sword, to the successors of Mahomet, and solicited the disgraceful honour of introducing their arms into the heart of Spain.<sup>f</sup> If we inquire into the cause of his treachery, the Spaniards will repeat the popular story of his daughter Cava, a virgin who was seduced, or ravished, by her sovereign, of a father who sacrificed his religion and country to the thirst of revenge. The passions of princes have often been licentious and destructive, but this well-known tale, romantic in itself, is indifferently supported by external evidence, and the history of Spain will suggest some motives of interest and policy more congenial to the breast of a veteran statesman.<sup>h</sup> After the decease or deposition of Witiza, his two sons were supplanted by the ambition of Roderic, a noble Goth, whose father, the duke or

Slate of the Gothic monarchy

governor of a province, had fallen a victim to the preceding tyranny. The monarchy was still elective, but the sons of Witiza, educated on the steps of the throne, were impatient of a private station. Their resentment was the more dangerous, as it was varnished with the dissimulation of courts: their followers were excited by the remembrance of favours and the promise of a revolution, and their uncle Oppas, archbishop of Toledo and Seville, was the first person in the church, and the second in the state. It is probable that Julian was involved in the disgrace of the unsuccessful faction, that he had little to hope and much to fear from the new reign, and that the imprudent king could not forget or forgive

<sup>e</sup> In a conference with a prince of the Greeks Amru observed, that their religion was different upon which score it was lawful for brothers to quarrel. Ockley's History of the Saracens, vol. 1 p. 328.

<sup>d</sup> Abulfeda, Annal Moslem p. 78 vers. Reiske.

<sup>e</sup> The name of Andalusia is applied by the Arabs not only to the modern province but to the whole peninsula of Spain (Geograph. Nub. p. 151 D. Herbelot, Biblioth. Orient. p. 114, 115). The etymology has been most improbably deduced from Vandulusia, country of the Vandals (D. Anville, Etats de l'Europe, p. 146, 147, &c.). But the Handalusia of Casiri, which signifies in Arabic, the region of the evening, of the west in a word, the Hesperia of the Greeks, is perfectly apposite. Biblioth. Arabico-Hispanica tom. II p. 327, &c.

<sup>f</sup> The fall and resurrection of the Gothic monarchy are related by Mariana, (tom. I p. 238-260) in c. 19-26 in c. 1, 2. That historian has infused into his noble work (Historie de Rebus Hispaniae, libri xix. Hag.æ Comitum 1733, in four volumes in folio, with the Continuation of Mariana) the style and spirit of a Roman classic, and after the twelfth century, his knowledge and judgment may be safely trusted. But the Jesuit is not exempt from the prejudices of his order, he adopts and adorns, like his rival Buchanan, the most absurd of the national legends. He is too careless of criticism and chronology, and supplies, from a lively fancy, the chasms of historical evidence. These chasms are large and frequent, Roderic, archbishop of Toledo, the father of the Spanish history, lived six hundred years after the conquest of the Arabs, and the more early accounts are comprised in some measure in the blind chronicles of Isidore of Seville (Pacem

the injuries which Roderic and his family had sustained. The merit and influence of the count rendered him a useful or formidable subject: his estates were ample, his followers bold and numerous, and it was too fatally shown that, by his Andalusian and Mauritanian commands, he held in his hand the keys of the Spanish monarchy. Too feeble, however, to meet his sovereign in arms, he sought the aid of a foreign power, and his rash invitation of the Moors and Arabs produced the calamities of eight hundred years. In his epistles, or in a personal interview, he revealed the wealth and nakedness of his country, the weakness of an unpopular prince, the degeneracy of an effeminate people. The Goths were no longer the victorious barbarians, who had humbled the pride of Rome, despoiled the queen of nations, and penetrated from the Danube to the Atlantic ocean. Secluded from the world by the Pyrenean mountains, the successors of Alaric had slumbered in a long peace, the walls of the cities were mouldered into dust, the youth had abandoned the exercise of arms, and the presumption of their ancient renown would expose them in a field of battle to the first assault of the invaders. The ambitious Saracen was fired by the ease and importance of the attempt, but the execution was delayed till he had consulted the commander of the faithful, and his messenger returned with the permission of Walid to annex the unknown kingdoms of the west to the religion and throne of the caliphs. In his residence of Tangier, Musa, with secrecy and caution, continued his correspondence and hastened his preparations. But the remorse of the conspirators was soothed by the fallacious assurance that he should content himself with the glory and spoil, without aspiring to establish the Moslems beyond the sea that separates Africa from Europe.<sup>i</sup>

Before Musa would trust an army of the faithful to the traitors and infidels of a foreign land, he made a less dangerous trial of their strength and veracity. One hundred Arabs, and four hundred Africans, passed over in four vessels, from Tangier, or Ceuta, the place of their descent on the opposite shore of the strait, is marked by the name of Tarif their chief, and the date of this memorable event<sup>k</sup> is fixed to the

The first descent of the Arabs,
A. D. 710 July

and of Alphonso III. King of Leon, which I have seen only in the annals of Pagi.

<sup>g</sup> Le viol (says Voltaire) est aussi difficile à faire qu'à prouver. Des écrivains se seroient ils hâtes pour une fille? (Hist. Generale, c. xxvi.) His argument is not logically conclusive.

<sup>h</sup> In the story of Cava, Mariana (l. vi c. 21 p. 211, 242.) seems to vie with the Lucretia of Livy. Like the ancients, he seldom quotes, and the oldest testimony of Baronius (Annal. Eccles. A. D. 713, No. 12.) that of Lucius Tudensis, a Gallician deacon of the thirteenth century, only says Cava quam pro concubina utebatur.

<sup>i</sup> The orientals, Elmacin, Abulpharagius, Abulfeda, pass over the conquest of Spain in silence or with a single word. The text of Novari, and the other Arabian writers, is represented, though with some foreign alloy, by M. de Cardonne (Hist. de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne sous la Domination des Arabes, Paris, 1763, 3 vol. in 12mo tom. I p. 21-114) and more concisely by M. de Guignes (Hist. des Huns, tom. I p. 347-350). The librarian of the Escurial has not satisfied my hopes: yet he appears to have searched with diligence his broken materials, and the history of the conquest is illustrated by some valuable fragments of the genuine Rasis, (who wrote at Cordula A. H. 300) of Ben Hazil &c. See Biblioth. Arabico-Hispanica tom. II p. 32, 105, 106, 182, 252, 319-332. On this occasion the industry of Pagi has been aided by the Arabic learning of his friend the Abbe de Longuerue, and to their joint labours I am deeply indebted.

<sup>k</sup> A mistake of Roderic of Toledo, in computing the lunar years of the Hegira with the Julian years of the era, has determined Baronius, month of Ramadan, of the ninety-first year of the Hegira, to the month of July, seven hundred and forty-eight years from the Spanish æra of Cæsar,<sup>1</sup> seven hundred and ten after the birth of Christ. From their first station, they marched eighteen miles through a hilly country to the castle and town of Julian<sup>m</sup> on which (it is still called Algezire) they bestowed the name of the Green Island, from a verdant cape that advances into the sea. Their hospitable entertainment, the christians who joined their standard, their inroad into a fertile and unguarded province, the richness of their spoil, and the safety of their return, announced to their brethren the most favourable omens of victory. In the ensuing spring, five thousand veterans and volunteers were embarked under the command of Tarik, a dauntless and skilful soldier, who surpassed the expectation of his chief, and the necessary trans-

Their second descent
A.D. 711
April

ports were provided by the industry of their too faithful ally. The Saracens landed<sup>n</sup> at the pillar or point of Europe, the corrupt and familiar appellation of Gibraltar (Gebel al Tarik) describes the mountain of Tarik, and the intrenchments of his camp were the first outline of those fortifications, which, in the hands of our countrymen, have resisted the art and power of the house of Bourbon. The adjacent governors informed the court of Toledo of the descent and progress of the Arabs, and the defeat of his lieutenant Edeco, who had been commanded to seize and bind the presumptuous strangers, admonished Roderic of the magnitude of the danger. At the royal summons, the dukes, and counts, the bishops and nobles of the Gothic monarchy, assembled at the head of their followers, and the title of king of the Romans, which is employed by an Arabic historian, may be excused by the close affinity of language, religion, and manners, between the nations of Spain. His army consisted of ninety or a hundred thousand men, a formidable power, if their fidelity and discipline had been adequate to their numbers. The troops of Tarik had been augmented to twelve thousand Saracens, but the christian malcontents were attracted by the influence of Julian, and a crowd of Africans most greedily tasted the temporal blessings of the Koran. In the neighbourhood of Cadiz, the town of Xeres<sup>o</sup> has been and victory,
July 19—26<sup>p</sup> illustrated by the encounter which determined the fate of the kingdom, the stream of the Gaudalete, which falls into the bay, divided the two camps, and marked the advancing and retreating skirmishes of three successive and bloody days. On the fourth day, the two armies joined a more serious and decisive issue but Alaric would have blushed at the sight of his unworthy successor, sustaining on his head a diadem of pearls, encumbered with a flowing robe of gold and silken embroidery, and reclining on a litter or ear of ivory drawn by two white mules. Notwithstanding the valour of the Saracens, they fainted under the weight of multitudes, and the plain of Xeres was overspread with sixteen thousand of their dead bodies. "My brethren," said Tarik to his surviving companions, "the enemy is before you, the sea is behind, whither would ye fly? Follow your general. I am resolved either to lose my life, or to trample on the prostrate king of the Romans." Besides the resource of despair, he confided in the secret correspondence and nocturnal interviews of Count Julian with the sons and the brother of Witiza. The two princes and the archbishop of Toledo occupied the most important post. Their well-timed defection broke the ranks of the christians, each warrior was prompted by fear of suspicion to consult his personal safety, and the remains of the Gothic army were scattered or destroyed in the flight and pursuit of the three following days. Amidst the general disorder, Roderic started from his car, and mounted Orclia, the fleetest of his horses, but he escaped from a soldier's death to perish more ignobly in the waters of the Boetis or Guadalquivir. His diadem, his robes, and his coursers, were found on the bank, but as the body of the Gothic prince was lost in the waves, the pride and ignorance of the caliph must have been gratified with some meaner head, which was exposed in triumph before the palace of Damascus. "And such," continues a valiant historian of the Arabs, "is the fate of those kings who withdraw themselves from a field of battle."<sup>r</sup>

Count Julian had plunged so deep into guilt and infamy, that his only Ruin of the Gothic monarchy,
A.D. 711
hope was in the ruin of his country.

After the battle of Xeres he recommended the most effectual measures to the victorious Saracen. "The king of the Goths is slain, their princes are fled before you, the army is routed, the nation is astonished. Secure with sufficient detachments the cities of Bætica, but in person, and without delay, march to the royal city of Toledo, and allow not the Mariana and the crowd of Spanish historians, to place the first invasion in the year 713 and the battle of Xeres in November 714. This chronism of three years has been detected by the more correct industry of modern chronologists above all, of Pagi (Critica, tom. iii. p. 169. 171—174) who have restored the genuine date of the revolution. At the present time an Arabian scholar like Cardonne who adopts the ancient error, (tom. i. p. 75) is inexcessably ignorant or careless.

<sup>1</sup> The æra of Cæsar which in Spain was in legal and popular use till the fourteenth century, begins thirty eight years before the birth of Christ. I would refer the origin to the general peace by sea and land, which confirmed the power and partition of the triumvirs (Dion. Cassius, l. xlviii. p. 547. 553. Appian de Bell. Civil. l. v. p. 1074. edit. fol.) Spain was a province of Cæsar Octavian, and Tarragona which ruined the first temple to Augustus (Tacit. Annal. i. 78) might borrow from the orientals this mode of flattery.

<sup>m</sup> The road, the country, the old castle of Count Julian and the superstitious belief of the Spaniards of hidden treasures &c. are described by Père Jabat, (Voyages en Espagne et en Italie, tom. i. p. 207—217) with his usual pleasantry.

<sup>n</sup> The Nabrian Geographer, (p. 154) explains the topography of the war but it is highly incredible that the lieutenant of Musa should execute the desperate and useless measure of burning his ships.

<sup>o</sup> Xeres (the Roman colony of Asta Regia) is only two leagues from Cadiz. In the sixteenth century it was a granary of corn and the wine of Xeres is familiar to the nations of Europe (Ind. Nonii Hispania, c. 13. p. 54—56 a work of correct and concise knowledge, D'Anville. Etats de l'Europe, &c. p. 154).

<sup>p</sup> Id. same infortunium, &c. ibis pedem ex acie referentibus saepe cor tingit. Ben Hazil of Grenada, in Biblioth. Arabico Hispana tom. ii. p. 327. Some credulous Spaniards believe that king Roderic, or Roderigo, escaped to a hermit's cell, and others, that he was cast alive into a tub full of serpents from whence he exclaimed with a lamentable voice "they devour the part with which I have so grievously sinned" (Don Quixote, part ii. l. iii. c. 1).

distracted christians either time or tranquillity for the election of a new monarch" Tarik listened to his advice. A Roman captive and proselyte, who had been enfranchised by the caliph himself, assaulted Cordova with seven hundred horse. He swam the river, surprised the town, and drove the christians into the great church, where they defended themselves above three months. Another detachment reduced the sea-coast of Bœtica, which in the last period of the Moorish power has comprised in a narrow space the populous kingdom of Grenada. The march of Tarik from the Bœtis to the Tagus,<sup>a</sup> was directed through the Sierra Morena, that separates Andalusia and Castile, till he appeared in arms under the walls of Toledo. The most zealous of the catholics had escaped with the relics of their saints; and if the gates were shut, it was only till the victor had subscribed a fair and reasonable capitulation. The voluntary exiles were allowed to depart with their effects, seven churches were appropriated to the christian worship, the archbishop and his clergy were at liberty to exercise their functions, the monks to practise or neglect their penance, and the Goths and Romans were left in all civil and criminal cases to the subordinate jurisdiction of their own laws and magistrates. But if the justice of Tarik protected the christians, his gratitude and policy rewarded the Jews, to whose secret or open aid he was indebted for his most important acquisitions. Persecuted by the kings and synods of Spain, who had often pressed the alternative of banishment or baptism, that outcast nation embraced the moment of revenge. The comparison of their past and present state was the pledge of their fidelity, and the alliance between the disciples of Moses and of Mahomet, was maintained till the final era of their common expulsion. From the royal seat of Toledo, the Arabian leader spread his conquests to the north, over the modern realms of Castile and Leon, but it is needless to enumerate the cities that yielded on his approach, or again to describe the table of emerald,* transported from the east by the Romans, acquired by the Goths among the spoils of Rome, and presented by the Arabs to the throne of Damascus. Beyond the Asturian mountains, the maritime town of Gijon was the term of the lieutenant of Musa, who had performed, with the speed of a traveller, his victorious march, of seven hundred miles, from the rock of Gibraltar to the Bay of Biscay. The failure of land compelled him to retreat, and he was recalled to Toledo, to excuse his presumption of subduing a kingdom in the absence of his general. Spain, which, in a more savage and disorderly state, had resisted, two hundred years, the arms of the Romans, was overrun in a few months by those of the Saracens, and such was the eagerness of submission and treaty, that the governor of Cordova is recorded as the only chief who fell, without conditions, a prisoner into their hands. The cause of the Goths had been irrevocably judged in the field of Xeres, and, in the national dismay, each part of the monarchy declined a contest with the antagonist who had vanquished the united strength of the whole. That strength had been wasted by two successive seasons of famine and pestilence, and the governors, who were impatient to surrender, might exaggerate the difficulty of collecting the provisions of a siege. To disarm the christians, superstition likewise contributed her terrors, and the subtle Arab encouraged the report of dreams, omens, and prophecies, and of the portraits of the destined conquerors of Spain, that were discovered on breaking open an apartment of the royal palace. Yet a spark of the vital flame was still alive. Some invincible fugitives preferred a life of poverty and freedom in the Asturian valleys, the hardy mountaineer repulsed the slaves of the caliph, and the sword of Pelagius has been transformed into the sceptre of the catholic kings.<sup>z</sup>

On the intelligence of this rapid success, the applause of Musa degenerated into envy, and he began, not to complain, but to fear, that Tarik would leave him nothing to subdue. At the head of ten thousand Arabs and eight thousand Africans, he passed over in person from Mauritania to Spain. The first of his companions were the noblest of the Koreish: his eldest son was left in the command of Africa, the three younger brethren were of an age and spirit to second the boldest enterprises of their father. At his landing in Algiers, he was respectfully entertained by count Julian, who stifled his inward remorse, and testified, both in words and actions, that the victory of the Arabs had not impaired his attachment to their cause. Some enemies yet remained for the sword of Musa. The tardy repentance of the Goths had compared their own numbers and those of the invaders, the cities from which the march of Tarik had declined, considered themselves as impregnable, and the bravest patriots defended the fortifications of Seville and Merida. They were

<sup>a</sup> The direct road from Corduba to Toledo was measured by Mr. Swinburne's miles in 721 hours, but a larger computation must be adopted for the slow and devious marches of an army. The Arabs traversed the province of La Mancha, which the pen of Cervantes has transformed into classic ground to the reader of every nation.

<sup>z</sup> The antiquities of Toledo, Urbs Parva in the Punic wars, Urbs Regia in the sixth century, are briefly described by Nourus (Mispamis, c. 59 p. 181-186). He borrows from Roderic the fatate palatium of Moorish portraits, but modestly insinuates that it was no more than a Roman amphitheatre.

<sup>z</sup> In the Historia Arabum (c. 9 p. 17 ad calcem Elmælo) Roderic of Toledo describes the emerald tables, and inserts the name of Medinat Almeyda, in Arabic words and letters. He appears to be conversant with the Mahometan writers, but I cannot agree with M. de Ginkens (Hist. des Huns, tom. 1. p. 350) that he had read and transcribed Novairi because he was dead a hundred years before Novairi composed his history. This mistake is founded on a still grosser error. M. de Ginkens confounds the historian Roderic Ximenes, archbishop of Toledo in the thirteenth century with cardinal Ximenes who governed Spain in the beginning of the sixteenth, and was the subject, not the author, of historical compositions.

<sup>z</sup> Tarik might have inscribed on the last rock, the boast of Regnard and his companions in their Lapland journey, "The tandem vicimus, nullus tibi desuit orbis."

<sup>z</sup> Such was the argument of the traitor Oppas, and every chief to whom it was addressed did not answer with the spirit of Pelagius. Omnia Hispania dadium sub uno regimine Gollhorum, omnia exercitus Hispania in uno congregatus immelliarum non vult sustinere impetum. Chron. Alphonsi Regis, apud Pagi, tom. iii. p. 177.

<sup>z</sup> The revival of the Gothic kingdom in the Asturias is distinctly though concisely noticed by D. Anville (Etlas de l'Europe, p. 150.)

successively besieged and reduced by the labour of Musa, who transported his camp from the Boëtis to the Anas, from the Guadalquivir to the Guadiana. When he beheld the works of Roman magnificence, the bridge, the aqueducts, the triumphal arches, and the theatre, of the ancient metropolis of Lusitania, "I should imagine," said he to his four companions, "that the human race must have united their art and power in the foundation of this city: happy is the man who shall become its master!" He aspired to that happiness, but the Emeritans sustained on this occasion the honour of their descent from the veteran legionaries of Augustus.<sup>7</sup> Disdaining the confinement of their walls, they gave battle to the Arabs on the plain, but an ambuscade rising from the shelter of a quarry, or a ruin, chastised their indiscretion, and intercepted their return. The wooden turrets of assault were rolled forwards to the foot of the rampart, but the defence of Mérida was obstinate and long, and the castle of the martyrs was a perpetual testimony of the losses of the Moslems. The constancy of the besieged was at length subdued by famine and despair, and the prudent victor disguised his impatience under the names of clemency and esteem. The alternative of exile or tribute was allowed, the churches were divided between the two religions, and the wealth of those who had fallen in the siege, or retired to Galicia, was confiscated as the reward of the faithful. In the midway between Mérida and Toledo, the lieutenant of Musa saluted the viceroy of the caliph, and conducted him to the palace of the Gothic kings. Their first interview was cold and formal: a rigid account was exacted of the treasures of Spain: the character of Tarik was exposed to suspicion and obloquy, and the hero was imprisoned, reviled, and ignominiously scourged by the hand, or the command, of Musa. Yet so strict was the discipline, so pure the zeal, or so tame the spirit, of the primitive Moslems, that, after this public indignity, Tarik could serve and be trusted in the reduction of the Tarragonese province. A mosque was erected at Saragossa, by the liberality of the Koreish: the port of Barcelona was opened to the vessels of Syria, and the Goths were pursued beyond the Pyrenean mountains into their Gallic province of Septimania or Languedoc.<sup>8</sup> In the church of St. Mary at Carcassonne, Musa found, but it is improbable that he left, seven equestrian statues of massy silver, and from his tem or column of Narbonne, he returned on his footsteps to the Gallician and Lusitanian shores of the ocean. During the absence of the father, his son Abdelaziz chastised the insurgents of Seville, and reduced, from Málaga to Valentia, the sea-coast of the Mediterranean: his original treaty with the discreet and valiant Theodemir<sup>a</sup> will represent the manners and policy of the times. "The conditions of peace agreed and sworn between Abdelaziz, the son of Musa, the son of Nasir, and Theodemir prince of the Goths." In the name of the most merciful God, Abdelaziz makes peace on these conditions: that Theodemir shall not be disturbed in his principality, nor any injury be offered to the life or property, the wives and children, the religion and temples, of the christians: that Theodemir shall freely deliver his seven cities, Orihuela, Valentia, Alicante, Mola, Vacasora, Bigerra, (now Bejar,) Ora, (or Opta,) and Lorca: that he shall not assist or entertain the enemies of the caliph, but shall faithfully communicate his knowledge of their hostile designs: that himself, and each of the Gothic nobles, shall annually pay one piece of gold, four measures of wheat, as many of barley, with a certain proportion of honey, oil, and vinegar, and that each of their vassals shall be taxed at one moiety of the said imposition. Given the fourth of Regeb, in the year of the Hegira ninety-four, and subscribed with the names of four mussulman witnesses."<sup>b</sup> Theodemir and his subjects were treated with uncommon lenity, but the rate of tribute appears to have fluctuated from a tenth to a fifth, according to the submission or obstinacy of the christians.<sup>c</sup> In this revolution, many partial calamities were inflicted by the carnal or religious passions of the enthusiasts; some churches were profaned by the new worship: some relics or images were confounded with idols: the rebels were put to the sword, and one town (an obscure place between Cordova and Seville) was razed to its foundations. Yet if we compare the invasion of Spain by the Goths, or its recovery by the kings of Castile and Arragon, we must applaud the moderation and discipline of the Arabian conquerors.

The exploits of Musa were performed in the evening of life, though he affected to disguise his age by colouring with a red powder the whiteness of his beard. But in the love of action and glory, his breast was still fired with the ardour of youth, and the possession of Spain was considered only as the first step to the

from Murcia to Orihuela, four leagues and a half of the finest corn, pulse, lucern, oranges, &c.

<sup>b</sup> See the treaty in Arabic and Latin in the Bibliotheca Arabica Hispana, tom. ii. p. 105, 106. It is signed the 4th of the month of Regeb, A. H. 94 the 5th of April A. D. 713 a date which seems to prolong the resistance of Theodemir, and the government of Musa.

<sup>c</sup> From the history of Sandoval p. 87. Fleury (Hist. Eccles. tom. ix. p. 251) has given the substance of another treaty concluded A. D. 782 A. D. 734 between an Arabian chief and the Goths and Romans of the territory of Coimbra in Portugal. The tax of the churches is fixed at twenty five pounds of gold of the monasteries, fifty of the cathedrals, one hundred the christians are judged by their count, but in capital cases he must consult the alcaide. The church doors must be shut and they must respect the name of Mahomet. I have not the original before me: it would confirm or destroy a dark suspicion that the piece has been forged to introduce the immunity of a neighbouring convent.

<sup>7</sup> The honourable relics of the Cantabrian war (Dion Cassius l. liii. p. 720) were plundered in this metropolis of Lusitania perhaps of Spain (submittit enim tota viros Hispani fides) Nonius (Hispania c. 31 p. 106—113) enumerates the ancient structures: but concludes with a sub Urbs hrec olim nobilissimam ad magnam incolarum infrequentiam de lapsa est, et præter præcæ claritatis rursus nihil ostendit.

<sup>8</sup> Both the interpreters of Novari De Guignes (Hist. des Huns tom. i. p. 319) and Cardonne (Hist. de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne, tom. i. p. 93, 94, 104, 105) lead Musa into the Narbonne Gail. But I find no mention of this enterprise either in Roderic of Toledo or the MSS. of the Escorial, and the invasion of the Saracens is postponed by a French chronicle till the ninth year after the conquest of Spain, A. D. 721 (Pa., i. Critic. tom. iii. p. 177, 195. Historians of France tom. iii.) I much question whether Musa ever passed the Pyrenees.

<sup>a</sup> Four hundred years after Theodemir his territories of Murcia and Carthagen remain in the Nubian geographer Edrisi (p. 151, 161) the name of Tadmir (D'Anville, Etats de l'Europe p. 156 Pa., i. tom. iii. p. 174.) In the present decay of Spanish agriculture Mr. Swinburne (Travels into Spain, p. 119) surveyed with pleasure the delicious valley

monarchy of Europe With a powerful armament by sea and land, he was preparing to repass the Pyrenees, to extinguish in Gaul and Italy the declining kingdoms of the Franks and Lombards, and to preach the unity of God on the altar of the Vatican From thence, subduing the barbarians of Germany, he proposed to follow the course of the Danube from its source to the Euxine sea, to overthrow the Greek or Roman empire of Constantinople, and returning from Europe to Asia, to unite his new acquisitions with Antioch and the provinces of Syria<sup>d</sup> But his vast enterprise, perhaps of easy execution, must have seemed extravagant to vulgar minds, and the visionary conqueror was soon reminded of his dependence and servitude The friends of Tarik had effectually stated his services and wrongs at the court of Damascus, the proceedings of Musa were blamed, his intentions were suspected, and his delay in complying with the first invitation was chastised by a harsher and more peremptory summons An intrepid messenger of the caliph entered his camp at Lugo in Galicia, and in the presence of the Saracens and christians arrested the bridle of his horse His own loyalty, or that of his troops, inculcated the duty of obedience, and his disgrace was alleviated by the recall of his rival, and the permission of investing with his two governments his two sons, Abdallah and Abdelaziz His long triumph, from Ceuta to Damascus, displayed the spoils of Africa and the treasures of Spain four hundred Gothic nobles, with gold coronets and girdles, were distinguished in his train, and the number of male and female captives, selected for their birth or beauty, was computed at eighteen, or even at thirty, thousand persons As soon as he reached Tiberias in Palestine, he was apprised of the sickness and danger of the caliph, by a private message from Soliman, his brother and presumptive heir, who wished to reserve for his own reign the spectacle of victory Had Walid recovered, the delay of Musa would have been criminal he pursued his march, and found an enemy on the throne In his trial before a partial judge, against a popular antagonist, he was convicted of vanity and falsehood, and a fine of two hundred thousand pieces of gold either exhausted his poverty or proved his rapaciousness The unworthy treatment of Tarik was revenged by a similar indignity, and the veteran commander, after a public whipping, stood a whole day in the sun before the palace gate, till he obtained a decent exile, under the pious name of a pilgrimage to Mecca The resentment of the caliph might have been satiated with the ruin of Musa, but his fears demanded the extirpation of a potent and injured family A sentence of death was intimated with secrecy and speed to the trusty servants of the

<sup>d</sup> This design, which is alluded to several Arabian historians, (Cardonne, tom 1 p 95, 96) may be compared with that of Mithridates to march from the Crimea to Rome or with that of Cesar, to conquer the east and return home by the north, and all three are perhaps surpassed by the real and successful enterprise of Hannibal

<sup>e</sup> I much regret our loss, or my ignorance, of two Arabic works of

throne both in Africa and Spain, and the forms, if not the substance, of justice were superseded in this bloody execution In the mosque or palace of Cordova, Abdelaziz was slain by the swords of the conspirators, they accused their governor of claiming the honours of royalty, and his scandalous marriage with Egilona, the widow of Rodone, offended the prejudices both of the christians and Moslems By a refinement of cruelty, the head of the son was presented to the father, with an insulting question, whether he acknowledged the features of the rebel? "I know his features," he exclaimed with indignation "I assert his innocence, and I imprecate the same, a juster, fate against the authors of his death" The age and despair of Musa raised him above the power of kings, and he expired at Mecca of the anguish of a broken heart His rival was more favourably treated his services were forgiven, and Tarik was permitted to mingle with the crowd of slaves<sup>e</sup> I am ignorant whether count Julian was rewarded with the death which he deserved indeed, though not from the hands of the Saracens, but the tale of their ingratitude to the sons of Witiza is disproved by the most unquestionable evidence The two royal youths were reinstated in the private patrimony of their father, but on the decease of Eba, the elder, his daughter was unjustly despoiled of her portion by the violence of her uncle Sigebut The Gothic maid pleaded her cause before the caliph Hashem, and obtained the restitution of her inheritance, but she was given in marriage to a noble Arabian, and their two sons, Isaac and Ibrahim, were received in Spain with the consideration that was due to their origin and riches

A province is assimilated to the victorious state by the introduction of Prosperity of Spain under the strangers and the imitative spirit of Arabs
the natives, and Spain, which had been successively tinctured with Punic, and Roman, and Gothic blood, imbibed, in a few generations, the name and manners of the Arabs The first conquerors, and the twenty successive lieutenants of the caliphs, were attended by a numerous train of civil and military followers, who preferred a distant fortune to a narrow home the private and public interest was promoted by the establishment of faithful colonies, and the cities of Spain were proud to commemorate the tribe or country of their eastern progenitors The victorious though motley bands of Tarik and Musa asserted, by the name of Spaniards, their original claim of conquest, yet they allowed their brethren of Egypt to share their establishments of Murcia and Lisbon The royal legion of Damascus was planted at Cordova, that of Emesa at Seville, that of Kinnisim or Chalcis at Jaen, that of Palestine at Algezire and Medina Sidonia The

the eighth century, 1 Life of Musa, and a Poem on the Exploits of Tarik Of these authentic pieces, the former was composed by a grandson of Musa, who had escaped from the massacre of his kindred, the latter, by the vizir of the first Abdalrahman caliph of Spain, who might have conversed with some of the veterans of the conqueror (Biblioth. Arabico-Hispana, tom 11 p 36 139)

natives of Yemen and Persia were scattered round Toledo and the inland country, and the fertile seats of Grenada were bestowed on ten thousand horsemen of Syria and Irak, the children of the purest and most noble of the Arabian tribes.<sup>f</sup> A spirit of emulation, sometimes beneficial, more frequently dangerous, was nourished by these hereditary factions. Ten years after the conquest, a map of the province was presented to the caliph: the seas, the rivers, and the harbours, the inhabitants and cities, the climate, the soil, and the mineral productions of the earth.<sup>g</sup> In the space of two centuries, the gifts of nature were improved by the agriculture,<sup>h</sup> the manufactures, and the commerce of an industrious people, and the effects of their diligence have been magnified by the idleness of their fancy. The first of the Omniades who reigned in Spain solicited the support of the Christians, and, in his edict of peace and protection, he contents himself with a modest imposition of ten thousand ounces of gold, ten thousand pounds of silver, ten thousand horses, as many mules, one thousand cuirasses, with an equal number of helmets and lances.<sup>i</sup> The most powerful of his successors derived from the same kingdom the annual tribute of twelve millions and forty-five thousand dinars of pieces of gold, about six millions of sterling money,<sup>k</sup> a sum which, in the tenth century, most probably surpassed the united revenues of the Christian monarchs. His royal seat of Cordova contained six hundred mosques, nine hundred baths, and two hundred thousand houses: he gave laws to eighty cities of the first, to three hundred of the second and third order, and the fertile banks of the Guadalquivir were adorned with twelve thousand villages and hamlets. The Arabs might exaggerate the truth, but they created, and they describe, the most prosperous æra of the riches, the cultivation, and the populousness of Spain.<sup>l</sup>

Religious toleration. The wars of the Moslems were sanctified by the prophet, but, among the various precepts and examples of his life, the caliphs selected the lessons of toleration that might tend to disarm the resistance of the unbelievers.

<sup>f</sup> Biblioth. Arab. Hispan. tom. ii. p. 32. 252. The former of these quotations is taken from a Biographia Hispanica by an Arabian of Valentia, (see the copious Extracts of Casiri tom. ii. p. 30—121) and the latter from a general Chronology of the Caliphs and of the African and Spanish Dynasties with a particular History of the Kingdom of Grenada of which Casiri has given almost an entire version (Biblioth. Arabico-Hispanica tom. ii. p. 177—319). The author Ebn Khateeb, a native of Grenada, and a contemporary of Novairi and Abuldesd, (born A. D. 1313, died A. D. 1374) was an historian, geographer, physician, poet &c. (tom. ii. p. 71, 72).

<sup>g</sup> Cardonne, Hist. de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne, tom. i. p. 116, 117. A copious treatise of husbandry, by an Arabian of Seville in the twelfth century, is in the Escorial library, and Casiri had some thoughts of translating it. He gives a list of the authors quoted Arabs, as well as Greeks, Latins, &c. but it is much if the Andalusian saw these strangers through the medium of his countryman Columella. (Casiri Biblioth. Arabico-Hispanica, tom. i. p. 323—338).

<sup>h</sup> Biblioth. Arabico-Hispanica, tom. ii. p. 104. Casiri translates the original testimony of the historian Rasis, as it is alleged in the Arabic Biographia Hispanica, pars iv. But I am most exceedingly surprised at the address, Principibus cæterisque Christianis Hispanis suis Castellæ. The name of Castellæ was unknown in the eighth century: the kingdom was not erected till the year 1022, a hundred years after the time of Rasis (Biblioth. tom. ii. p. 330) and the appellation was always expressive not of a tributary province, but of a line of castles independent of the Moorish yoke (D'Anville, États de l'Europe, p. 166—170). Had Casiri been a critic he would have cleared a difficulty perhaps of his own making.

Arabia was the temple and patrimony of the God of Mahomet, but he beheld with less jealousy and affection the nations of the earth. The polytheists and idolaters, who were ignorant of his name, might be lawfully extirpated by his votaries,<sup>m</sup> but a wise policy supplied the obligation of justice, and after some acts of intolerant zeal, the Mahometan conquerors of Hindostan have spared the pagods of that devout and populous country. The disciples of Abraham, of Moses, and of Jesus, were solemnly invited to accept the more perfect revelation of Mahomet, but if they preferred the payment of a moderate tribute, they were entitled to the freedom of conscience and religious worship.<sup>n</sup> In a field of battle, the forfeit lives of the prisoners were redeemed by the profession of Islam, the females were bound to embrace the religion of their masters, and a race of sincere proselytes was gradually multiplied by the education of the infant captives. But the millions of Asiatic and African converts, who swelled the native band of the faithful Arabs, must have been allured, rather than constrained, to declare their belief in one God and the apostle of God. By the repetition of a sentence and the loss of a foreskin, the subject or the slave, the captive or the criminal, arose in a moment the free and equal companion of the victorious Moslems. Every sin was expiated, every engagement was dissolved: the vow of celibacy was superseded by the indulgence of nature, the active spirits who slept in the cloister were awakened by the trumpet of the Saracens, and in the convulsion of the world, every member of a new society ascended to the natural level of his capacity and courage. The minds of the multitude were tempted by the invisible as well as temporal blessings of the Arabian prophet, and charity will hope that many of his proselytes entertained a serious conviction of the truth and sanctity of his revelation. In the eyes of an inquisitive polytheist, it must appear worthy of the human and the divine nature. More pure than the system of Zoroaster, more liberal than the law of Moses, the religion of Mahomet might seem less inconsistent with reason, than the creed of mys-

<sup>k</sup> Cardonne tom. i. p. 337. 338. He computes the revenue at 130 000 000 of French livres. The entire picture of peace and prosperity, relieves the bloody uniformity of the Moorish wars.

<sup>l</sup> I am happy enough to possess a splendid and interesting work, which has only been distributed in presents by the court of Madrid. Bibliotheca Arabico-Hispanica Escorialensis, operâ et studio Michaelis Casiri Syro Maronitis Matrili in folio tomus prior, 1760 tomus posterior, 1770. The execution of this work does honour to the Spanish press: the MSS. to the number of MDCCCLII, are judiciously classed by the editor and his copious extracts throw some light on the Mahometan literature and history of Spain. The evidence is now secure, but the task has been supinely delayed till in the year 1671 a fire consumed the greatest part of the Escorial library, rich in the spoils of Grenada and Morocco.

<sup>m</sup> The Harbi as they are styled, qui tolerari nequeunt, are, 1. Those who, besides God worship the sun, moon, or idols. 2. Atheists. Utrique quædam principes aliquis inter Mohammedanos superest, opugnari debent donec religionem amplectantur, nec requies in concedenda est nec preteritum acceptandum pro obtinenda conscientie libertate (Reland Dissertat. de Jure Militari Mohammedano tom. ii. p. 14.) A rigid theory.

<sup>n</sup> The distinction between a proscribed and a tolerated sect, between the Harbi and the People of the Book, the believers in some divine revelation is correctly defined in the conversation of the caliph Al Murtada with the idolaters or Sabæans of Charræ. Hottinger, Hist. Orient. p. 107, 108.

tery and superstition, which, in the seventh century, disgraced the simplicity of the gospel

Fall of the Magians of Persia

In the extensive provinces of Persia and Africa, the national religion has been eradicated by the Mahometan faith. The ambiguous theology of the Magi stood alone among the sects of the east but the profane writings of Zoroaster might, under the reverend name of Abraham, be dextrously connected with the chain of divine revelation. Their evil principle, the dæmon Ahriman, might be represented as the rival, or as the creature, of the God of light. The temples of Persia were devoid of images, but the worship of the sun and of fire might be stigmatized as a gross and criminal idolatry. The milder sentiment was consecrated by the practice of Mahomet and the prudence of the caliphs, the Magians or Ghebers were ranked with the Jews and Christians among the people of the written law, and as late as the third century of the Hegira, the city of Herat will afford a lively contrast of private zeal and public toleration. Under the payment of an annual tribute, the Mahometan law secured to the Ghebers of Herat their civil and religious liberties but the recent and humble mosch was overshadowed by the antique splendour of the adjoining temple of fire. A fanatic Imam deplored, in his sermons, the scandalous neighbourhood, and accused the weakness or indifference of the faithful. Excited by his voice, the people assembled in tumult, the two houses of prayer were consumed by the flames, but the vacant ground was immediately occupied by the foundations of a new mosch. The injured Magi appealed to the sovereign of Chorasan, he promised justice and relief, when, behold! four thousand citizens of Herat, of a grave character and mature age, unanimously swore that the idolatrous fane had never existed, the inquisition was silenced, and their conscience was satisfied (says the historian Mirchond) with this holy and mentorious perjury. But the greatest part of the temples of Persia were ruined by the insensible and general desertion of their votaries. It was insensible, since it is not accompanied with any memorial of time or place, of persecution or resistance. It was general, since the whole realm, from Shiraz to Samarcand, imbibed the faith of the Koran, and the preservation of the native tongue reveals the descent of the Mahometans of Persia. In the mountains and deserts, an obstinate race of unbelievers adhered to the superstition of their fathers, and a faint tradition of the Magian theology is kept alive in the province of Kirman, along the banks of the Indus, among the exiles of Surat, and in the colony which, in the last century, was planted by Shaw Abbas at the gates of Ispahan. The chief pontiff has retired to Mount Elbourz, eighteen leagues from the city of Yezd the perpetual fire (if it continue to burn) is inaccessible to the profane, but his residence is the school, the oracle, and the pilgrimage, of the Ghebers, whose hard and uniform features attest the unmingled purity of their blood. Under the jurisdiction of their elders, eighty thousand families maintain an innocent and industrious life, their subsistence is derived from some curious manufactures and mechanic trades, and they cultivate the earth with the fervour of a religious duty. Their ignorance withstood the despotism of Shaw Abbas, who demanded with threats and tortures the prophetic books of Zoroaster, and this obscure remnant of the Magians is spared by the moderation or contempt of their present sovereigns.

The northern coast of Africa is the only land in which the light of the gospel, after a long and perfect establishment, has been totally extinguished. The arts, which had been taught by Carthage and Rome, were involved in a cloud of ignorance, the doctrine of Cyprian and Augustin was no longer studied. Five hundred episcopal churches were overturned by the hostile fury of the Donatists, the Vandals, and the Moors. The zeal and numbers of the clergy declined, and the people, without discipline, or knowledge, or hope, submissively sunk under the

Decline and fall of christianity in Africa

* The Zend or Pazend, the bible of the Ghebers, is reckoned by themselves, or at least by the Mahometans, among the ten books which Abraham received from heaven, and their religion is honourably styled the religion of Abraham (D Herbelot, Bibliot Orient, p 701 Hyde, de Religionem veterum Persarum, c iii p 27, 28 &c.) I much fear that we do not possess any pure and free description of the system of Zoroaster. Dr Prideaux (Connexion, vol i p 300 octavo) adopts the opinion, that he had been the slave and scholar of some Jewish prophet in the captivity of Babylon. Perhaps the Persians, who have been the murderers of the Jews, would assert the honour, a poor honour, of being their masters.

† The Arabian Nights a faithful and amusing picture of the oriental world represent in the most odious colours the Magians, or worshipers of fire, to whom they attribute the annual sacrifice of a human man. The religion of Zoroaster has not the least affinity with that of the Hindoos yet they are often confounded by the Mahometans, and the sword of Timour was sharpened by this mistake (Hist de Timour Bec, par Cherefeddin Ali Yezdi, l v).

‡ Hæc tres sectæ Jædæ, Christiani et qui inter Persas Magorum in stituti additi sunt, hæc εξοχή, populi liberi, dicuntur (Reland, Dissertat tom ii p 15.) The caliph Al Manin confirms this honourable distinction in favour of the three sects with the vague and equivocal religion of the Sabæans, under which the ancient polytheists of Chyræ were allowed to shelter their idolatrous worship (Hottinger, Hist Orient p 167, 168).

§ This singular story is related by D Herbelot (Bibliot Orient p 148 449) on the faith of Khondemir, and by Mirchond himself (Hist principum Persarum &c p 9, 10 not p 86, 89).

¶ Mirchond, (Mohammed Emir Khoondah Shih) a native of Herat composed in the Persian language a general history of the east from the creation to the year of the Hegira, 876 (A D 1471) In the year

904 (A D 1498) the historian obtained the command of a princely library, and his applauded work, in seven or twelve parts, was abridged in three volumes by his son Khondemir, A H 927 A D 1520. The two writers, most accurately distinguished by Petit de la Croix, (Hist de Genghizcan, p 537, 538 544, 545) are loosely confounded by D Herbelot (p 358 410 994, 995) but his numerous extracts, under the improper name of Khondemir, belong to the father rather than the son. The historian of Genghizcan refers to a MS of Mirchond, which he received from the hands of his friend D'Herbelot himself. A curious fragment (the Taherian and Saffarian Dynasties) has been lately published in Persian and Latin (Vienna, 1782, in 4to, cum notis Bernard de Jussieu,) and the editor allows us to hope for a continuation of Mirchond.

¶ Quo testimonio boni se quidpiam præstare opinabantur. Yet Mirchond must have condemned their zeal, since he approved the legal toleration of the Magi, cum (the fire temple) periret singulis annis censu, uti sacra Mohammedis lege cautum, ab omnibus molestis ac oneribus libero esset henti.

‡ The last Magian of name and power appears to be Mardavide the Dilemite, who, in the beginning of the tenth century, reigned in the northern provinces of Persia, near the Caspian sea (D Herbelot, Bibliot Orient p 335.) But his soldiers and successors, the Boirades, either professed or embraced the Mahometan faith, and under their dynasty (A D 973—1020) I should place the fall of the religion of Zoroaster.

§ The present state of the Ghebers in Persia is taken from Sir John Chardin, not indeed the most learned, but the most judicious and inquisitive, of our modern travellers (Voyages en Perse, tom ii p 109 170—187 in 4to.) His brethren, Pietro de la Valle, Olearius, Tavernier, &c whom I have fruitlessly searched, had neither eyes nor attention for this interesting people.

yoke of the Arabian prophet Within fifty years

after the expulsion of the Greeks,
A D 749 a lieutenant of Africa informed the caliph that the tribute of the infidels was abolished by their conversion,<sup>a</sup> and, though he sought to disguise his fraud and rebellion, his specious pretence was drawn from the rapid and extensive progress of the Mahometan faith In the next

A D 837 age, an extraordinary mission of five bishops was detached from Alexandria to Carthage. They were ordained by the Jacobite patriarch to cherish and revive the dying embers of christianity, but the interposition of a foreign prelate, a stranger to the Latins, an enemy to the catholics, supposes the decay and dissolution of the African hierarchy. It was no longer the time when the successor of St Cyprian, at the head of a numerous synod, could maintain an equal contest with the ambition of the Roman pontiff In the eleventh century, the unfortunate priest who was seated on the ruins of Carthage, implored the alms and the protection of the Vatican, and he bitterly complains that his naked body had been scourged by the Saracens, and that his authority was disputed by the four suffragans, the tottering pillars of his throne Two epistles of Gregory the seventh<sup>b</sup> are destined to soothe the distress of the catholics and the pride of a Moorish prince The pope assures the sultan that they both worship the same God, and may hope to meet in the bosom of Abraham, but the complaint, that three bishops could no longer be found to consecrate a brother, announces the speedy and inevitable ruin of the episcopal order The christians of Africa and and Spain,

A D 1149, &c Spain had long since submitted to the practice of circumcision and the legal abstinence from wine and pork, and the name of Mozarabes, (adoptive Arabs) was applied to their civil or religious conformity<sup>d</sup> About the middle of the twelfth century the worship of Christ and the succession of pastors were abolished along the coast of Barbary, and in the kingdoms of Cordova and Seville, of Valencia and Grenada<sup>e</sup> The throne of the Almohades, or Unitarians, was founded on the blindest fanaticism, and then extraordinary rigour might be

<sup>a</sup> The letter of Abdoulrahman governor or tyrant of Africa to the caliph Aboul Abbas the first of the Abbassides, is dated A H 132. (Cardonne Hist de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne tom 1 p 168)

<sup>b</sup> Bibliothque Orientale, p 66 Renaudot, Hist Patriarch Alex p 287, 288

<sup>c</sup> Among the Epistles of the Popes, see Leo IX. epist 3 Gregor VII. i. epist 22 23 1 in epist 10, 20, 21 and the criticisms of Pagi (tom 1 v A D 1053, No 14 A D 1073, No 13) who investigates the name and family of the Moorish prince, with whom the proudest of the Roman pontiffs so politely corresponds

<sup>d</sup> Mozarabes, or Mosarabes, adessitu as it is interpreted in Latin (Pocock Specimen Hist Arabinum, p 39, 40 Biblioth Arabico Hispanica tom 11 p 18) The Mozarabic liturgy, the ancient ritual of the church of Toledo has been attacked by the popes and exposed to the doubt ful trials of the sword and of fire (Marian Hist Hispanica tom 1 v c 18 p 378) It was, or rather it is, in the Latin tongue, yet in the eleventh century it was found necessary (A D 1067 A D 1039) to transcribe an Arabic version of the canons of the councils of Spain (Biblioth Arab Hist tom 1 p 547) for the use of the bishops and clergy in the Moorish kingdoms

<sup>e</sup> About the middle of the tenth century, the clergy of Cordova was reproached with this criminal compliance by the mild and envoy of the emperor Otto I (Vit Johan Gorz, in Scul Benedict V No 115 apud Fleury Hist Eccles tom xii p 91)

<sup>f</sup> Pagi Critica, tom 1 v A D 1149 No 8, 9 He justly observes that when Seville, &c were retaken by Ferdinand of Castile, no christians, except captives, were found in the place, and that the provoked or justified by the recent victories and intolerant zeal of the princes of Sicily and Castile, of Arragon and Portugal The faith of the Mozarabes was occasionally revived by the

A D 1535 papal missionaries, and, on the landing of Charles the fifth, some families of Latin christians were encouraged to rear their heads at Tunis and Algiers But the seed of the gospel was quickly eradicated, and the long province from Tripoli to the Atlantic has lost all memory of the language and religion of Rome<sup>f</sup>

After the revolution of eleven centuries, the Jews and christians of the Toleration of the christians
Turkish empire enjoy the liberty of conscience which was granted by the Arabian caliphs During the first age of the conquest, they suspected the loyalty of the catholics, whose name of Melchites betrayed their secret attachment to the Greek emperor, while the Nestorians and Jacobites, his inveterate enemies, approved themselves the sincere and voluntary friends of the Mahometan government<sup>g</sup> Yet this partial jealousy was healed by time and submission the churches of Egypt were shared with the catholics,<sup>h</sup> and all the oriental sects were included in the common benefits of toleration The rank, the immunities, the domestic jurisdiction, of the patriarchs, the bishops, and the clergy, were protected by the civil magistrate the learning of individuals recommended them to the employments of secretaries and physicians they were enriched by the lucrative collection of the revenue and their merit was sometimes raised to the command of cities and provinces A caliph of the house of Abbas was heard to declare that the christians were most worthy of trust in the administration of Persia "The Moslems," said he, "will abuse their present fortune, the Magians regret their fallen greatness, and the Jews are impatient for their approaching deliverance"<sup>i</sup> But the slaves of des-
Their hardships
potism are exposed to the alternatives

of favour and disgrace The captive churches of the east have been afflicted in every age by the avarice or bigotry of their rulers, and the ordinary and legal restraints must be offensive to the pride, or the zeal, of the christians<sup>k</sup> About two hundred

Mozarabic churches of Africa and Spain described by James à Vitriaco, A D 1218, (Hist Hierosol c 80 p 1005 in Gest Dei per Francos,) are copied from some older book I shall add, that the date of the Hebra 677 (A D 1278) must apply to the copy not the composition, of a treatise of jurisprudence, which states the civil rights of the christians of Cordova, (Biblioth Arab Hist tom 1 p 471) and that the Jews were the only dissenters whom Abul Waleed, king of Grenada, (A D 1313) could either discountenance or tolerate. (tom 11 p 288)

<sup>h</sup> Renaudot, Hist Patriarch Alex p 288 Leo Africanus would have flattered his Roman masters could he have discovered any latent relics of the christianity of Africa

<sup>g</sup> Abist (said the caliph to the vizir of Bagdad) ut pari loco habens Nestorinos quorum præter Arabes nullus alius rex est, et Græcos quorum reges amovendo Arabibus bello non hesitant, &c See in the Collections of Assemanus (Biblioth Orient tom 1 v p 94-101) the state of the Nestorians under the caliphs That of the Jacobites is more concisely exposed in the Preliminary Dissertation of the second volume of Assemanus

<sup>h</sup> Euliyeh Annal tom 11 p 384 387 388 Renaudot Hist Patriarch Alex p 205, 206 257 332 A taint of the Monothelite heresy might render the first of these Greek patriarchs less loyal to the emperors and less obnoxious to the Arabs

<sup>i</sup> Mohandeh who had reigned from A D 892-902 The Magians still held their name and rank among the religions of the empire (Assemanus Biblioth Orient tom 1 v p 87)

<sup>k</sup> Reland expresses the general restraints of the Mahometan policy

years after Mahomet, they were separated from their fellow-subjects by a turban or girdle of a less honourable colour, instead of horses or mules, they were condemned to ride on asses, in the attitude of women. Their public and private buildings were measured by a diminutive standard, in the streets or the baths it is their duty to give way or bow down before the meanest of the people, and their testimony is rejected, if it may tend to the prejudice of a true believer. The pomp of processions, the sound of bells or of psalmody, is interdicted in their worship: a decent reverence for the national faith is imposed on their sermons and conversations, and the sacrilegious attempt to enter a mosch, or to seduce a mussulman, will not be suffered to escape with impunity. In a time, however, of tranquillity and justice the christians have never been compelled to renounce the gospel, or to embrace the Koran, but the punishment of death is inflicted upon the apostates who have professed and deserted the law of Mahomet. The martyrs of Cordova provoked the sentence of the cadhi, by the public confession of their inconstancy, or their passionate invectives against the person and religion of the prophet.<sup>1</sup>

The empire of
the caliphs,
A D 718

At the end of the first century of the Hegira, the caliphs were the most potent and absolute monarchs of the globe. Their prerogative was not circumscribed, either in right or in fact, by the power of the nobles, the freedom of the commons, the privileges of the church, the votes of a senate, or the memory of a free constitution. The authority of the companions of Mahomet expired with their lives, and the chiefs or emirs of the Arabian tribes left behind, in the desert, the spirit of equality and independence. The regal and sacerdotal characters were united in the successors of Mahomet, and if the Koran was the rule of their actions, they were the supreme judges and interpreters of that divine book. They reigned by the right of conquest over the nations of the east, to whom the name of liberty was unknown, and who were accustomed to applaud in their tyrants the acts of violence and severity that were exercised at their own expense. Under the last of the Ommiades, the Arabian empire extended two hundred days' journey from east to west, from the confines of Tartary and India to the shores of the Atlantic ocean. And if we retrench the sleeve of the robe, as it is styled by their writers, the long and narrow province of Africa, the solid and compact dominion from Fargana to Aden, from Tarsus to Surat, will spread on every side to the measure of four or five months of the march of a caravan.<sup>m</sup> We should vainly seek the indissoluble union and easy and jurisprudence (Disertion tom ii p 16-20). The oppressive edicts of the caliph Moïzwakkel, (A D 847-861) which are still in force are noticed by Eulchius (Annal tom ii p 448) and D Herbelot (Biblioth Orient p 640). A persecution of the caliph Omar II is related, and most probably manifested, by the Greek Theophanes (Chron p 334).

<sup>1</sup> The martyrs of Cordova, (A D 850, &c) are commemorated and justified by St. Eulogius, who at length fell a victim himself. Assailed by the caliph, unflinchingly he scorned their rashness. The moderate Fleury cannot reconcile their conduct with the discipline of antiquity, Ionkfois l'autorité de l'église, &c (Fleury Hist Eccles tom x p 415-522 particularly p 451 508, 509). Their authentic obedience that pervaded the government of Augustus and the Antonines; but the progress of the Mahometan religion diffused over this ample space a general resemblance of manners and opinions. The language and laws of the Koran were studied with equal devotion at Samarcand and Seville: the Moor and the Indian embraced as countrymen and brothers in the pilgrimage of Mecca, and the Arabian language was adopted as the popular idiom in all the provinces to the westward of the Tigris.<sup>n</sup>

CHAP LII

The two sieges of Constantinople by the Arabs—Their invasion of France, and defeat by Charles Martel—Civil war of the Ommiades and Abbassides—Learning of the Arabs—Luxury of the caliphs—Naval enterprises on Crete, Sicily, and Rome—Decay and division of the empire of the caliphs—Defeats and victories of the Greek emperors

The limits of the Arabian conquests

WHEN the Arabs first issued from the desert, they must have been surprised at the ease and rapidity of their own success. But when they advanced in the career of victory to the banks of the Indus and the summit of the Pyrenees, when they had repeatedly tried the edge of their scymitars and the energy of their faith, they might be equally astonished that any nation could resist their invincible arms, that any boundary should confine the dominion of the successor of the prophet. The confidence of soldiers and fanatics may indeed be excused, since the calm historian of the present hour, who strives to follow the rapid course of the Saracens, must study to explain by what means the church and state were saved from this impending, and, as it should seem, from this inevitable, danger. The deserts of Scythia and Sarmatia might be guarded by their extent, their climate, their poverty, and the courage of the northern shepherds, China was remote and inaccessible: but the greatest part of the temperate zone was subject to the Mahometan conquerors, the Greeks were exhausted by the calamities of war and the loss of their fairest provinces, and the barbarians of Europe might justly tremble at the precipitate fall of the Gothic monarchy. In this inquiry I shall unfold the events that rescued our ancestors of Britain, and our neighbours of Gaul, from the civil and religious yoke of the Koran, that protected the majesty of Rome, and delayed the servitude of Constantinople, that invigorated the defence of the acts throw a strong, though transient, light on the Spanish church in the ninth century.

<sup>m</sup> See the article Estamiah (as we say Christendom) in the Bibliothèque Orientale, (p 325). This chart of the Mahometan world is sent by the author, Ibn Alwardi, to the year of the Hegira 385 (A D 995). Since that time, the losses in Spain have been overbalanced by the conquests in India, Tartary, and the European Turkey.

<sup>n</sup> The Arabic of the Koran is Latin, as a dead language in the col- lection of Mecca. By the Danish traveller, this ancient idiom is compared to the Latin: the vulgar tongue of Hejaz and Yemen to the Italian, and the Arabian dialects of Syria, Egypt, Africa &c to the Provençal, Spanish, and Portuguese. (Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p 74, &c.)

christians, and scattered among their enemies the seeds of division and decay

Forty-six years after the flight of Constantinople by the Arabs A. D 668—675 Mahomet from Mecca, his disciples appeared in arms under the walls of Constantinople<sup>a</sup> They were animated by a genuine or fictitious saying of the prophet, that, to the first army which besieged the city of the Cæsars, their sins were forgiven the long series of Roman triumphs would be meritoriously transferred to the conquerors of New Rome, and the wealth of nations was deposited in this well-chosen seat of royalty and commerce No sooner had the caliph Moawiyah suppressed his rivals and established his throne, than he aspired to expiate the guilt of civil blood, by the success and glory of this holy expedition,<sup>b</sup> his preparations by sea and land were adequate to the importance of the object, his standard was intrusted to Sophian, a veteran warrior, but the troops were encouraged by the example and presence of Yezid, the son and presumptive heir of the commander of the faithful The Greeks had little to hope, nor had their enemies any reasons of fear, from the courage and vigilance of the reigning emperor, who disgraced the name of Constantine, and imitated only the inglorious years of his grandfather Herachus Without delay or opposition, the naval forces of the Saracens passed through the unguarded channel of the Hellespont, which even now, under the feeble and disorderly government of the Turks, is maintained as the natural bulwark of the capital<sup>c</sup> The Arabian fleet cast anchor, and the troops were disembarked near the palace of Hebdomon, seven miles from the city During many days, from the dawn of light to the evening, the line of assault was extended from the golden gate to the eastern promontory, and the foremost warriors were impelled by the weight and effort of the succeeding columns But the besiegers had formed an insufficient estimate of the strength and resources of Constantinople The solid and lofty walls were guarded by numbers and discipline the spirit of the Romans was rekindled by the last danger of their religion and empire the fugitives from the conquered provinces more successfully renewed the defence of Damascus and Alexandria, and the Saracens were dismayed by the strange and prodigious effects of artificial fire This firm and effectual resistance diverted their arms to the more easy attempts of plundering the European and Asiatic coasts of the Propontis and, after keeping the sea from the month of April to that of September, on the approach of winter they retreated fourscore miles from the capital, to the isle of Cyzicus, in which they had established their magazine of spoil and provisions So patient was their perseverance, or so languid were their operations, that they repeated in the six following summers the same attack and retreat, with a gradual abatement of hope and vigour, till the mischances of shipwreck and disease, of the sword and of fire, compelled them to relinquish the fruitless enterprise They might bewail the loss, or commemorate the martyrdom, of thirty thousand Moslems, who fell in the siege of Constantinople, and the solemn funeral of Abu Ayub, or Job, excited the curiosity of the christians themselves That venerable Arab, one of the last of the companions of Mahomet, was numbered among the ansars, or auxiliaries, of Medina, who sheltered the head of the flying prophet In his youth he fought, at Beder and Ohud, under the holy standard in his mature age he was the friend and follower of Ali, and the last remnant of his strength and life was consumed in a distant and dangerous war against the enemies of the Koran His memory was revered, but the place of his burial was neglected and unknown, during a period of seven hundred and eighty years, till the conquest of Constantinople by Mahomet the second A seasonable vision (for such are the manufacture of every religion) revealed the holy spot at the foot of the walls and the bottom of the harbour, and the mosch of Ayub has been deservedly chosen for the simple and martial inauguration of the Turkish sultans<sup>d</sup>

The event of the siege revived, both in the east and west, the reputation of the Roman arms, and cast a momentary shade over the glories of the Saracens The Greek ambassador was favourably received at Damascus, in a general council of the emirs or Koreish a peace, or truce, of thirty years was ratified between the two empires, and the stipulation of an annual tribute, fifty horses of a noble breed, fifty slaves, and three thousand pieces of gold, degraded the majesty of the commander of the faithful<sup>e</sup> The aged caliph was desirous of possessing his dominions, and ending his days, in tranquillity and repose while the Moors and Indians trembled at his name, his palace and city of Damascus was insulted by the Mardaites, or Maronites, of Mount Libanus, the firmest

Peace and truce
A. D 677

<sup>a</sup> Theophanes places the seven years of the siege of Constantinople in the year of our christian era 673 (of the Alexandrian 685 Sept 1) and the peace of the Saracens four years afterwards a glaring inconsistency which Pelavius Gnar, and Pagi (Critica tom iv p 63 64) have struggled to remove Of the Arabians the Hegira 52 (A. D 672 January 8) is assigned by Elmacin, the year 48 (A. D 668 Feb 20) by Abulfeda, whose testimony I esteem the most competent and credible

<sup>b</sup> For this first siege of Constantinople see Nicephorus (Breviar p 21 22) Theophanes, (Chronographi p 294) Cedrenus (Compend p 437) Zonaras (Hist tom ii l xii p 89) Linarius, (Hist Saraceni p 56 57) Abulfeda (Annoal Modern p 107 108 vers Reiske,) D Herbelot (Bibliol Orient Constantinah,) Ockley's History of the Saracens, vol ii p 127, 128

<sup>c</sup> The state and defence of the Dardanelles is exposed in the Memoires of the Baron de Tott, (Ann iii p 39—97) who was sent to fortify them

against the Russians. From a principal actor I should have expected more accurate details but he seems to write for the amusement, rather than the instruction, of his reader Perhaps on the approach of the enemy, the minister of Constantine was occupied like that of Murtuphr, in finding two Canary birds, who should sing precisely the same note

<sup>d</sup> Demetrius Cantemir's Hist of the Ottoman Empire, p 105 106 Rycant's State of the Ottoman Empire p 10, 11 Vnyages de Thieve not, part i p 189 The christians who suppose that the martyr Abu Ayub is vulgarly confounded with the patriarch Job, betray their own ignorance rather than that of the Turks

<sup>e</sup> Theophanes though a Greek, deserves credit for these tributes Chronographi p 295 296 300 301 which are confirmed, with some variation by the Arabic History of Abulpharagius (Dynast p 128 vers Pocock.)

Second siege of Constantinople, A D 710-718

Whilst the caliph Walid sat idle on the throne of Damascus, while his lieutenants achieved the conquest of Transoxiana and Spain, a third army of Saracens overspread the provinces of Asia Minor, and approached the borders of the Byzantine capital. But the attempt and disgrace of the second siege was reserved for his brother Soliman, whose ambition appears to have been quickened by a more active and martial spirit. In the revolutions of the Greek empire, after the tyrant Justinia had been punished and avenged, an humble secretary, Anastasius or Artemius, was promoted by chance or merit to the vacant purple. He was

Second siege of Constantinople, A D 710-718

Whilst the caliph Walid sat idle on the throne of Damascus, while his lieutenants achieved the conquest of Transoxiana and Spain, a third army of Saracens overspread the provinces of Asia Minor, and approached the borders of the Byzantine capital. But the attempt and disgrace of the second siege was reserved for his brother Soliman, whose ambition appears to have been quickened by a more active and martial spirit. In the revolutions of the Greek empire, after the tyrant Justinia had been punished and avenged, an humble secretary, Anastasius or Artemius, was promoted by chance or merit to the vacant purple. He was

f The censure of Theophanes is just and pointed, την ῥωμαϊκὴν δυναστείαν ἀφαιρησάσας πᾶσι τοῖς κατὰ πεπονημένῃ τῷ ῥωμανῷ αὐτῷ τῶν Ἀrabian μέχρι τοῦ νῦν (Chronograph p 302, 303) The series of these events may be traced in the Annals of Theophanes, and in the Abridgment of the Patriarch Nicephorus, p 22-24

g These domestic revolutions are related in a clear and natural style, in the second volume of Ockley's History of the Saracens, p 253-370 Besides our printed authors he draws his materials from the Arabic MSS of Oxford, which he would have more deeply searched, had he been confined to the Bodleian library instead of the city jail, a fate how unworthy of the man and of his country!

h Elmeircu, who dates the first coin, A H 70 A D 695 five or six years later than the Greek historians has compared the weight of the best or common gold dinar, to the drachm or dirhem of Egypt (p 77) which may be equal to two pennies (48 gruns) of our Troy weight, (Hooper's Inquiry into Ancient Measures p 24-36) and equivalent to eight shillings of our sterling money From the same Elmeircu and the Arabian physicians some dinars as high as two dirhems as low as half a dirhem may be deduced The piece of silver was the dirhem, both in value and weight, but an old thou, a fair coin struck at Waset, A H 88 and preserved in the Bodleian library, wants four alarmed by the sound of war, and his ambassador returned from Damascus with the tremendous news, that the Saracens were preparing an armament by sea and land, such as would transcend the experience of the past, or the belief of the present, age. The precautions of Anastasius were not unworthy of his station, or of the impending danger. He issued a peremptory mandate, that all persons who were not provided with the means of subsistence for a three years' siege, should evacuate the city: the public granaries and arsenals were abundantly replenished, the walls were restored and strengthened, and the engines for casting stones, or darts, or fire, were stationed along the ramparts, or in the brigantines of war, of which an additional number was hastily constructed. To prevent is safer, as well as more honourable, than to repel an attack, and a design was meditated, above the usual spirit of the Greeks, of burning the naval stores of the enemy, the cypress timber that had been hewn in Mount Libanus, and was piled along the sea-shore of Phoenicia, for the service of the Egyptian fleet. This generous enterprise was defeated by the cowardice or treachery of the troops, who, in the new language of the empire, were styled of the obsequian theme<sup>1</sup>. They murdered their chief, deserted their standard in the isle of Rhodes, dispersed themselves over the adjacent continent, and deserved pardon or reward by investing with the purple a simple officer of the revenue. The name of Theodosius might recommend him to the senate and people, but, after some months, he sunk into a cloister, and resigned, to the firmer hand of Leo the Isaurian, the urgent defence of the capital and empire. The most formidable of the Saracens, Moslemah, the brother of the caliph, was advancing at the head of one hundred and twenty thousand Arabs and Persians, the greater part mounted on horses or camels, and the successful sieges of Tyana, Amorium, and Pergamus, were of sufficient duration to exercise their skill and to elevate their hopes. At the well-known passage of Abydus, on the Hellespont, the Mahometan arms were transported, for the first time, from Asia to Europe. From thence, wheeling round the Thracian cities of the Propontis, Moslemah invested Constantinople on the land side, surrounded his camp with a ditch and rampart, prepared and planted his en-

grains of the Cairo standard (See the Modern Univ History, tom 1 p 54k of the French translation)

1) Και εκάλωσαν γραφεσθαι ελληνται τους δημοσιους των λογοθεσιων
 κωδικας, αλλα Αραβιοις αυτα παρασημαινεσθαι χωρις των ψηφων, εκεινη αδυνατον τησ εκεινων γλωσσης μοναδα, η δυαδα, η τριαδα, η ρκτω ημιση η τρια γραφεσθαι Theophili Chronograph p 311 This defect, if it really existed, must have stimulated the ingenuity of the Arabs to invent or borrow

k According to a new, though probable, notion, maintained by M de Villorion, (Aneodoa Greer, tom ii p 152-157) our exphers are not of Indian or Arabic invention They were used by the Greek and Latin arithmeticians long before the age of Boethius After the extinction of science in the west, they were adopted by the Arabic savans from the original MSS and restored to the Latins about the eleventh century.

1 In the division of the themas, or provinces described by Constantine Porphyrogenitus (de Themathibus I : p. 9, 10) the obscurum, or Latin appellation of the army and palace was the fourth in the public order. Nice was the metropolis, and its jurisdiction extended from the Hellespont over the adjacent parts of Bithynia and Phrygia (See the two maps prefixed by Delisle to the Imperium Orientale of Banduri.)

gines of assault, and declared, by words and actions, a patient resolution of expecting the return of seed-time and harvest, should the obstinacy of the besieged prove equal to his own. The Greeks would gladly have ransomed their religion and empire, by a fine or assessment of a piece of gold on the head of each inhabitant of the city, but the liberal offer was rejected with disdain, and the presumption of Moslemah was exalted by the speedy approach and invincible force of the navies of Egypt and Syria. They are said to have amounted to eighteen hundred ships: the number betrays their inconsiderable size, and of the twenty stout and capacious vessels, whose magnitude impeded their progress, each was manned with no more than one hundred heavy-armed soldiers. This huge armada proceeded on a smooth sea, and with a gentle gale, towards the mouth of the Bosphorus, the surface of the strait was overshadowed, in the language of the Greeks, with a moving forest, and the same fatal night had been fixed by the Saracen chief for a general assault by sea and land. To allure the confidence of the enemy, the emperor had thrown aside the chain that usually guarded the entrance of the harbour, but while they hesitated whether they should seize the opportunity, or apprehend the snare, the ministers of destruction were at hand. The fireships of the Greeks were launched against them, the Arabs, their arms, and vessels, were involved in the same flames, the disorderly fugitives were dashed against each other or overwhelmed in the waves, and I no longer find a vestige of the fleet, that had threatened to extirpate the Roman name. A still more fatal and irreparable loss was that of the caliph Soliman, who died of an indigestion<sup>m</sup> in his camp near Kinnisrin or Chalcis in Syria, as he was preparing to lead against Constantinople the remaining forces of the cast. The brother of Moslemah was succeeded by a kinsman and an enemy, and the throne of an active and able prince was degraded by the useless and pernicious virtues of a bigot. While he started and satisfied the scruples of a blind conscience, the siege was continued through the winter by the neglect, rather than by the resolution, of the caliph Omar<sup>n</sup>. The winter proved uncommonly rigorous above a hundred days the ground was covered with deep snow, and the natives of the sultry climes of Egypt and Arabia lay torpid and almost lifeless in their frozen camp. They revived on the return of spring, a second effort had been made in their favour, and their distress was relieved by the arrival of two numerous fleets, laden with corn, and arms, and soldiers, the first from Alexandria, of four hundred transports and galleys, the second of three hundred and sixty vessels from the ports of Africa. But the Greek fires were again kindled, and if the destruction was less complete, it was owing to the experience which had taught the Moslems to remain at a safe distance, or to the perfidy of the Egyptian mariners, who deserted with their ships to the emperor of the Christians. The trade and navigation of the capital were restored, and the produce of the fisheries supplied the wants, and even the luxury, of the inhabitants. But the calamities of famine and disease were soon felt by the troops of Moslemah, and as the former was miserably assuaged, so the latter was dreadfully propagated, by the pernicious nutriment which hunger compelled them to extract from the most unclean or unnatural food. The spirit of conquest, and even of enthusiasm, was extinct: the Saracens could no longer straggle beyond their lines, either single or in small parties, without exposing themselves to the merciless retaliation of the Thracian peasants. An army of Bulgarians was attracted from the Danube by the gifts and promises of Leo, and these savage auxiliaries made some atonement for the evils which they had inflicted on the empire, by the defeat and slaughter of twenty-two thousand Asiatics. A report was dexterously scattered, that the Franks, the unknown nations of the Latin world, were arming by sea and land in the defence of the Christian cause, and their formidable aid was expected with far different sensations in the camp and city. At length, after a siege of thirteen months,<sup>o</sup> the hopeless Moslemah received from the caliph the welcome<sup>p</sup> permission of retreat. The march<sup>q</sup> of the Arabian cavalry over the Hellespont and through the provinces of Asia, was executed without delay or molestation, but an army of their brethren had been cut in pieces on the side of Bithynia, and the remains of the fleet were so repeatedly damaged by the tempest and fire, that only five galleys entered the port of Alexandria to relate the tale of their various and almost incredible disasters.<sup>r</sup>

In the two sieges, the deliverance of Constantinople may be chiefly ascribed to the novelty, the terrors, and the real efficacy of the Greek fire.<sup>s</sup> The important

<sup>m</sup> The caliph had emptied two baskets of eggs and of figs, which he swallowed alternately, and the repast was concluded with marrow and sugar. In one of his pilgrimages to Mecca, Soliman ate, of a single meal, seventy pomegranates, a kid six fowls, and a huge quantity of the grapes of Tayef. If the bill of fare be correct, we must admire the appetite rather than the luxury, of the sovereign of Ayr (Abulfeda, Annal. Moslem. p. 126).

<sup>n</sup> See the article of Omar Ben Abdalaziz, in the Bibliothèque Orientale, (p. 689, 690) preference says Limaein, (p. 91) religionem animi rebus suis mundanis. He was so desirous of being with God, that he would not have anointed his ear (his own saying,) to obtain a perfect cure of his last malady. The caliph had only one shirt and in an age of luxury, his annual expense was no more than two drachms (Abulpharagius, p. 131.) Haud diu gavisus eo principe fuit orbis Moslemus (Abulfeda p. 127).

<sup>o</sup> Both Nicephorus and Theophanes agree that the siege of Constantinople was raised the 15th of August, (A. D. 718) but as the former,

our best witness, affirms that it continued thirteen months, the latter must be mistaken in supposing that it began on the same day of the preceding year. I do not find that Pagi has remarked this inconsistency.

<sup>p</sup> In the second siege of Constantinople I have followed Nicephorus (Brev. p. 33—36) Theophanes, (Chronograph. p. 321—334) Cedrenus, (Compend. p. 449—452) Zonaras (tom. ii. p. 98—102.) Limaein (Hist. Saracen. p. 88) Abulfeda, (Annal. Moslem. p. 126) and Abulpharagius, (Dynast. p. 130) the most satisfactory of the Arabs.

<sup>q</sup> Our sure and indefatigable guide in the middle ages and Byzantine history, Charles du Fresnoy du Cange has treated in several places of the Greek fire and his collections leave few gleanings behind. See particularly Glossar. Med. et Infim. Græcitat. p. 1275 sub voce ἰπποβαλάντιον, υποφωγισα Glossar. Med. et Infim. Latinitat. Ignis Græcus Observations sur Villehardouin, p. 305, 306 Observations sur Joinville, p. 71, 72.

<sup>r</sup> Failure and retreat of the Saracens

<sup>s</sup> Invention and use of the Greek fire

secret of compounding and directing this artificial flame was imparted by Callinicus, a native of Heliopolis in Syria, who deserted from the service of the caliph to that of the emperor.<sup>r</sup> The skill of a chemist and engineer was equivalent to the succour of fleets and armies, and this discovery or improvement of the military art was fortunately reserved for the distressful period, when the degenerate Romans of the east were incapable of contending with the warlike enthusiasm and youthful vigour of the Saracens. The historian who presumes to analyze this extraordinary composition, should suspect his own ignorance and that of his Byzantine guides, so prone to the marvellous, so careless, and, in this instance, so jealous of the truth. From their obscure, and perhaps fallacious, hints, it should seem that the principal ingredient of the Greek fire was the naptha,<sup>s</sup> or liquid bitumen, a light, tenacious, and inflammable oil,<sup>t</sup> which springs from the earth, and catches fire as soon as it comes in contact with the air. The naptha was mingled, I know not by what methods or in what proportions, with sulphur and with the pitch that is extracted from ever-green firs.<sup>u</sup> From this mixture, which produced a thick smoke and a loud explosion, proceeded a fierce and obstinate flame, which not only rose in perpendicular ascent, but likewise burnt with equal vehemence in descent or lateral progress, instead of being extinguished, it was nourished and quickened, by the element of water, and sand, urine, or vinegar, were the only remedies that could damp the fury of this powerful agent, which was justly denominated by the Greeks, the liquid, or the maritime, fire. For the annoyance of the enemy, it was employed with equal effect, by sea and land, in battles or in sieges. It was either poured from the ramparts in large boilers, or launched in red-hot balls of stone and iron, or darted in arrows and javelins, twisted round with flax and tow, which had deeply imbibed the inflammable oil, sometimes it was deposited in fire-ships, the victims and instruments of a more ample revenge, and was most commonly blown through long tubes of copper, which were planted on the prow of a galley, and fancifully shaped into the mouths of savage monsters, that seemed to vomit a stream of liquid and consuming fire. This important art was preserved at Constantinople, as the palladium of the state. The galleys and artillery might occasionally be lent to the allies of Rome, but the composition of the Greek fire was concealed with the most jealous scruple, and the terror of the enemies was increased and prolonged by their ignorance and surprise. In the treatise of the administration of the empire, the royal author<sup>x</sup> suggests the answers and excuses that might best elude the indiscreet curiosity and importunate demands of the barbarians. They should be told that the mystery of the Greek fire had been revealed by an angel to the first and greatest of the Constantines, with a sacred injunction, that this gift of Heaven, this peculiar blessing of the Romans, should never be communicated to any foreign nation that the prince and subject were alike bound to religious silence under the temporal and spiritual penalties of treason and sacrilege, and that the impious attempt would provoke the sudden and supernatural vengeance of the God of the christians. By these precautions, the secret was confined, above four hundred years, to the Romans of the east, and, at the end of the eleventh century, the Pisans, to whom every sea and every art were familiar, suffered the effects, without understanding the composition, of the Greek fire. It was at length either discovered or stolen by the Mahometans, and, in the holy wars of Syria and Egypt, they retorted an invention, contrived against themselves, on the heads of the christians. A knight, who despised the swords and lances of the Saracens, relates, with heartfelt sincerity, his own fears, and those of his companions, at the sight and sound of the mischievous engine that discharged a torrent of the Greek fire, the feu Gregeois, as it is styled by the more early of the French writers. It came flying through the air, says Joinville,<sup>y</sup> like a winged long-tailed dragon, about the thickness of a hog's-head, with the report of thunder and the velocity of lightning, and the darkness of the night was dispelled by this deadly illumination. The use of the Greek, or, as it might now be called, of the Saracen, fire, was continued to the middle of the fourteenth century,<sup>z</sup> when the scientific or casual compound

<sup>r</sup> Theophrastus styles him ἀρχιτεκνῶν (p. 205). Cedrenus (p. 477) brings this artist from (the ruins of) Heliopolis in Egypt, and chemistry was indeed the peculiar science of the Egyptians.

<sup>s</sup> The naphtia the oleum macedonianum of the history of Jerusalem, (Gest Dei per Francos, p. 1167) the oriental fountain of James de Vitry, (l. iii c. 84) is introduced on slight evidence and strong probability. Cinnamus (l. vi p. 105) calls the Greek fire πῦρ ἡνδίκον and the naphtia is known to abound between the Tigris and the Caspian Sea. According to Pliny, (Hist. Natur. ii. 109) it was subservient to the revenge of Medea and in either etymology the ελαιον ἡνδικον, or ἡνδικον (Procop. de Bell. Gothic. l. iv c. 11) may fairly signify this liquid bitumen.

<sup>t</sup> On the different sorts of oils and bitumens, see Dr. Watson's (the present Bishop of Lindisfarne) Chemical Essays vol. iii. essay i. a classic book the best advised to inform the taste and knowledge of chemistry. The less perfect ideas of the ancients may be found in Strabo (Geograph. l. xvi p. 1078) and Pliny (Hist. Natur. ii. 108, 109). ἡνικ (Naphtha) ἡνικ, na cognatio est ἡνικ, translucetque prolium in eam indeclinabile visum. Of our travellers I am best pleased with Otter, (tom. i. p. 151-158).

<sup>u</sup> Anna Comnena has partly drawn aside the curtain. Ἀπο τῆς πενήτης, καὶ ἀλῶν τῶν τοιαύτων δειδρὸν αἰσθάλων συναγεται διακρὸν ακαύτων. Τοῦτο μετὰ θεῖον τριβομένον ἐμβαλλεται εἰς αὐλίσκον καλαμῶν καὶ ἐμφύεται παρὰ τὸν ταῖς ὀφθαλμοῦ λαβρῶν καὶ συνεχεῖ πνεύματι (Alexiad. l. xiii p. 383). Elsewhere (l. xi p. 336) she mentions

the property of burning κατὰ τὸ πρᾶν καὶ ἐφ' ἑκάτερον. Leo in the nineteenth chapter of his Tactics, (Opera Mensei, tom. vi p. 843 edit. Lami Florent. 1745) speaks of the new invention of πῦρ μετὰ βροντῆ καὶ καπνοῦ. These are genuine and imperial testimonies.

<sup>x</sup> Constantin Porphyrogenitus de Administrat. Imperii, c. xiii p. 64 G.

<sup>y</sup> Histoire de St. Louis, p. 39 Paris 1688 p. 44 Paris, de l'Imprimerie Royale, 1761. The former of these editions is precious for the observations of Ducange, the latter for the pure and original text of Joinville. We must have recourse to that text to discover, that the feu Gregeois was shot with a pole or javelin, from an engine that acted like a sling.

<sup>z</sup> The vanity, or envy, of shaming the established property of Fame, has tempted some moderns to carry gunpowder above the fourteenth, (see Sir William Temple, Dulens, &c.) and the Greek fire above the seventh century, (see the Salute du President des Broches, tom. ii p. 381). But their evidence, which precedes the vulgar era of the invention, is seldom clear or satisfactory, and subsequent writers may be suspected of fraud or credulity. In the earliest sieges some combusibles of oil and sulphur have been used, and the Greek fire has some of the first a passage of Procopius (de Bell. Gothic. l. iv c. 11) for 1349 1312 1332 Biblioth. Arab. Hisp. tom. ii p. 6-8) are the most difficult to elude.

of nitre, sulphur, and charecoal, effected a new revolution in the art of war and the history of mankind.

Constantinople and the Greek fire might exclude the Arabs from the eastern entrance of Europe, but in the west, on the side of the Pyrenees, the provinces of Gaul were threatened and invaded by the conquerors of Spain.<sup>b</sup> The decline of the French monarchy invited the attack of these insatiate fanatics. The descendants of Clovis had lost the inheritance of his martial and ferocious spirit, and their misfortune or demerit has affixed the epithet of lazy to the last kings of the Merovingian race.<sup>c</sup> They ascended the throne without power, and sunk into the grave without a name. A country palace, in the neighbourhood of Compiègne,<sup>d</sup> was allotted for their residence or prison: but each year, in the month of March or May, they were conducted in a waggon drawn by oxen to the assembly of the Franks, to give audience to foreign ambassadors, and to ratify the acts of the mayor of the palace. That domestic officer was become the minister of the nation and the master of the prince. A public employment was converted into the patrimony of a private family: the elder Pepin left a king of mature years under the guardianship of his own widow and her child, and these feeble regents were forcibly dispossessed by the most active of his bastards. A government, half savage and half corrupt, was almost dissolved, and the tributary dukes, the provincial counts, and the territorial lords, were tempted to despise the weakness of the monarch, and to imitate the ambition of the mayor. Among these independent chiefs, one of the boldest and most successful was Eudes, duke of Aquitaine, who, in the southern provinces of Gaul, usurped the authority, and even the title, of king. The Goths, the Gascons, and the Franks, assembled under the standard of this christian hero: he repelled the first invasion of the Saracens, and Zama, lieutenant of the caliph, lost his army and his life under the walls of Thoulouse. The ambition of his successors was stimulated by revenge, they repassed the Pyrenees with the means and the resolution of conquest. The advantageous situation which had recommended Narbonne<sup>e</sup> as the first Roman colony, was again chosen by the Moslems: they claimed the province of Septemania or Languedoc as a just dependence of the Spanish monarchy: the vineyards of Gascony and the city of Bourdeaux were possessed by the sovereign of Damascus and Samarcand, and the south of France, from the mouth of the Garonne to that of the Rhône, assumed the manners and religion of Arabia.

But these narrow limits were scorned by the spirit of Abdalrahman, or Abderame, who had been restored by the caliph Hashem to the wishes of the soldiers and people of Spain. That veteran and daring commander adjudged to the obedience of the prophet whatever yet remained of France or of Europe, and prepared to execute the sentence, at the head of a formidable host, in the full confidence of surmounting all opposition either of nature or of man. His first care was to suppress a domestic rebel, who commanded the most important passes of the Pyrenees. Munuza, a Moorish chief, had accepted the alliance of the duke of Aquitaine, and Eudes, from a motive of private or public interest, devoted his beautiful daughter to the embraces of the African misbeliever. But the strongest fortresses of Cerdagne were invested by a superior force, the rebel was overtaken and slain in the mountains, and his widow was sent a captive to Damascus, to gratify the desires, or more probably the vanity, of the commander of the faithful. From the Pyrenees, Abderame proceeded without delay to the passage of the Rhône and the siege of Arles. An army of christians attempted the relief of the city: the tombs of their leaders were yet visible in the thirteenth century, and many thousands of their dead bodies were carried down the rapid stream into the Mediterranean sea. The arms of Abderame were not less successful on the side of the ocean. He passed without opposition the Garonne and Dordogne, which unite their waters in the gulf of Bourdeaux, but he found, beyond those rivers, the camp of the intrepid Eudes, who had formed a second army, and sustained a second defeat, so fatal to the christians, that, according to their sad confession, God alone could reckon the number of the slain. The victorious Saracen overran the provinces of Aquitaine, whose Gallic names are disguised, rather than lost, in the modern appellations of Perigord, Saintonge, and Poitou: his standards were planted on the walls, or at least before the gates, of Tours and of Sens, and his detachments overspread the kingdom of Burgundy as far as the well known cities of Lyons and Besançon. The memory of these devastations, for Abderame did not spare the country or the people, was long preserved by tradition, and

<sup>a</sup> That extraordinary man, Friar Bacon, reveals two of the ingredients sulphur and sulphur, and conceals the third in a sentence of mysterious gibberish, as if he dreaded the consequences of his own discovery (Bio., Brit. vol. i. p. 430 new edition).

<sup>b</sup> For the invasion of France and the defeat of the Arabs by Charles Martel, see the Historia Arabum (c. 11—14) of Roderic Ximenes, archbishop of Toledo, who had before him the christian chronicle of Isidore Pacensis, and the Mahometan history of Nuviri. The Moslems are silent or concise in the account of their losses: but M. Cardonne (tom. i. p. 129—131) has given a pure and simple account of all that he could collect from Ibn Halkhan Hidjazi, and an anonymous writer. The texts of the chronicles of France and lives of saints are inserted in the Collection of Bouquet, (tom. iii.) and the Annals of Pepin, who (tom. iii. under the proper years) has restored the chronology, which is anticipated six years in the Annals of Baronius. The Dictionary of Bayle (Abderame and Munuza) has more merit for lively reflection than original research.

<sup>c</sup> Eginhart de Vita Caroli Magni c. ii. p. 13—18 edit Schirnk, Utrecht 1711. Some modern critics accuse the minister of Charles Magné of exaggerating the weakness of the Merovingians; but the general outline is just and the French reader will for ever repeat the beautiful lines of Boileau's Lutrin.

<sup>d</sup> Mamaccœ, on the Oise between Compiègne and Noyon which Eginhart calls perperit reditū villam (see the notes and the map of ancient France for Dom Bouquet's Collection). Compendium, or Compiègne, was a palace of more dignity, (Hadrin Valesi Nothia Galliarum p. 152) and that rough philosopher the Abbé Galliani (Dialogues sur le Commerce des Bleds), may truly affirm, that it was the residence of the rois très chrétiens et très élevés.

<sup>e</sup> Even before that colony, A. U. C. 630 (Velleius Paterculus i. 15) in the time of Polybius (Hist. i. iii. p. 265 edit Gronov.) Narbonne was a Celtic town of the first eminence and one of the most northern places of the known world (D'Anville, Notice de l'Ancienne Gaule, p. 473).

the invasion of France by the Moors or Mahometans, affords the ground-work of those fables, which have been so wildly disfigured in the romances of chivalry, and so elegantly adorned by the Italian muse. In the decline of society and art, the deserted cities could supply a slender booty to the Saracens, their richest spoil was found in the churches and monasteries, which they stripped of their ornaments and delivered to the flames and the tutelary saints, both Hilary of Poitiers and Martin of Tours, forgot their miraculous powers in the defence of their own sepulchres.<sup>f</sup> A victorious line of march had been prolonged above a thousand miles from the rock of Gibraltar to the banks of the Loire, the repetition of an equal space would have carried the Saracens to the confines of Poland and the Highlands of Scotland: the Rhine is not more impassable than the Nile or Euphrates, and the Arabian fleet might have sailed without a naval combat into the mouth of the Thames. Perhaps the interpretation of the Koran would now be taught in the schools of Oxford, and her pulpits might demonstrate to a circumcised people the sanctity and truth of the revelation of Mahomet.<sup>g</sup>

Defeat of the Saracens by Charles Martel,
A. D. 732

From such calamities was Christendom delivered by the genius and fortune of one man. Charles, the illegitimate son of the elder Pepin, was content with the titles of mayor or duke of the Franks, but he deserved to become the father of a line of kings. In a laborious administration of twenty-four years, he restored and supported the dignity of the throne, and the rebels of Germany and Gaul were successively crushed by the activity of a warrior, who, in the same campaign, could display his banner on the Elbe, the Rhone, and the shores of the ocean. In the public danger, he was summoned by the voice of his country, and his rival, the duke of Aquitaine, was reduced to appear among the fugitives and suppliants. "Alas!" exclaimed the Franks, "what a misfortune! what an indignity! We have long heard of the name and conquests of the Arabs: we were apprehensive of their attack from the east, they have now conquered Spain, and invade our country on the side of the west. Yet their numbers, and (since they have no buckler) their arms, are inferior to our own." "If you follow my advice," replied the prudent mayor of the palace, "you will not interrupt their march, nor precipitate your attack. They are like a torrent, which it is dangerous to stem in its career. The thirst of riches and the consciousness of success, redouble their valour, and valour is of more avail than arms or numbers. Be patient till they have loaded themselves with the encumbrance of wealth. The possession of wealth

<sup>f</sup> With regard to the sanctuary of St. Martin of Tours, Rodericus Amicus accuses the Saracens of the deed. Turonis civitatem, ecclesiam et palatium vastatione et incendio simili diruit et consumpsit. The continuator of Fredegarus imputes to them no more than the intention. Ad domum beatissimi Martini evertendam destinant. Al. Carolus, &c. The French annals were more jealous of the honour of the saint.
<sup>g</sup> I do sincerely doubt whether the Oxford march would have produced a volume of controversy so elegant and ingenious as the sermons lately preached by Mr. White, the Arabian professor, at Mr. Bampton's lecture. His observations on the character and religion of Mahomet,

will divide their counsels and assure your victory." This subtle policy is perhaps a refinement of the Arabian writers, and the situation of Charles will suggest a more narrow and selfish motive of procrastination, the secret desire of humbling the pride, and wasting the provinces, of the rebel duke of Aquitaine. It is yet more probable, that the delays of Charles were inevitable and reluctant. A standing army was unknown under the first and second race: more than half the kingdom was now in the hands of the Saracens: according to their respective situation, the Franks of Neustria and Austrasia were too conscious or too careless of the impending danger, and the voluntary aids of the Gepidae and Germans were separated by a long interval from the standard of the christian general. No sooner had he collected his forces, than he sought and found the enemy in the centre of France, between Tours and Poitiers. His well-conducted march was covered by a range of hills, and Abderame appears to have been surprised by his unexpected presence. The nations of Asia, Africa, and Europe, advanced with equal ardour to an encounter which would change the history of the world. In the six first days of desultory combat, the horsemen and archers of the east maintained their advantage: but in the closer onset of the seventh day, the orientals were oppressed by the strength and stature of the Germans, who, with stout hearts and iron hands,<sup>h</sup> asserted the civil and religious freedom of their posterity. The epithet of Martel, the Hammer, which has been added to the name of Charles, is expressive of his weighty and irresistible strokes. The valour of Eudes was excited by resentment and emulation, and their companions, in the eye of history, are the true peers and paladins of French chivalry. After a bloody field, in which Abderame was slain, the Saracens, in the close of the evening, retired to their camp. In the disorder and despair of the night, the various tribes of Yemen and Damascus, of Africa and Spain, were provoked to turn their arms against each other: the remains of their host were suddenly dissolved, and each man consulted his safety by a hasty and separate retreat. At the dawn of day, the stillness of an hostile camp was suspected by the victorious christians: on the report of their spies, they ventured to explore the riches of the vacant tents, but, if we except some celebrated relics, a small portion of the spoil was restored to the innocent and lawful owners. The joyful tidings were soon diffused over the catholic world, and the monks of Italy could affirm and believe that three hundred and fifty, or three hundred and seventy-five, thousand of the Mahometans had been crushed by the hammer of Charles,<sup>i</sup>

are always adapted to his argument and generally founded in truth and reason. He sustains the part of a lively and eloquent advocate and sometimes rises to the merit of an historian and philosopher.
<sup>h</sup> Gens Austriacæ membris præ eminentibus valida et gens Germana corde et corpore præstantissima, quasi in ictu oculi, manu ferrea, et pectore ardido Arabes extinxerunt. (Rodericus Toletanus c. xii.)
<sup>i</sup> These numbers are stated by Paul Warnefrid, the deacon of Aquileia, (de Gestis Langobardorum l. vi. p. 92.) idit. Grol. and Anastasius the librarian of the Roman church, (in Vit. Gregorii II.) who tells a miraculous story of three consecrated sponges, which rendered invulnerable

while no more than fifteen hundred christians were slain in the field of Tours. But this incredible tale is sufficiently disproved by the caution of the French general, who apprehended the snares and accidents of a pursuit, and dismissed his German allies to their native forests. The inactivity of a conqueror betrays the loss of strength and blood, and the most cruel execution is inflicted, not in the ranks of battle, but on the backs of a flying enemy. Yet the

They retreat before the Franks victory of the Franks was complete and final, Aquitaine was recovered by the arms of Eudes, the Arabs never resumed the conquest of Gaul, and they were soon driven beyond the Pyrenees by Charles Martel and his valiant race.<sup>k</sup> It might have been expected that the saviour of Christendom would have been canonized, or at least applauded, by the gratitude of the clergy, who are indebted to his sword for their present existence. But in the public distress, the mayor of the palace had been compelled to apply the relics, or at least the revenues, of the bishops and abbots, to the relief of the state and the reward of the soldiers. His merits were forgotten, his sacrilege alone was remembered, and, in an epistle to a Carlovingian prince, a Gallic synod presumes to declare that his ancestor was damned, that on the opening of his tomb, the spectators were affrighted by a smell of fire and the aspect of a horrid dragon, and that a saint of the times was indulged with a pleasant vision of the soul and body of Charles Martel, burning, to all eternity, in the abyss of hell.<sup>l</sup>

Elevation of the Abbasides,
A. D. 746-750

The loss of an army, or a province, in the western world, was less painful to the court of Damascus, than the rise and progress of a domestic competitor. Except among the Syrians, the caliphs of the house of Ommiyah had never been the objects of the public favour. The life of Mahomet recorded their perseverance in idolatry and rebellion; their conversion had been reluctant, their elevation irregular and factious, and their throne was cemented with the most holy and noble blood of Arabia. The best of their race, the pious Omar, was dissatisfied with his own title, then personal virtues were insufficient to justify a departure from the order of succession, and the eyes and wishes of the faithful were turned towards the line of Hashem and the kindred of the apostle of God. Of these the Fatimites were either rash or pusillanimous, but the descendants of Abbas cherished, with courage and discretion, the hopes of their rising fortunes. From an obscure residence in Syria, they secretly despatched their agents and missionaries, who preached in the eastern provinces their hereditary indefeasible right, and Mohammed, the son of Ali, the son of Abdallah, the son of Abbas, the uncle of the prophet, gave audience to the deputies of Chorasan, and accepted their free gift of four hundred thousand pieces of gold. After the death of Mohammed, the oath of allegiance was administered in the name of his son Ibrahim to a numerous band of votaries, who expected only a signal and a leader, and the governor of Chorasan continued to deplore his fruitless admonitions and the deadly slumber of the caliphs of Damaseus, till he himself, with all his adherents, was driven from the city and palace of Meru, by the rebellious arms of Abu Moslem.<sup>m</sup> That maker of kings, the author, as he is named, of the call of the Abbassides, was at length rewarded for his presumption of merit with the usual gratitude of courts. A mean, perhaps a foreign, extraction could not repress the aspiring energy of Abu Moslem. Jealous of his wives, liberal of his wealth, prodigal of his own blood and of that of others, he could boast with pleasure, and possibly with truth, that he had destroyed six hundred thousand of his enemies, and such was the intrepid gravity of his mind and countenance, that he was never seen to smile except on a day of battle. In the visible separation of parties the green was consecrated to the Fatimites, the Ommiades were distinguished by the white, and the black, as the most adverse, was naturally adopted by the Abbassides. Their turbans and garments were stained with that gloomy colour: two black standards, on pike-staves nine cubits long, were borne aloft in the van of Abu Moslem, and their allegorical names of the night and the shadow obscurely represented the indissoluble union and perpetual succession of the line of Hashem. From the Indus to the Euphrates the east was convulsed by the quarrel of the white and the black factions, the Abbassides were most frequently victorious, but their public success was clouded by the personal misfortune of their chief. The court of Damaseus, awakening from a long slumber, resolved to prevent the pilgrimage of Mecca, which Ibrahim had undertaken with a splendid retinue, to recommend himself at once to the favour of the prophet and of the people. A detachment of cavalry intercepted his march and arrested his person, and the unhappy Ibrahim, snatched away from the promise of untasted royalty, expired in iron fetters in the dungeons of Haran. His two younger brothers, Saffah and Almansor, eluded the search of the tyrant, and lay concealed at Cufa, till the zeal of the people and the approach of his eastern friends allowed them to expose their persons to the impatient public. On Friday, in the

the French soldiers among whom they had been shared. It should seem, that in his letters to the Pope, Eudes usurped the honour of the victory for which he was chastised by the French annalists, who, with equal falsehood, accuse him of inviting the Saracens.

<sup>k</sup> Narbonne, and the rest of Septimania, was recovered by Pepin the son of Charles Martel A. D. 755 (Pagi Critien, tom. iii. p. 300). Thirty-seven years afterwards it was pillaged by a sudden inroad of the Arabs, who employed the captives in the construction of the mosque of Cordova (De Guignes, Hist. des Huns tom. i. p. 34).

<sup>l</sup> This pastoral letter, addressed to Lewis the Germanic, the grandson of Charlemagne, and most probably composed by the pen of the artful

Hincmar is dated in the year 858, and signed by the bishops of the provinces of Rheims, and Rouen (Baronius, Annal. Eccles. A. D. 741. Fleury, Hist. Eccles. tom. x. p. 514-516). Yet Baronius himself, and the French critics reject with contempt this episcopal fiction.

<sup>m</sup> The steed and the saddle which had carried any of his wives were instantly killed or burnt, lest they should be afterwards mounted by a male. Twelve hundred mules or camels were required for his kitchen furniture, and the daily consumption amounted to three thousand oxen, a hundred sheep, besides oxen, poultry, &c. (Abulpharagius Hist. Dynast. p. 140).

dress of a caliph, in the colours of the sect, Saffah proceeded with religious and military pomp to the mosch ascending the pulpit, he prayed and preached as the lawful successor of Mahomet, and, after his departure, his kinsmen bound a willing people by an oath of fidelity. But it was on the banks of the Zab, and not in the mosch of Cufa, that this important controversy was determined. Every advantage appeared to be on the side of the white faction: the authority of established government, an army of an hundred and twenty thousand soldiers, against a sixth part of that number, and the presence and merit of the caliph Mervan, the fourteenth and last of the house of Ommiyah. Before his accession to the throne he had deserved, by his Georgian warfare, the honourable epithet of the ass of Mesopotamia,<sup>a</sup> and he might have been ranked among the greatest princes, had not, says Abulfeda, the eternal order decreed that moment for the ruin of his family, a decree against which all human prudence and fortitude must struggle in vain. The orders of Mervan were mistaken, or disobeyed: the return of his horse, from which he had dismounted on a necessary occasion, impressed the belief of his death: and the enthusiasm of the black squadrons was ably conducted by Abdallah, the uncle of his competitor. After an irretrievable defeat, the caliph escaped to Mosul, but the colours of the Abbassides were displayed from the rampart: he suddenly repassed the Tigris, cast a melancholy look on his palace of Haran, crossed the Euphrates, abandoned the fortifications of Damascus, and, without halting in Palestine, pitched his last and fatal camp at Busir on the banks of the Nile.<sup>b</sup> His speed was urged by the incessant diligence of Abdallah, who in every step of the pursuit acquired strength and reputation: the remains of the white faction were finally vanquished in Egypt, and the lance, which terminated the life and anxiety of Mervan, was not less welcome perhaps to the unfortunate than to the victorious chief. The merciless inquisition of the conqueror eradicated the most distant branches of the hostile race: their bones were scattered, their memory was accursed, and the martyrdom of Hossein was abundantly revenged on the posterity of his tyrants. Four score of the Ommiades, who had yielded to the faith or clemency of their foes, were invited to a banquet at Damascus. The laws of hospitality were violated by a promiscuous massacre: the board was spread over their fallen bodies, and the festivity of

<sup>a</sup> Al Heman. He had been governor of Mesopotamia, and the Arabic proverb praises the courage of that warlike breed of asses who never fly from an enemy. The surname of Mervan may justify the comparison of Homer, (Iliad, l. 537, &c.) and both will silence the moderns, who consider the ass as a stupid and ignoble emblem (D'Hierbelot Bibliol. Orient. p. 558).

<sup>b</sup> Four several places all in Egypt, bore the name of Busir or Busiris so famous in Greek fable. The first, where Mervan was slain, was to the west of the Nile in the province of Fium, or Arsinoe, the second in the Delta in the Sebennytic nome the third, near the pyramids: the fourth, which was destroyed by Dioclesian (see above, p. 145) in the Thebas. I shall here transcribe a note of the learned Urbis Busiri Coptique armis summissæ christianis, libertatemque de religione sentiendi defendisse, sed succubuisse quo in bello Coptus et Busiris diruta, et circa Ennam magna strages edita. Bellum narrat sed causam belli ignorant scriptores Byzantini, alioqui Coptum et the guests was enlivened by the music of their dying groans. By the event of the civil war the dynasty of the Abbassides was firmly established, but the Christians only could triumph in the mutual hatred and common loss of the disciples of Mahomet.<sup>c</sup>

Yet the thousands who were swept away by the sword of war might have been speedily retrieved in the succeeding generation, if the consequences of the revolution had not tended to dissolve the power and unity of the empire of the Saracens. In the proscription of the Ommiades, a royal youth of the name of Abdalrahman alone escaped the rage of his enemies, who hunted the wandering exile from the banks of the Euphrates to the valleys of mount Atlas. His presence in the neighbourhood of Spain revived the zeal of the white faction. The name and cause of the Abbassides had been first vindicated by the Persians, the west had been pure from civil arms, and the servants of the abdicated family still held, by a precarious tenure, the inheritance of their lands and the offices of government. Strongly prompted by gratitude, indignation, and fear, they invited the grandson of the caliph Hashem to ascend the throne of his ancestors, and, in his desperate condition, the extremes of rashness and prudence were almost the same. The acclamations of the people saluted his landing on the coast of Andalusia, and, after a successful struggle, Abdalrahman established the throne of Cordova, and was the father of the Ommiades of Spain, who reigned above two hundred and fifty years from the Atlantic to the Pyrenees.<sup>d</sup> He slew in battle a lieutenant of the Abbassides, who had invaded his dominions with a fleet and army: the head of Ala, in salt and camphire, was suspended by a daring messenger before the palace of Mecca, and the caliph Almansor rejoiced in his safety, that he was removed by seas and lands from such a formidable adversary. Their mutual designs or declarations of offensive war evaporated without effect, but instead of opening a door to the conquest of Europe, Spain was dis severed from the trunk of the monarchy, engaged in perpetual hostility with the east, and inclined to peace and friendship with the christian sovereigns of Constantinople and France. The example of the Om-miades was imitated by the real or fictitious progeny of Ali, the Edrissites of Mauritania, and the more powerful Fatimites of Africa and Egypt. In the tenth century, the chair of Mahomet was disputed by three caliphs or commanders

Revolt of Spain, A D 755

Triple division of the caliphate

Busirum non rebellasse dictum, sed causam christianorum susceptum (Not 211 p. 100.) For the geography of the four Busirs, see Abulfeda, (Descript. Egypt. p. 9 vers Michaelis Gottingæ, 1776 in quarto) Michaelis (Not 122—127 p. 58—63) and D'Anville (Memoire sur l'Egypte, p. 85 147 205).

<sup>c</sup> See Abulfeda, (Annal. Moslem. p. 136—145) Entyehius, (Annal. tom. ii p. 392 vers Pocock), Limaen (Hist. Saracen. p. 109—121) Abulpharagius, (Hist. Dynast. p. 134—140) Roderic of Toledo (Hist. Arabum, c. 18 p. 33) Theophanes, (Chronograph. p. 356, 357) who speaks of the Abbassides under the names of Καρααγίται and Μαυροφάροι, and the Bibliothèque de D'Hierbelot, in the articles of Ommiades, Abdassides Marwan, Ibrahim, Saffah, Abou Moslem.

<sup>d</sup> For the revolution of Spain, consult Roderic of Toledo, (c. xviii p. 34, &c.) the Bibliotheca Arabico Hispana, (tom. ii p. 30 198) and Cardonne (Hist. de l'Afrique et de l'Espagne, tom. i p. 180—197 205 272 323, &c.)

of the faithful, who reigned at Bagdad, Cairoan, and Cordova, excommunicated each other, and agreed only in a principle of discord, that a sectary is more odious and criminal than an unbeliever *

Magnificence of the caliph*
A D 750-860

Mecca was the patrimony of the line of Hashem, yet the Abbassides were never tempted to reside either in the birth-place or the city of the prophet. Damascus was disgraced by the choice, and polluted with the blood, of the Omniades, and, after some hesitation, Almansor, the brother and successor of Saffah, laid the foundations of Bagdad,<sup>a</sup> the imperial seat of his posterity during a reign of five hundred years.<sup>b</sup> The chosen spot is on the eastern bank of the Tigris, about fifteen miles above the ruins of Modain: the double wall was of a circular form, and such was the rapid increase of a capital, now dwindled to a provincial town, that the funeral of a popular saint might be attended by eight hundred thousand men and sixty thousand women of Bagdad and the adjacent villages. In this city of peace,<sup>c</sup> amidst the riches of the east, the Abbassides soon disdained the abstinence and frugality of the first caliphs, and aspired to emulate the magnificence of the Persian kings. After his wars and buildings, Almansor left behind him in gold and silver about thirty millions sterling,<sup>d</sup> and this treasure was exhausted in a few years by the vices or virtues of his children. His son Mahadi, in a single pilgrimage to Mecca, expended six millions of dinars of gold. A pious and charitable motive may sanctify the foundation of cisterns and caravanseras, which he distributed along a measured road of seven hundred miles, but his train of camels, laden with snow, could serve only to astonish the natives of Arabia, and to refresh the fruits and liquors of the royal banquet.<sup>e</sup> The courtiers would surely praise the liberality of his grandson Almamon, who gave away four-fifths of the income of a province, a sum of two millions four hundred thousand gold dinars, before he drew his foot from the stirrup. At the nuptials of the same prince, a thousand pearls of the largest size were showered on the head of the bride,<sup>f</sup> and a lottery of lands and houses displayed the capricious bounty of fortune. The glories of the court were brightened, rather than impaired, in the decline of the empire, and a Greek ambassador might admire, or pity, the magnificence of the feeble Moctader. "The caliph's whole army," says the historian Abulfeda, "both horse and foot, was under arms, which together made a body of one hundred and sixty thousand men. His state-officers, the favourite slaves, stood near him in splendid apparel, their belts glittering with gold and gems. Near them were seven thousand eunuchs, four thousand of them white, the remainder black. The porters or door-keepers were in number seven hundred. Barges and boats, with the most superb decorations, were seen swimming upon the Tigris. Nor was the palace itself less splendid, in which were hung up thirty-eight thousand pieces of tapestry, twelve thousand five hundred of which were of silk embroidered with gold. The carpets on the floor were twenty-two thousand. A hundred lions were brought out, with a keeper to each lion.<sup>g</sup> Among the other spectacles of rare and stupendous luxury, was a tree of gold and silver spreading into eighteen large branches, on which, and on the lesser boughs, sat a variety of birds made of the same precious metals, as well as the leaves of the tree. While the machinery affected spontaneous motions, the several birds warbled their natural harmony. Through this scene of magnificence, the Greek ambassador was led by the vizir to the foot of the caliph's throne."<sup>h</sup> In the west, the Omniades of Spain supported, with equal pomp, the title of commander of the faithful. Three miles from Cordova, in honour of his favourite sultana, the third and greatest of the Abdalrahmans constructed the city, palace, and gardens of Zehra. Twenty-five years, and above three millions sterling, were employed by the founder. His liberal taste invited the artists of Constantinople, the most skillful sculptors and architects of the age, and the buildings were sustained or adorned by twelve hundred columns of Spanish and African, of Greek and Italian, marble. The hall of audience was incrustated with gold and pearls, and a great bason in the centre was surrounded with the curious and costly figures of birds and quadrupeds. In a lofty pavilion of the gardens, one of these basins and fountains, so delightful in a sultry climate, was replenished not with water, but with the purest quick-

* I shall not stop to refute the strange errors and fancies of Sir William Temple (his Works vol. iii. p. 371-374. octavo edition,) and Voltaire, (Histoire Generale, c. xxviii. tom. ii. p. 124. 125. edition de Lausanne) concerning the division of the Saracen empire. The mistakes of Voltaire proceeded from the want of knowledge or reflection, but Sir William was deceived by a Spanish impostor, who has framed an apocryphal history of the conquest of Spain by the Arabs.

<sup>a</sup> The geographer D'Anville, (l'Euphrate et le Tigre p. 121-123) and the orientalist D'Herbelot, (Bibliothèque, p. 167-168) may suffice for the knowledge of Bagdad. Our travellers, Pietro della Valle (tom. i. p. 688-698) Tavernier, (tom. i. p. 230-238) Thevenot, (part. ii. p. 209-212) Otter (tom. i. p. 162-163) and Niebuhr, (Voyage en Arabie, tom. ii. p. 239-271) have seen only its decay and the Arabian geographer, (p. 204) and the travelling Jew, Benjamin of Tudela, (Itinerarium, p. 112-123. in Const. l'Empereur apud Elzevir 1633) are the only writers of my acquaintance, who have known Bagdad under the reign of the Abbassides.

<sup>b</sup> The foundations of Bagdad were laid A H 115 A D 762. Mosta'sem the last of the Abbassides was taken and put to death by the Tartars A H 656 A D 1258 the 20th of February.

<sup>c</sup> Medinet al Salem, Dar al Salem. Urbis pairs, or as is more neatly compounded by the Byzantine writers Ἐρηνοπόλις (Irenopolis).<sup>d</sup> There is some dispute concerning the etymology of Bagdad, but the first syllable is allowed to signify a garden in the Persian tongue, the garden of David a christian hermit, whose cell had been the only habitation on the spot.

<sup>e</sup> Reliquit in arenis cententes milia mille lateres, et quater et vires milies mille aureos anrens. Elmacin Hist. Sarac. p. 126. "I have reckoned the gold pieces at eight shillings, and the proportion to the silver as twelve to one. But I will never answer for the numbers of Lrpeous, and the Latins are scarcely above the savages in the language of arithmetic."

<sup>f</sup> D'Herbelot p. 530. Abulfeda, p. 154. Nivem Meccam apportavit, remissit aut nunquam aut rursus meam.

<sup>g</sup> Abulfeda p. 184-189 describes the splendour and liberality of Almamon. Milton has alluded to this oriental custom.

—Or where the gorgeous east with richest hand, Showers on her kings Barbaric pearls and gold.

I have used the modern word lottery, to express the missilia of the Roman emperors, which entitled to some prize the person who caught them as they were thrown among the crowd.

<sup>h</sup> When Bell of Antimony (Travels vol. i. p. 99) accompanied the Russian ambassador to the audience of the unfortunate Shih Hussein of Persia, two lions were introduced to denote the power of the king over the fiercest animals.

<sup>i</sup> Abulfeda p. 237. D'Herbelot p. 509. This embassy was received at Bagdad, A H 305 A D 917. In the passage of Abulfeda, I have used, with some variations, the English translation of the learned and